In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet pro vides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Pro claiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5 Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C A., to the amount of 25 cents.

THE HOME.

A WORD ABOUT WORDS.

Ah me! these terrible tongues of ours!
Are we half aware of their mighty powers?
Do we ever trouble our heads at all
Where the jest may strike or the hit may fall?
The latest chirp of that "little bird,"
That spicy story "you must have heard"—
We jerk them away in our gossip rash.
What fames have been blasted and broken,
What pestilent sinks been stirred,
By a word in lightness spoken,
By only an idle word!

A sneer—a shrug—a whisper low—
They are poisoned shafts from an ambushed bow
Shot by the coward, the fool, the knave,
They pierce the mail of the great and brave.
Vain is the buckler of wisdom or pride
To turn the pitiless point aside;
The lip may curl with careless smile,
But the heart drips blood—drips blood the while.
Ah me! what hearts have been broken,
What rivers of blood been stirred,
By a word in malice spoken,
Only by a bitter word.

A kindly word and a tender tone—
To only God is their virtue known!
They can lift from the dust the abject head,
They can turn a foe to a friend instead;
The heart close-barred with passion and pride
Will fling at their knock its portals wide,
And the hate that blights and the scorn that sears
Will melt in the fountain of childlike tears.
What ice-bound griefs have been broken,
What rivers of love been stirred,
By a word in kindness spoken,
By only a gentle word!

PAGAN WORSHIP IN A CHRISTIAN LAND.

Come with me as we enter the second-story of a large house on Pine street wholly outside of China-town. The temple proper is a hall or very large room gorgeously and gaudily decorated, almost filled with all kinds of pagan symbols and images and drapery, some very costly, some mere tinsel. The central object is the idol, the image of the god they worship that day. It is about half life size. To our eyes it has no beauty. You would think that even to a China-man of taste it must appear semi-hideous. Yet it resembles a man more than any other creature. Of course it is intended to represent the man whose departed spirit is worshiped. The idol is placed in an elevated position, about two-thirds of the distance from the floor to the ceiling. It is surrounded by rich drapery and fine tapestry. It sits behind what we may call an altar on which, among other things, are long colored candles not unlike those which stand on the altars in popish cathedrals. Before this high altar stands a table on which as we enter we see a man arranging his thank-offerings which he takes out of his large basket standing beside the table. The central object is a roast chicken not yet cold. Back of it he places a flagon of wine or of some strong drink and several tiny China wine cups. On other parts of the table are placed apparatus, two kinds, for casting lots; and they are so placed that while the worshiper is at his devotions he can use them.

Everything being ready, and as the worshiper is about to begin his devotions, the priest in charge beats for a few moments, a metal drum, "to give majesty" to the scene, says Ju Guy. The worshiper, standing behind the table and facing the idol, having folded his hands, first passes them up and down and then bows low three or four times, bending his whole body. Then follow his genuflections. He first kneels upon one knee and then rises; then both, all the time raising and depressing his folded hands. Then he falls upon both knees and bows his head down to the floor. In this position he remains some time. His body is restless, as though he were agitated. We listen and hear the sound of words or muttering. After two or three minutes of seeming prayer or thanksgiving, the worshiper, still on his knees, proceeds to cast lots. The first is by means of three pairs of peculiarly shaped pieces of wood. By pairs he lets them fall upon the floor noticing in what position they lie. Then he rises and goes to the book lying on the altar to see what is predicted by the dice blocks which fall into such a shape. Then he takes from his table, the long wooden vase filled with little bamboo sticks, on every one of which is written some Chinese word, indicating a certain page or place in the book on the altar. This vase he shakes in an inclined position until a stick falls out upon the floor. The stick is picked up and the reading examined and the book consulted. This tells him his luck in the future. Now the worshiper returns to the table, pulls off the limbs of the fowl and lays them on the side of the dish as if to be eaten by the spirit worshiped. Then he pours wine from the flagon into the little cups. He does not drink the wine, but before he departs, empties the contents of every cup into a small trough before the table. Then the worshiper, as if to pay his god for blessings received, takes from his paper cash book a handful of mock paper money—paper partly covered with gold leaf, or silver; or, perhaps, only paper—which he sets ablaze at the burning candles, and then carries and throws into an enclosed ash box at the door. This ends the worship. The time consumed has been not more than ten or fifteen minutes. Room must be given for others.

The worshiper now returns to the table, and places his chicken, wine flagon, dishes, cups, and everything back into his basket and departs, going home to eat his roast fowl and drink his unused wine, for only a little was poured out to his god; and as to the chicken, the idol only got a smell.

While these things are being done at the altar near the idol, two men with baskets on their arms come in and prepare to worship at the rear altar ten or fifteen feet farther from the idol. They first light at the altar a bunch of incense sticks which, while burning, they set in a sand-box, high up, to notify the god of their approach to worship. The smoke of these burning sticks, with that of others elsewhere, fills the temple with a somewhat pleasant perfume. As the god is presumed to have the sense of smell very acute he must be satisfied with the incense. The sticks burn slowly, without flame, until consumed.

One of the worshipers takes from his basket a large dish on which lies a roasted fowl over large slices of pork. The other offers a large sea crab lying also upon large slices of pork. To these is added a plate of oranges; and both set on flagons of wine and the little cups, also their apparatus for casting lots. Then the drum, ("for majesty") beats and the worshipers begin their bowings and their genuflections and their prayers or thanksgivings.

One of these worshipers was evidently not very devout, at least his reverence did not manifest itself in the Christian mode, for as Ju Guy and I were standing close by and watching their every movement, he probably took us to be Christians who did not approve of his worship, and, saying something about us, he laughed heartily. His remark was probably intended to turn the laugh upon us. After the laughter he proceeded to his devotions. That the ordinary idol worshiper has any reverence I think is very doubtful. That some have superstitious fear is not improbable; and that they believe the gods—the spirit of the departed and deified—have power to do them good or evil, is hardly to be doubted.—Christian Statesman.

IMPERFECT RELIGION.

Very much of the religion of the day is an easy-minded religion, without conflict and wrestling with self-denial and sacrifice—a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth at its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the flesh and with the devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection, deliverance, for the Lord's return. It is a second-rate religion—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion, with a fair exterior, but with an aching heart—a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doing. It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times, very different from the indomitable, much-enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of apostolic days, but even of the Reformation. It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted on certainty; it is not the out-flowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon. All is thus bondage, heaviness, irksomeness; there is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a movement in the way of his command, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others, for it has not fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow is paralyzed.—Rev. Horatius Bonar, D. D.

The strong man is he who brings to bear all his energies upon one worthy object, for in this concentration of purpose and energy he multiplies by union the power of the feeble single faculties with the might of the combined whole. Paul exemplified this, and said, "This one thing I do."—Ex.

Dr. Cuyler has the rare faculty of thinking and speaking right to the point, as he does in the following remark at a recent installation: "I wish some of our preachers would spend less time in propping up the Cross, and more in pointing men to it. Life is altogether too short to defend the Word. Preach it.'

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

CHILD-VIEWS ON PRAYER.

BY JAMES HOMER KENNEDY.

A little girl, sweet as the prettiest flower
That ever blossomed in Eden's bower,
Whether engaged in work or in play,
Was taught by her mother always to pray.

When asked, what should be her prayers while the sun
Lights the day, she replied, "Lord, Thy will be done
On Earth as in Heaven—our daily bread yield—
Be to us, this day, a sun and a shield!"

When asked, "What will be your prayer in the night?"
She answered, "When the pure stars shine bright,
'Twill be, Lord, remind me may every gem
Of the purer Star of Bethlehem!"

She responded, when asked "What will be your prayer
When all Nature, the spring-time's robe shall wear,
And the birds sing in forest, bower and grove?"
"Lord, keep me innocent as the dove!"

"What will be your prayer, when the summer blooms
With rich harvests, fruits, flowers and perfumes?"
She answered, "May the good deeds that compose
My life, bloom as lovely as Sharon's Rose!"

"And what is your prayer, in the autumn hour,
When ripe fruits, purple grapes cluster the bower?"
"Lord, may I forever in Thee abide—
Bring forth much fruit," she at once replied."

"You have learned, precious child, in the Sabbath-school,
Many golden texts, Heaven's golden rule;
What is your prayer, when the wintry winds blow?"
"Wash me, and I will be whiter than snow!"

"What seed should you sow, my dear little girl,
That sunbeams your life-path may diamond and pearl?"
"The good seed of the kingdom," the answer was given;
"What reap?" "God's blessing; reward in Heaven!"

"PAYING OFF MOTHER."

"Mother," said a little black-eyed boy of six years, "when you get old and want some one to read to you, I will pay you off."

Little Alexander's mother had been in the habit of reading to him a good deal, and on this Sabbath day she had read to him a long time out of the Bible and a Sabbath-school book. The child was just able to read a little himself, and the progress he was making doubtless suggested to him how he might at some future time return in kind all his mother's care. "I will pay you off, mother," says he, looking up into her face with childish satisfaction, as if a new thought from heaven had been sent down to light up the little world of his soul. His mother pressed him to her heart with a delight that seemed to say—"My dear son, I am more than paid off already."

But children you can never pay off your mother. Her thoughts of love and acts of affection are more in number than the days of life. How often has she nourished you, dressed you, kissed you, rocked you on her knee and in the cradle, carried you in her tender arms, watched over you in sleep, guided your infant steps, corrected at times your misdemeanors, thought of you in absence, and guarded your life in the unvarying remembrance of a mother's solicitude and the free will offerings of a mother's devotion! Ah dear child, you can never "pay off mother."

Mother has taught you to read and to pray. She has patiently sat by you and taught you the letters of the alphabet; and then she helped you to put them together and spell words of thought. She taught you to spell "God." Before you could read she taught you to say, "Our Father which art in heaven." Mother has trained you with lessons and hymns and prayers to come to Christ. She has prayed for you when none but God knew it, and has prayed with you when your wandering eyes understood not the meaning of her grave and imploring looks. She has pointed you to heaven and led the way. Dear child, you can never "pay off mother."

Yes, there is one way—there is one way in which you can more than pay off mother. It is by loving Jesus Christ and his work and by preparing for heaven. There Jesus dwells in glory, which he communicates to the saints of all generations; that same Jesus who said, "Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Come, little children, come to Jesus Christ! Come my child, and pay off mother by praising God with her in heaven.—Children's Friend.

THE EYE OF THE STORM.

Peculiar as the sailor's phraseology seems, it somehow fits the peculiar experiences of his sea life admirably. For example: Sometimes, before his ship encounters a heavy gale, the air seems filled with a strange, weird, far-away, sobbing sound. This, which is but the conflicting elements miles away echoing downward from the gathering clouds, he calls the "weep of the sea." Another illustration is afforded by the title of this sketch. But before explaining its meaning, let me say there is only one particular storm which has an eye. Now, with sailors a storm is a gale or a hurricane. The former is a very heavy wind storm blowing with tolerable steadiness from one quarter, while the hurricane, which is a hundred fold fiercer, is constantly and unexpectedly shifting to different points of the compass. Then there is the tornado, which is essentially a land storm. True, it is a revolving storm, but its track rarely exceeds eighty rods, while that of the cyclone—the storm which has an eye—usually extends over hundreds of miles. I know of no better way to crudely define a cyclone than to call to your mind the miniature whirlwind which you may have sometimes seen carrying the leaves and dust aloft in tolerably regular spirals. Well, imagine—if you can—the whirlwind spread out and magnified till it covers a vast expanse of the ocean, and blowing in this circular manner from sixty to ninety miles an hour, and all the time driving onward from five to twenty-five miles an hour, according to locality, until thousands of miles it may be from its starting point, its terrific force is expended. Then, too, there are almost stationary cyclones, like one encountered by a sea-faring friend in the Caribbean Sea. For thirty-six hours his vessel was driven round and round the compass in vast circles before the awful gale, losing her topmasts, jib-boom, and spare spars from deck. And when it moderated, an observation of the sun showed that the bark was just forty miles from the spot where she was first overtaken by the cyclone.

Now, though science has not yet studied out the exact nature and cause of these rotary storms that are more to be dreaded than any other phenomena of the sea, it can yet tell one or two important facts which are of great value to the sailor. One is, that a rapidly falling barometer, taken in connection with the appearance of the sky, and a peculiar shift of wind, foretells the approach of a cyclone with tolerable accuracy. Another, that in their onward career cyclones follow in certain different courses in different latitudes. So that if a ship be swept into the terrible orbit, her captain, by obeying certain nautical rules, may "scud" his ship before and gradually across the storm track, or heave-to on a proper tack, which shall keep the ship from the dreaded storm center—or, as it is more peculiarly called, "the eye of the storm."

Let me, if I can, give you some faint idea of this terrible eye from an experience of my own, and, going back in imagination, I am once more a young officer on board the bark Medusa, bound for New Orleans. We were becalmed off the Bermudas, and I well remember the strangely weird reflection of an almost blood-red sunset in the smooth, oily sea on which the bark rose and fell, not even being under steerage way. But six hours later the Medusa was lying to under close-reefed main-topsail and fore-staysail, and though far above the average as a sea-boat, her lee rail was literally flat with the waves, which themselves were at times actually crushed by the awful force of a wind of whose intensity I can give no adequate idea—a wind that will flatten a man in the weather rigging so that he can neither ascend nor descend. Blacker than ink was the sky, which was continually riven by livid zigzag lightning, that snapped and crackled in our faces, as thunderpeal after thunderpeal crashed into our very brains. The ocean, thus made continuously visible, was as white as wool in its smother of foam, and the voice of the tempest in the straining, tautened rigging was as that of ten million fiends.

For two woeful hours we lay thus—the sea almost up to the hatch-combings, when, with a strange suddenness, there was a lull of wind, followed by a calm more terrible than the intensity of the cyclone itself. On every side roared the swirling hurricane—overhead hissed the lightning and pealed the thunder—all about us the sea broke in great irregular masses that ran nearly as high as the mizzen masthead; yet, for one brief moment, the main-topsail was unfilled by a breath of wind, and the Medusa rolled helplessly hither and thither, touching her yard-arms in the mountainous billows that crashed in on deck with thunderous force. A vast school of porpoises played about the bark, while fluttering aimlessly through spars and rigging were hundreds of sea-gulls and Mother Carey's chickens, which had been sucked into the fearful vortex by the resistless power of the cyclone.

Such was the eye of the storm that lit up with lurid light, glared down at us on the night of October 14, 1868, and though we eventually outrode the cyclone's fury with only the loss of a main-topgallantmast and an upper topsail-yard, I have always contended that it was more dreadful in its appearance than the cyclone itself, and I only regret that the space to which I am limited does not allow me to give a fuller description of this strange phenomenon of the sea.

TEMPERANCE.

WESLEY ON LIQUOR REVENUE.

Rev. Dr. Wm. H. Holmes, in a very interesting historical article upon "Methodism and the Temperance Question" in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, gives the following extract from John Wesley on the subject of liquor revenue:

"On the revenue from the sale of liquors Mr. Wesley said: 'However, what is paid (the duty) brings in a large revenue to the king.' Is this an equivalent for the lives of his subjects? Would his majesty sell 100,000 of his subjects yearly to Algiers for £400,000? Surely no! Will he then sell them for that sum to be butchered by their own countrymen? 'But otherwise the swine for the navy cannot be fed.' Not unless they are fed with human flesh? Not unless they are fatted with human blood? Oh! tell it not in Constantinople that the English raise the royal revenue by selling the flesh and blood of their countrymen."

RAILROADS TURNED FANATICS.

Dodge City is the only city in the State of Kansas where no effort whatever has been made to execute the prohibition law. Almost every other door is a retail saloon, and one wholsesale house supplies their wants, and so high is the reputation of the business that the heaviest stockholders in the wholesale house represents the county in the State Legislature.

As prohibition is said to be driving business from the State, we would surely expect that Dodge City would be the only place in the State where all would go "merry as a marriage bell." But the voice of fanaticism is heard even there. Not from St. John, nor from any pious prohibitionist, but—who would have thought it—from the railroad.

The Santa Fe Company is constructing a branch, running from Wichita to a point on the main line in the western part of the State. Of this branch Dodge City is the natural terminus, but the railroad hesitated, and finally notified the authorities of the city that unless they took some steps to reform the city they could not spend money there, but would turn aside to some less convenient but better governed town.

Comment is useless. A railroad can smell a dollar as far as a Jew. And when railroads turn preacher and begin to preach reform there may not be much piety, but we may be sure there is business in their sermons.—P. S. Feemster, in Olathe Free Press.

STATE RIGHTS AND PROHIBITION.

"O, my Lord and my God, what a country this would be with no dram-shops in it! In thy great mercy hasten it. No dram-shops, then no jails and no poor-houses; few desolate homesteads, few broken hearts; no women brought up in elegance, afterwards married to men who sat them, with pale cheeks and shriveled arms, and consuming lung and hollow eye, and fainting strength, to fight back the wolf whose nostril, thrust through the broken window-pane, snuffs for the blood of her helpless babes. Let the temperance societies of the land cease quarreling, and the 70,000 members of these societies in this one State of New York join the hundreds of thousands of members of temperance societies in other States, and the millions of people in the United States who, not belonging to any temperance society, still feel that something must be done for the sobricty and disenthrallment of this nation, and in one half the time that I have spoken of as necessary for the achievement, the work will be done. We want, first of all, to demand an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, passed by three-fourths of the States, as directed in the Constitution, forbidding the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors except for medicinal, scientific, artistic or mechanical purposes, in all the States and Territories, and forbidding the importation of all foreign liquors except for the aforesaid purposes. Mere State enactment is not enough. Drive the evil out of one State, you may drive it into another. Make it a national enactment, and you drive it into the Atlantic on one side and the Pacific on the other. Let there be no room from the Canadas to the gulf and from sea to sea for the feet of the red dragon.

"That the individual States have all constitutional right to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcohol was established by the opinion of Judge McLean, of the United States Supreme Court, Judge Woodley, Judge Grier, Judge Daniels, Justice Catron, Chief Justice Shaw, of Massachusetts, Chief Justice Herrington, of Delaware, Chief Justice Mason, of Nebraska, and after Daniel Webster and Rufus Choate had argued the case before the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest tribunal of the land, Justice Taney, supported by all the judges of the court, rendered this decision: 'I see nothing in the Federal Constitution or laws of Congress to prohibit a State Legislature from prohibiting the traffic altogether.' The right of the State to extirpate this evil is settled, but we want the solidness and the persistence and the aggregate force of all the good people of the United States to demand an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. That amendment passed, the weaker States would be helped by stronger States, the cities by the country districts, and you and I would live to see the day when it would be as unusual to see a man destroyed by drunkenness as a case of suicide by taking paris-green."—Talmage.

Money is sought and gained in the name of religion, which is of more harm than good, when churches enter into competition with the markets to buy and sell. Fairs, bazaars, amusements for the purpose of getting money to support the church and religion, are shams and false unities between religion and money. They give rise to envies, jealousies and bickerings, sometimes to schisms among those engaged in the business, and often in the church. They foster a mean spirit of self-congratulation in those who patronize them, because they hug the delusion that they are exercising Christian liberality in giving to the church; when in truth they are getting a good supper or a good bargain in fancy articles of use or ornament. They also misrepresent and injure the church in the minds of critics and the almost-persuaded. It looks very like the perversion of the house of prayer and the Church of Christ into a house of merchandise, which Jesus rebuked unsparingly. And the whole principle of church support is vitiated. If it cannot be sustained by the free-will offerings of the members, then the sooner it crumbles to pieces the better, because it has only a name to live and is dead. By the breath of God the dry bones may live again, but so long as spasmodic action is kept up by the galvanic treatment of artificial means, real life and health are impossible. The truth is, the world is being again enslaved by the power of money, and the Christian Church is feeling the immense force of the spirit of gain and self-indulgence. It behooves the Church to keep clear the distinction between gain and godliness, that they have no necessary connection as cause and effect; but that money must be made and used in strict subservience, and not as the master, of Christian truth and duty.—Illustrator.

COURAGE.—Paul, to address the mob, and defend his own cause, would have entered the theatre and exposed himself to torture and death. He was not only a persevering, but a courageous man. His disciples were as brave as he. They would have risked their lives to save his. Courage helps a man up, and makes him strong to do and to suffer. Cowardice draws a man down and makes him weak.

CHRISTIAN LABOR.—In Ephesus, even Paul's enemies are constrained to say of him, "This Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people." No doubt much of Paul's persuasion was personal. You may not be able to preach as he did, but you can persuade men to give up their evil habits and come to Christ. A young gentleman heard a laboring man swearing in the presence of his associates. He said to him, "It is cowardly for you to swear in the company of others when you would not dare to do it alone." "I am not afraid," was the answer, "to swear at any time nor in any place." "I will give you ten dollars," said the gentleman, "if you will go to the village graveyard at twelve o'clock to-night and swear the same oaths you have uttered here, when you are alone with God." "Agreed," was the answer, "it is an easy way to earn ten dollars." "Come to me to-morrow and say that you have done it and the money is yours." The time passed. Midnight came. The man entered the graveyard amid absolute stillness and great darkness. The young man's words, "Alone with God," rang in his ears. The thought of his wickedness overwhelmed him. He fell on his knees and prayed for mercy. The next day he went to the gentleman and thanked him, and told him he had resolved never to utter another oath. Such labor for others as this will not only help our fellow-creatures, but will lift us up.

PERSECUTIONS.—Our Heavenly Father regards with peculiar affection those who are "persecuted for righteousness' sake." God overrules evil for good. "Oh," said Cæsar, "we will soon root out this Christianity. Off with their heads." But the Church only grew stronger. God will either extricate his people in time of persecution or take them through it, up to the light, splendor, peace and rest of heaven. Joseph, released from his dungeon, was exalted to a throne. Daniel, unharmed by the lions, became the third ruler in the kingdom. Mordecai, delivered from the wrath of Haman, was raised high in honor. Stephen, condemned by false witnesses, and permitted to be the first Christian martyr, "looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God," and with a prayer of blessing for his enemies, "fell asleep." Which would you rather be, Mordecai or Haman? Daniel or one of his persecutors? Stephen, or one of those who stoned him? Paul, or Demetrius?

LET SUPERSTITION ALONE.—These Ephesians believed all manner of lies. Is there no way in which we are like them? Do we consider it unlucky to spill salt, and immediately proceed to throw some into the fire, or over our left shoulder? Do we "hate to begin any work on Friday?" Do we ever quote such proverbs as "Pitch a lucky man into the Nile and he will come up with a fish in his mouth"? If we believe in "luck" instead of Jesus Christ, are we much better than these Ephesians with their heathen superstition?

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

MOBS CANNOT CHECK THE TRUTH.

1. It is always sure to make an uproar when we try to put down wickedness that brings much gain to a few unprincipled leaders. Vs. 23–27. Slavery impoverished the masses of the Southern people, made them poor in pocket, in brains and in self-respect, but it brought great gain to a few slave dealers and slave owners. Hence the uproar which always followed any attempt to put it down. The liquor business makes us pay higher prices for everything we eat or wear; it lays a tax on every legitimate industry in the land, and makes thousands of people poor; but it brings great gain to a few brewers, distillers and saloon keepers; and so the country is kept in agitation over the liquor question from one end to the other. The secret lodge takes money from the churches, from missionary and benevolent institutions, and from the family; it fleeces alike the poor colored people of the South, the farmers of the West, and the mechanics of the East, but it brings great gain to a few unscrupulous leaders. Naturally they do not like to have their gains interfered with any more than Demetrius did, and like him when they see their craft in danger they try to get up an uproar. At the Anti-masonic convention held in Boston four years ago they hurled brickbats and rotten eggs at the speakers and made all the noise they could to prevent their being heard. Just as Demetrius found the mob willing tools in his hands, so Masonic leaders always find plenty of followers, outside of the lodge as well as inside, who are willing to do what they tell them. Secret orders are a great field for ambitious, unscrupulous men. Many persons think Napoleon I. conquered entirely by the sword. This is a mistake. He conquered more by bribes, a liberal use of champagne, and the secret lodge, than he did in open hostilities. It is stated by C. W. Hecbrethorn, a writer on secret societies, that he facilitated his conquests by means of the Masonic lodges with which France, Italy and Spain were at that time covered. He put his soldiers and marshals at the head of these lodges, and in this way he contrived to make Masonry a most powerful tool and ally.

2. It is wisest for men whose actions will not bear the light to keep quiet. Vs. 36–40. The folly of Masonic uproars at the present day answer point for point with the folly of this ancient uproar at Ephesus. In the first place, if Masonry is such an excellent institution—even divine as some claim—it needs no violence to uphold it. Secondly, Anti-masonic lecturers are peaceable and harmless men; often devoted ministers of the Gospel. Thirdly, this is a country of law and order, and every legitimate ground for offence can be carried to the courts. And lastly, as the wise town clerk reminds the Ephesian rioters, mob violence always reacts upon itself to the injury of the cause it advocates.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How does Paul mention the uproar at Ephesus? 1 Cor. 15: 32. What uproar did our Saviour's life and teachings once cause? Mark 15: 8, 13, 14. Are mobs the creatures of their leaders? Mark 15: 11. What do lecturers on the sin of Masonry seek to do? Acts 26: 18. Why are their efforts often so ill received? 2 Cor. 4: 4.

THE CHURCHES.

—The Lockport Wesleyan Conference held its twenty-third session at Cattaraugus, N. Y., last month. Among those present were Bro. C. F. Hawley the evangelist; Bro. L. W. Mills, agent for Wheaton Theological Seminary; Mrs. De Pew, the evangelist of Huntsburgh, Ohio; Mrs. Douglass, widow of the revered D. B. Douglass; and Bro. Kinney, the publishing agent.

—As an appropriate object lesson for the topic studied in the Sabbath schools last Sabbath, Bro. J. M. Hitchcock, the superintendent of the largest Sunday school in Chicago (Moody's) who is a firm believer in good works as a test of discipleship, arranged that each member of the church, school or congregation known to be detained from services by sickness should have sent by the hand of some officer or teacher a basket of choice fruits, with assurance of love and prayers of the school. Such an act is only in obedience to several Scripture commands, and is a practical illustration of the Lord's declaration, "By their fruits ye shall know them." In the evening a large union Sabbath school meeting was held, to which all the children in that part of the city were invited to listen to an address by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.

—Rev. G. O. Gordon, a liberal after-death probationist, was recently installed as pastor of the historic Old South Church, Boston. He was invited to make a statement of his views before a council composed of representative men. He denies the accepted views respecting depravity, the atonement and future punishment, and the inspiration of the Bible, but was voted installation by a majority of the council. Forty-eight members of the council voted to go on with the installation, qualifying their action it is understood, by disavowing sympathy with some of Mr. Gordon's views. Sixteen voted not to install, among whom was Rev. Dr. Webb, whose disapproval of the positions of the pastor elect was so decided that he declined to take the part assigned him in the services, that of offering the installing prayer.

—The fact that the Evangelical Alliance has been kindly invited not to hold its general meeting this year in Sweden, recalls the fact that the association ought by this time to be accustomed to such disappointments. In 1866 the meeting was to be held in Amsterdam, but the Prussian and Austrian war, as also the cholera in Holland, compelled postponement for one year. In 1870 the meeting was to be held in New York, but the outbreak of the Franco German war deferred it until 1873. This year the vexation of the Swedish bishops at the Swedish Baptists and others who are working outside the state church and who, on the floor of the Alliance might demand recognition as Christian brethren, has interfered with the plans.

—The United Presbyterian General Assembly meets in St. Louis, Dr. Wilson's church, May 28th. In connection with this meeting the Woman's Board of Missions meets in Sparta, Ill., and the Home Mission General Committee at Marissa, a few miles away.

—In connection with the Pan-Presbyterian council at Belfast, Ireland, next month, the Midland announces that the following among other United Presbyterian representatives will attend: T. H. Hanna, of the First church, Monmouth; Pres. J. T. McMichael of Monmouth College; J. A. Wilson, of First church, St. Louis; M. S. McCord of Providence, R. I.; J. P. Sankey of Rochester, N. Y. They will sail from New York about June 12th.

—The Lutheran monument has arrived at Washington. It was cast in the same mold of the one erected at Worms in honor of the great reformer. It will be unveiled with appropriate ceremonies on May 21. The programme, however, will extend through several days, beginning on Sunday, May 18. The several nationalities—Scandinavian, German and American—will be recognized, and representatives of the different schools of theology in the church, from different sections of the country, will be selected.

—The Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, of the First Union Presbyterian church, New York, has for some weeks been collecting facts and opinions in regard to Sunday observances from every State and Territory of this country and from all other countries, together with opinions of doctors in regard to the sanitary phases of the day, and of lawyers, judges and statesmen in regard to the influence of Sunday pleasuring or church-going upon employes, etc. The results of this investigation, supplemented by reading, are to be given in a series of Sunday evening sermons.

—The Rev. Dr. John Hall reported recently to the Presbytery of New York that a lady, a member of his church, had paid the mortgage on the Church of the Sea and Land, amounting to $13,000; that on Calvary Church, $12,000; on Shiloh Church, $9,500; on Eighty-fourth Street Church, $5,000, and has divided $30,000 between the French Evangelical, the Bohemian, and the Seventy-seventh Street churches—recent organizations—making in all a contribution of $69,500. The presbytery returned its thanks through Dr. Hall. It is understood that the lady is Mrs. Robert L. Stuart.

—The fourth International Sunday-school Convention of the United States and British North American provinces will be held in Louisville, Ky., on the 11th, 12th and 13th of June. It is expected that between 1,000 and 1,200 delegates and alternates from all evangelical denominations representing all sections of the United States and North America will attend, besides a number of prominent Sunday-school workers from various portions of the world.

—Mr. Moody's meetings in London, England, continue with unabated interest and attendance. He closes at Hamstead the 5th of this month, and commences at Croydon the 6th, and continues there till the 26th, when the Tabernacle will be taken down and moved to another point. Mr. Sankey assists Mr. Moody with the singing, Major Whittle and James M'Granahan, and Rev. Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins, are also there, and all hard at work in overflow meetings and following up the work in different ways. The meetings will continue for some time yet. Mr. Moody will return to his home in Northfield, Mass., and spend the summer. While he has made no plans for the future, yet it is expected he will labor in this country next fall and winter, and we hear it rumored, possibly in the South. Cincinnati, O., and Richmond, Va., have already corresponded with him, and feel encouraged to hope that he will come and labor with them. We hope this may prove true.

—The clergymen of Indianapolis have resolved that funerals shall be private; that there should be no public exhibition of deceased people, and that ministers should not be required to attend at the grave.

—The Philadelphia Baptist City Mission has been in existence but four years, and has already ten missions under its charge. Four chapels have been built, and plans for another have been adopted.

—Rev. Nicholas J. Bjerring, D. D., late of the Greek church, has been received and recognized as an ordained minister by the Presbytery of New York. This is the first instance of the kind on record.

—Rev. Joseph L. Potter, of Teheran, has just completed the translation of the first part of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress into the Persian language, and a lady in New York city has sent him $500 for its publication.

—Finland, with its 2,000,000 inhabitants, has 219 pastors, 487 churches and 515 chapels. The Finnish Lutherans support a mission in Ovamboland, South Africa, with six missionaries. After twelve years of hard labor their patience is rewarded by the organization of the first native congregation.

—The Episcopalians are doing a good work among the Chinese in Philadelphia. About forty Chinamen are now under instruction in three Sunday-schools, and it is hoped that a number will soon be ready for baptism. They contribute every Sunday, and have undertaken to send $30 annually to endow a bed in the hospital at Wuchang, China.

THE DECCAN (INDIA) FAITH MISSION.

From the India Methodist Watchman for April, just received, we glean the following interesting items from an article by the editor, Rev. C. B. Ward, in regard to this important mission work. Bro. Ward's letter in the Cynosure of last week will be remembered. Any who wish to help him financially can send to Mrs. A. R. Kean, care Preston, Kean & Co., 100 Washington St., Chicago.

We shall henceforth be known as the Deccan Faith Mission, doing work in Telugu, Canerese and Hindustani, with a total force of workers, male and female, numbering about two dozen, and including two orphanages: (1.) the "Christian Orphanage" for native orphans; (2.) the "Christian Home" for East Indian orphans. Our work is now great in bulk and responsibility. Bro. Ernsberger has sole charge of the Canerese field, and the Telugu and orphan work remains as hitherto. Rupees 12,000 will hardly sustain our efforts for the year. Of this, by our own labor and savings, we shall realize by God's favor one half. The remainder the Lord of the harvest will send us by whom he will. * * * Our Secunderabad work is at times exciting. The devil has tried to run us off the field, but has overdone the matter several times and we are left in full possession. Opposition often runs high. We have the championship of the cause of Christ alone pretty much. Other missions are not prepared to work on our line. Aside from one service of a morning, when the crowd is small, there are no other than our own twelve open air services per week in Secunderabad bazars. Not long since a young man came to us apparently under conviction of sin. But he shrank from giving up the world. He loved tobacco and his pig tail. It was too much for him to square off with the devil at once. * * * As we recast the history of the first five years of our history as a mission, we look forth with much courage and faith to the greater things God will surely do with us in the days to come. A very large portion of the Nizam's Dominions lies untouched and open to us. By the help of God we shall be used of God as much as we are useable. We are still in correspondence with persons wishing to join us, and believe that at no distant day the Lord of the harvest will largely reinforce us. As soon as our buildings are up in Pramoor we want to put an itenerating band in the field. No other work is feasible there; cities being unknown and large towns only a few, while thousands of villages of 100 to 200 houses cover the land.

THE MISSISSIPPI METHODIST EPISCOPAL CONFERENCE.

Rev. J. M. Shumpert of Columbus, Miss., secretary of this conference, replies to our inquiries that the resolution condemning secret societies passed at the late meeting was well sustained by a number of the members who argued "that the secret societies in many places were not only defrauding many poor people, but had really in some places almost destroyed the spiritual and financial condition of the churches."

The extract from the minutes of the conference containing the resolution is herewith presented:

"Rev. I. B. Griffin offered the following resolution, which was, on motion, adopted:

"WHEREAS, There is a great and growing evil in our midst that has impoverished the majority of the people in various cities of Mississippi and other States, and if allowed to continue will prove detrimental to our race both in their relations as Christians and citizens. We believe this evil to be attributable to the over number of secret societies that are now existing in our State, and we believe the financial failures in the churches in the State of Mississippi are due mainly to the assessments and dues in many of these secret societies; therefore be it

"Resolved, That it is the duty of the ministers of Christ not only to feed the flock of God on Gospel food, but to warn, to enlighten and persuade them to turn from anything that hinders the cause of Christ and their social, moral and industrial condition.

"Resolved, That we believe the ministers will be held accountable for any evil they may foresee coming upon their flock, and fail to warn them thereof.

"Resolved, That in view of evils and demoralizing influence existing upon every interest of the church by the over number of secret and benevolent societies springing up like mushrooms among our people, we pledge ourselves to use every legitimate means in our power to counteract their undue influence in our churches.

"Speeches were made by Dr. Revels, D. W. Calvert, W. H. H. Gallion, L. L. Shumpert, G. Brooks, H. Henderson, James Ellis, and Bishop Wiley made a telling address, and the motion prevailed."

While it is true that these resolutions are not as radical as those adopted by the convention of Associated Churches about Columbus, Miss., the Alabama Congregational Association, the Good Will Association of Baptist churches, or the Primitive Baptist bodies, yet neither were the members of this Methodist body so well informed of the character and tenets of the lodges as the others. Their action opens a door of approach to their churches, which we pray God to send a man of his choosing to enter.

—The statement has lately been made that "Secretism grants a high license for lying." Is it true? Oftentimes we must answer, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

ODE OF WELCOME.

Composed by G. Warrington and offered to tbe Knigbts of Pytbias for tbe organization of tbeir lodge in Birmingham, Iowa, May 2, 1884.

Let us welcome tbe Knights to our town,
As they bring us the ligbt from tbe east;
And tbe Anti with anger will frown
Just because be is out of the feast.

Oh! bow friendly and cautious and brave
Every Page and Esquire and Sir Knigbt.
Beat tbe drums, brotbers sbout, banners wave,
Antis run, for we'll win in tbe figbt.

Have you been into Pluto's domain?
Did tbe skeleton burn on tbe mound?
Did tbey fight for a dish of his brains?
Were you scared at tbe sigbt and tbe sound?

But those brains were molasses and lard
Mixed with sawdust and stirred in a skull.
You will need to be put on your guard,
Or the Anti will know you're a fool.

If you go to Fint Torrence's store,
We beseech you be cautious and brave,
And just drink some clear water, no more,
Or tbe Knight may become just a knave.

Did you jump on the terrible spikes?
Is your blood on tbe steel and the wood?
With your bare tender feet on the spikes,
You so bravely the ordeal stood.

In tbe service of Satan go on,
And then meet on that desolate sbore,
Where tbe devil will fatber his own
And dread Pluto will rule evermore.

LA TROMPETTE EVANGELIQUE

Is a French religious review which is to appear on the 15th inst. It will be edited by Rev. P. A. Seguin, pastor of thc French Evangelical Tabernacle of this city.

This French journal, published in the religious interests of the French Protestants of North America, will be, it is said, the first of the kind in the United States. It will have for its object to propagate the wholesome doctrine of the Gospel, to unmask the Romish errors. Nobody could be better fitted to conduct such a journal than the Rev. Mr. Seguin, who during fourteen years has seen all the dangers of the Romish system. He will be helped in this enterprise by another French converted priest, who formerly was the secretary for a Romish bishop in the Catholic Province of Baltimore, and to-day an assistant minister in the Episcopal Cathedral of Chicago. The Rev. Mr. Antoine Lechner is his name, and he is a zealous and able man.

The journal, at its start, will be only but a semi-monthly, and its price is $1.25 in town and $1.00 outside of Chicago. Surplus receipts will aid the noble cause of evangelizing the French population of Chicago. Who is not able to subscribe one or two dollars towards this grand and charitable purpose.

Mr. Seguin needs song-books, Bibles, Testaments, tracts and food for himself and wife. Shall he stand alone when such a work has been pronounced to be a necessary and very important one by those who are at the headquarters of our evangelical institutions? Address the editor of the Evangelical Trumpet, 130 W. 12th St., Chicago.

—It is learned at the office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury that soldiers are being extensively swindled by false representations on the part of attorneys as to the money alleged to be due them under new laws on account of bounty, etc. Nearly 500 letters are received daily from soldiers inquiring into the status of claims which they have been induced to file under the pretensc that they were entitled to additional bounty under the alleged new laws. They are persuaded in this way to pay an advance fee of from $2 to $5 to attorneys to prosecute their claims. The claims are rejected, of course, and the claimants never hear of it until they apply to the department.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE,

FARM AND GARDEN.

In Selecting young apple and other trees many persons are particular to have a niee, straight stem; but those who understand will look at the roots. With good roots, stem and top ean soon be brought to the required conditions. The roots are the life of the tree.

Early Greens.—Have you any cabbage stumps? Set them out in the garden as soon as the frost leaves the ground, where they will not interfere with other crops. Cover them half of their length. Green, tender leaves will soon appear, which will give the earliest of greens. The blossom shoots will appear later.—Rural New Yorker.

Fertile Farms.—When farmers learn from experienee that by housing their manure and thoroughly working it over, mixing with absorbents such as muck, earth, road dust, leaves, etc., to take up the liquid and the ammonia set free its value is double what it now is, and that, too, at an expense much less than the same amount of plant food could be obtained in an artificial fertilizer, a new era will have been reached in agriculture, and we shall see the fertility of our own farms brought back to where they were fifty years ago.

PRUNING THE GOOSEBERRY.

The Gardener's Monthly, in speaking of the culture of the English gooseberry in this country, says "they are usually ruined by pruning. In Europe it is customary to thin out the center well, to let in the sun and air. Here it is the sun and air that ruin them by inviting mildew; and so the more shoots the better. Our country farmers are the best gooseberry growers, where weeds run riot, and grass and gooseberry affeet a close companionship. Where, in fact, the gooseberry can find a cool corner, well shaded from the sun, and with a soil that is never wet, nor yet by any means dry, there will gooseberries be produeed unto you." We have raised good English gooseberries, on the same bushes, for the past twenty years under the shade of a large tree, when the requirements above quoted have been observed. Of course weeds are entirely uneeessary for their growth or success.—Country Gentleman.

THE SUMMER FLOWER GARDEN.

Now is the time to look ahead to the summer garden. Every plant of Geranium, Heliotrope, or Fuchsia, and Coleus will furnish half a dozen cuttings or more and be all the better for giving them. These you can root for use in the garden. The best plan I have ever followed for rooting cuttings is this:

Take soup plates and fill with clear sand. Saturate this sand thoroughly. You must keep it wet all the time, but not muddy. Never give enough water to make the cuttings rot before roots form. Insert the cuttings in this wet sand, and set the plates in a warm place. It need not be a shady one—indeed, I generally select a sunny one, on account of the warmth thus obtained—but any warm place will do. Not one in a dozen of these cuttings will fail to grow. I seldom lose any if they are taken from the plant when in the right stage of growth. Young and healthy shoots are best. Never use old, woody stalks. In this way you can secure plants enough from your window garden to fill several beds on the lawn or in the yard next summer without damaging your window pets in the least. You will never miss them.—E. B. R., in Good Cheer.

PREMIUM POTATOES.

May 20th, 1883, I planted the Premium potatoes on one-half acre of ground; there were two varieties planted on this same plot, each occupying one-fourth of an acre. The varieties were Invincible and Rocky Mountain Rose, both new varieties. The crop was harvested September 1, and carefully weighed. The weight of both kinds was 24,989 pounds, making 416 bushels and 29 pounds, all grown on one-half of an aere. There were 215 bushels of the Invincibles and 201 bushels and 29 pounds of the Rocky Mountain Rose. The soil on which these potatoes were grown was a rich sandy loam. It was first plowed and then cross-plowed; then 200 pounds of Commercial Potato Manure and four cords of well rotted barn-yard manure were spread evenly and broadcast on the one-half acre; then harrowed in as usual. My seed had been cut to single eyes, and dusted with plaster and lime; trenches were opened with a plow full six inches deep and three feet apart; 100 pounds of potato fertilizer mixed with 100 pounds of plaster was then seattered in the drills; the seed was now dropped, two pieces of an eye each in the drills, eleven inches apart and eovered two inches and a half deep. Soon as they were well up I seattered in the drills and around the potatoes 150 pounds of the potato manure mixed with plaster; then I eultivated and hoed the crop. Before cultivating the second time, I seattered on the sides of the rows 150 pounds more of the potato manure. They were cultivated and hoed four times each, and then hilled up with a hiller. The cost of this one-half acre crop of potatoes, including interest, taxes, manure, seed, working the one-half acre, harvesting, etc., all told, was not over $40. So that the 416½ bushels cost less than 10 eents per bushel. The premium gained more than paid the whole cost.—Alfred Rose in Seed-time and Harvest.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble graaite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blauchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminisences.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 6 cents.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masoary, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

IN BRIEF.

Recent reports from the Mormons themselves give the number of adherents to that faith in the Rocky Mountain region as 138,000, 46,000 of whom are under eight years of age. There are 28,838 church officials, as follows: First Presidency, 3; Apostles, 12; Patriarchs, 68; High Priests, 3,413; Seventies, 4,747; Elders, 11,191; Priests, 1,611; Teachers, 1,786; Deacons, 5,022—one official to 4½ of the population.—Christian Worker.

One of the stories told of a recent conflagration in Boston is that of a man who, when apprised that the fire was raging with dangerous fury, in the excitement of the moment seized a pitcher of water and locked it up securely in his safe, without knowing why he did it. To this accidental circumstance he owed the preservation of the valuable contents of the safe, which were perfectly preserved by the steam from the water in the pitcher.—Home Gazette.

Mr. T. G. Baylor, of the firm of Baylor & Baylor, civil engineers in Atlanta, Ga., said a few days ago: "I have in my possession the sword of John Brown, taken from him when he was captured. It was given to my father by Brown when he was in captivity. I have been offered $500 for it, but refused to sell it. It is one of the finest pieces of metal I ever saw. The weapon is a cavalry saber, with an iron scabbard and a bone handle. The blade is a regular 'Damascus blade,' finely etched, and so pliant that you can press the point around to the handle and when it is released it will resume its original shape."

"How came your father to get it?"

"When Brown lay wounded my father went to him and took the sword from under him. After keeping it a while he carried it to Brown and said: 'Capt. Brown, probably you would want to give this sword to some of your relatives, and I have brought it to you to make such disposition of it as you see fit.' Brown said: 'No, you have been very kind to me for which I thank you, and in consideration of what you have done for me, I prefer that you should keep the sword.' So my father kept it and gave it to me. Up to a few years ago it still showed the stains of blood obtained in Brown's Kansas raids. He told my father that the stains were Kansas blood, and that the sword never drew blood in Virginia."—Atlanta Constitution.

In bravado a young man placed the muzzle of his fowling piece under the water and fired the charge. The result was the bursting of the barrel near the breech and the mutilation of his hand. Another placed and held the muzzle of his piece square against a piece of plate window glass, and fired the charge—powder and a bullet. The glass was shattered, so was the gun barrel. Another instance was that of an experimenter who had heard that a candle could be fired from the barrel of a gun through an inch board. He drove a candle into the muzzle of the gun, fired, and the explosion split the barrel almost its entire length, and did not even drive the candle from the muzzle. Still another burst of a gun barrel was caused by the use of wet grass for a wad, well rammed down over a charge of shot. But perhaps one of the most singular exhibitions in this line was a Colt's navy revolver, which some years ago was sent to the factory in Hartford, Conn. This was before the adaptation of these pistols to the metallic cartridges, and it is probable that in loading with open powder and ball only a small amount of powder got into the chamber, and the bullet was not propelled with sufficient force to drive it from the muzzle; at least the bullet did not go out, but lodged. As the shooter did not know whether the bullet escaped or not, he kept on firing until the barrel burst or bulged, and when it was sawed in two longitudinally there were found fourteen bullets wedged one into the other, and so much "upset" by the hammering of the successive explosions of the powder charges that some of them were not less than one inch diameter, being flattened disks instead of conical bullets.—Scientific American.

A TRAGIC EVENT.

A FATHER'S DESPAIR AND SELF-INFLICTED DEATH. HIS SON'S FINAL RESCUE, TOO LATE TO SAVE HIS PARENT.

The graphic occurrence that is described below is one of the most remarkable episodes in the domestic history of America. It is absolute truth which can readily be verified.

The inhabitants of the pleasant town of Cortland, N. Y., were shocked one morning by the announcement that Mr. Clinton Rindge one of their most prominent citizens had committed suicide. The news spread rapidly and aroused the entire neighborhood where Mr. Rindge was so well and favorably known. At first it seemed impossible that any one so quiet and domestic could do so rash a deed, and the enquiry was heard on every side as to the cause. The facts as developed on investigation proved to be as follows:

Mr. Rindge was domestic in his tastes and took the greatest enjoyment in the society of his children and pride in their development. And indeed he had good reason to be proud, for they gave promise of long lives of success and usefulness. But an evil day came. His youngest son, William, began to show signs of early decay. He felt unusually tired each day, and would sometimes sleep the entire afternoon if permitted to do so. His head pained him, not acutely, but a dull, heavy feeling. There was a sinking sensation at the pit of his stomach. He lost all relish for food and much of his interest for things about him. He tried manfully to overcome these feelings, but they seemed stronger than his will. He began to lose flesh rapidly. The father became alarmed and consulted physicians as to the cause of his son's illness, but they were unable to explain. Finally severe sores broke out on his arms and he was taken to Buffalo where a painful operation was performed resulting in the loss of much blood but affording little relief. The young man returned home and a council of physicians was called. After an exhaustive examination they declared there was no hope of final recovery, and that he must die within a very few days. To describe the agony which this announcement caused the father would be impossible. His mind failed to grasp its full meaning at first; then finally seemed to comprehend it, but the load was too great. In an agony of frenzy he seized a knife and took his own life, preferring death rather than to survive his idolized son. At that time William Rindge was too weak to know what was transpiring. His face had turned black, his breath ceased entirely at times, and his friends waited for his death believing that the fiend Bright's disease of the kidneys, from which he was suffering, could not be removed. In this supreme moment William's sister came forward and declared she would make a final attempt to save her brother. The doctors interposed, assuring her it was useless and that she would only hasten the end by the means she proposed to employ. But she was firm, and putting all back, approached her brother's side and administered a remedy which she fortunately had on hand. Within an hour he seemed more easy and before the day was over he showed signs of decided improvement. These favorable signs continued, and to-day William B. Rindge is well, having been virtually raised from the dead through the marvelous power of Warner's Safe Cure, as can readily be verified by any citizen of Cortland.

Any one who reflects upon the facts above described must have a feeling of sadness. The father, dead by his own hand, supposing his son's recovery to be impossible; the son restored to health to mourn the loss of his father and the agonized relatives with a memory of sadness to forever darken their lives. Had Clinton Rindge known that his son could recover he would to-day be alive and happy, but the facts which turned his brain and caused him to commit suicide were such as any one would accept as true.

However sad this case may be the truth remains that thousands of people are at this moment in as great actual peril as William Rindge and in as great danger of causing misery if not death to their friends. Liver and kidney diseases are become the most common and most dangerous of any or all modern complaints. They are the most deceptive in their beginnings and horrible in their final stages. They are far more deceptive than consumption, and can rarely be detected even by skillful physicians unless a microscopic analysis be resorted to, and few doctors understand how to do this. Their slightest approach, or possibility of approach, should strike terror to the one who is threatened as well as to all his or her friends. These diseases have no distinct symptoms, but come in the form of lassitude, loss of appetite, aching muscles and joints, dull headaches, pains in the back, stomach and chest, sour stomach, recurring signs of cold, irregular pulsations of the heart, and frequent dizziness. If neglected these symptoms are certain to run into chronic kidney and liver or Bright's disease, from which there is sure to be a great amount of agony and only one means of escape, which is by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. The importance of taking this great remedy upon the slightest appearance of any of the above symptoms cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of all readers who desire to escape death and pain and prolong life with all its pleasures and blessings.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—A bill was introduced into the House providing it shall be unlawful to collect fare on any conveyance throughout the United States when passengers are unable to secure seats.

—Hundreds of petitions from militia organizations all over the country have been received in the House in favor of the bill to increase the amount appropriated for militia from $200,000 to 600,000. Substantially the same bill has passed the Senate and is now pending before the House Committee on Appropriations.

—Senator Kellogg was acquitted Thursday as everybody expected he would be. Price and Walsh, the witnesses against him who claimed to have paid Kellogg bribes, forgot the stories they testified to before the Grand Jury, and were not able to prove the indictment. For example, they testified before the Grand Jury that the bribery took place in April, 1880, and that they paid him lawful money, Therefore this was charged in the indictment, but when the witnesses came on the stand at the trial they testified that the bribery took place in July, 1879, and that he was paid in drafts. If this latter was the case the offense is barred by the statute of limitation and the indictment was not proven. At the opening of the court to-day the Judge reviewed the case and directed the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty. As it was no man could have been convicted under the evidence of such witnesses as Price and Walsh.—Inter Ocean dispatch.

—The work of laying stone on the Washington monument was resumed this morning at a height of 410 feet, the point reached at the suspension of work last fall. A two feet course will be laid each day during favorable weather. Stone is prepared to raise the structure to a height of 470 feet.

—The National Republican has changed hands. Mr. Frank Hatton, Knight Templar Mason and Ass't P. M. General, retires from editorial control, and Mr. Clinton H. Snowden, formerly managing editor of the Chicago Times, assumes the entire editorial management.

—Mr. John Jay Knox remained at the desk of the Comptroller of the Currency, which he has occupied for twelve years, up to four o'clock Thursday and then took the train for New York to assume the Presidency of the Bank of the Republicin that city.

COUNTRY.

—Judge Anthony yesterday sentenced Sadie Ray, on a plea of guilty to manslaughter, to one and a half years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary for the killing of Patrick Kinsley, the head-waiter of the Briggs House, last December.

—Moses Fraley, the St. Louis speculator, has failed, losing on the Chicago board about $400,000, while he is said to be short for a large amount of wheat at New York, besides dropping recently $190,000 in Union and Texas Pacific stocks. A combination formed against him in Chicago is said to have brought about the crash. Mr. Fraley states that his liabilities are about $1,000,000.

—A fire at Glens Falls, N. Y., Monday, which was fanned by a strong gale, destroyed Little's Opera House, the Glens Falls Opera House, Presbyterian church, Union Hall building, and thirty business places. A portion of "murderers' row," occupied entirely by saloons, was demolished to prevent a spread of the flames. The loss is $200,000, with $60,000 insurance.

—The fourth annual meeting of the Civil Service Reform Association was held May 1st. Among those present were E. P. Wheeler, Carl Schurz, E. L. Godkin and others. George William Curtis made a brief speech, in which he congratulated the association on the signal success it had achieved.

—James R. Keene, the celebrated speculator from California, failed in New York for $14,000. He has run through several millions in grain and stock gambling.

—Albert Withelme's 14-year-old daughter died at Canton, Ohio, Wednesday, from the effects of jumping a skipping-rope 357 consecutive times.

—Small-pox is epidemic at Charleston, Ill. The schools were closed Wednesday and the Circuit Court, just convened for the spring term, adjourned until fall.

—Trichinosis caused the death of Mr. Friess at Baltimore Wednesday, and three of his daughters are in a precarious condition. The infected pork was eaten last Friday at dinner.

—At Gouverneur, N. Y., Saturday morning, a boiler explosion in Whitney's marble works killed five men and fatally injured two others.

—Near Independence, Iowa, Friday night John Duffy's 13-year-old daughter perished by fire, and his wife and infant child were fatally burned.

—A man, woman and two children perished by the burning of five buildings of the Chateauzay Iron Company at Bradley's Pond, N. Y., Saturday morning.

—The Blue Mountains bordering Berks county, Pa. on the north are burning in all directions, and in the neighborhood of Shenandoah the flames are spreading. The towns of Gilman's Depot, N. J., and Brisbin, Pa., were entirely destroyed Friday, the inhabitants being compelled to flee for their lives. About fifty square miles of timber lands were burned over near Ashland, Pa., and the town of Thompson in Tiogo county, Pa., was also consumed.

—April 27 the steamer Devon picked up two lifeboats belonging to the State Line steamship State of Florida, and April 23 a sailing craft signalled the City of Rome that she had a shipwrecked crew on board. From these facts it is believed that the State of Florida was wrecked, but the presumption is strong that all the passengers were saved. The State Line manager thinks that an explosion of dynamite caused the wreck, as it is supposed that there were dynamiters on board.

—The Van Buren county (Michigan) poorhouse, near Hartford, was destroyed by fire early Wednesday morning, thirteen persons perishing in the flames. The remains of but one of the victims was recognizable, the calcined remnants of the other twelve fitting into an ordinary coffin-box.

—A cyclone at Del Rio, Texas, Thursday night destroyed the new Episcopal church, swept away several cabins and twisted many structures out of shape. One person was killed and five seriously wounded.

—The forests and mountain sides in portions of New York were burning last week, and the atmosphere of New York city, Newburg and other towns was filled with smoke. Whitehaven was threatened by the flames Friday, but the Wilkesbarre fire department and the whole population subdued the fire. The Blue Mountains are blazing and the smoke and ashes have alarmed the citizens of Washington, N. J. Railway bridges have been destroyed and a large quantity of lumber consumed.

—Four men Wednesday morning attempted to rob the Barber County Bank, at Medicine Lodge, Kan., killing the cashier and fatally wounding the bank president. At a late hour the same night they were lynched by the infuriated people who followed them from the bank to the place where they surrendered, about three miles from the town. The murderers were cowboys and roughs.

—The explosion of dynamite, which occurred at Elletsville, Ind., last week Monday, was the most horrible accident that ever occurred in that part of Indiana. A house was discovered to be on fire, and numerous persons rushed to the fire, which had gained such headway that it could not be stopped. A number of persons turned their attention to pulling down the smoke house. Only a few boards had been torn off when an old pot, which contained eight rolls of giant powder and several caps, and which was hanging on a nail inside the smoke house fell and exploded. The explosion was terrific, and nearly all the persons standing close to the house were terribly mangled. One was killed and four mortally wounded.

FOREIGN.

—While the horse-ferry at St. Albert's was crossing the Nicolet river the bottom broke through. Seven persons were drowned.

—The ship Antine, of Drammen, Norway, was wrecked Wednesday night in a northeast gale and sleet storm, five miles east of Wolfe Island Station, Magdalen Islands. She broke up immediately. Nineteen lives were lost. The second mate is the only survivor.

—In the British Commons Friday Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Conservative, gave notice of a motion that "the House regrets the course the government has taken has not tended to promote the success of General Gordon's mission, and that steps to secure his personal safety have been delayed."

—The London News prints Khartoum dispatches dated April 21. Everything is reported safe. Trade will be carried on with El Mahdi's men in case Khartoum is taken. The Greek merchants are already in correspondence with El Mahdi with the view of the establishment of commerce.

—Sir Samuel Baker in a letter refers to Gen. Gordon's appeal to the millionaires of England and America. He asks whether there can be a more terrible example of faithlessness on the part of a Government than this. He proposes that the Sultan supply 5,000 nizams, India 10,000, and England 5,000 troops to relieve Gen. Gordon, half the force to converge toward Berber from Suakim and the rest to proceed up the Nile from Cairo. Orders have been sent to Cairo to establish a special messenger post to convey dispatches to Gen. Gordon. Every village between Berber and Khartoum is reported in rebellion, and the rebels are entering Berber.

—Four dynamite cartridges were found in sections of the Parliament buildings at Toronto, Ont., Monday last, with wire and fuses attached. The affair causes great excitement. It is believed the men were frightened off before they had an opportunity to fire the fuses.

—It is stated that Osman Digna sent a message to King John, of Abyssinia, through friendly Sheiks, threatening to attack Abyssinia unless the Christians of that country become Mussulmans.

—Two explosions occurred in the magazine at Havana, Cuba, last Tuesday. The effects were terrible. The dead number twenty-one and the wounded seventy-nine. The latter were scattered all over town, and were wounded by falling debris. Many were seriously injured. Of a detachment of twenty-seven soldiers in the magazine at the time of the explosion eight escaped unhurt. The magazine contained one million cartridges, two hundred thousand kilograms of powder, and one barrel of dynamite. Several churches and many houses were seriously damaged. The second shock was stronger than the first and was not caused by an explosion of gas, but an explosion of the magazine. The first shock was caused by powder which was drying in the open air.

The statue in honor of Chief Justice John Marshall erected by the Bar and Congress of the United States was unveiled at Washington Saturday at noon, at the foot of the stairs on the west front of the Capitol. For thirty-three years he was the greatest judge that ever sat upon the American bench. True patriots must rejoice that he left on record, in his letter to Edward Everett, a condemnation of the lodge of which he had been a member: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good, which might not be effected by safe and open means." To another he wrote that he did not remember of having been in a lodge since 1793. Let the people honor him.

The Methodist General Conference meeting through this month in Baltimore has been shocked by honest, rough, plain-speaking Dr. Hatfield of the First M. E. church of this city. The reputation of this body for years upon the subject of elections has been such as we expect from a caucus of politicians who have no creed but to elect their man. Chaplain McCabe offered a resolution last week Monday for an early election of new bishops so as to cut short the caucusing which was painfully apparent and increasing. Dr. Hatfield, amid loud cries of order and frequent interruptions, said. "Most sincerely do I wish that we had in the discipline, along with the law that provides that we meet on the first day of May, an other provision that on the second day the general conference should come together, and spend one or two hours on their knees in prayer, and take an informal vote without any conversation, or caucusing, or log-rolling, or wire-pulling—I don't care what you call it." The two eminent Methodists did not carry their point, for the election is fixed for the 15th inst., but they got on record a good testimony that will bear its fruit in due season.

Senator Edmunds left his seat as chairman of the Senate the other day to move that the name of General Grant be placed on the retired list of the army. Whether Mr. Edmunds was moved by a spirit of prophecy, and knew that the tremendous failure of last week was about to transpire, or knew from private information of the tottering condition of the ex-President's affairs, it comes to the same end—the only good such a vote of Congress would do General Grant would give him a little money—$10,000 or $12,000 or such a matter. No one is so stupid as to suppose that it would add a feather's weight to his honors heaped upon him. Since the events of last week, it becomes the friends of Gen. Grant to insist on the withdrawal of the Edmunds' resolution. His failure in business does not seem to be dishonorable, only a too careless confidence in two rash boys and a possible rascal who was his partner. His property, large through private gifts and the profits of his salary as public officer, is swallowed up in the loss; but there remains the New York Times fund of a quarter million, which yields $15,000 annually and which is invested out of his own reach and of his boys. Let this suffice. It is the gift of rich men, some of whom owed perhaps their wealth to some whisky-ring transaction during his administration. But let not the dishonor of grabbing at the treasury because he has let his children squander his fortune be attached to the name of one who has been so honored of his country.

The English government is not without some apprehension respecting the vote on a resolution of censure for temerity in the affair of Egypt and the Soudan. The decision of the cabinet to withdraw the victorious army of Gen. Graham from the Red Sea and not push on to the Nile and the aid of Gen. Gordon was doubtless in the interest of peace and in harmony with the counsel of that intrepid man. But the revolt of the tribes of the Soudan has extended until Gordon is surrounded in Khartoum with a force and supplies enough to hold his ground for some time, but the end must be inevitable and fatal to him. Already it is reported that the El Madhi has offered a fabulous sum for his head, and Arab assassins are as cruel now as in the days of Hassan. By any route an English army must suffer from the severe climate and be exposed to frequent and sudden attacks, with no assurance of reaching Khartoum in time to do any good. Gordon, himself, realizing the whole position of affairs sent a dispatch April 16th, saying: "So far as I understand the situation you state, there is no intention of sending relief here or to Berber. You refuse me Zobehr Pasha. I consider myself free to act according to circumstances. I shall hold on as long as I can. If I can suppress the rebellion, I shall do so; otherwise I shall retire to the equator and leave you the indelible disgrace of abandoning the garrisons of Senaar, Kassala, Berber, and Dongada, with the certainty that you will eventually be forced to smash up El Mahdi under great difficulties if you would retain in Egypt." The idea of cutting his way through the tribes of the upper Nile and overcoming the natural difficulties of a route to the Congo river would occur to none less bold and confident of his power over the natives. Whether obliged to proceed to this extremity or not, no worshiper of the God whom Gordon worships with a remarkable faith, no lover of peace and justice among men—the mission which called him to Egypt—can think of his present extremity without sympathy and a prayer for his rescue.

Few Englishmen of this century have achieved such universal and deserved renown as this hero now cooped up on the Nile. It is not far to go to find the reason of this homage of Christendom. It is the same dauntless and intrepid spirit which men are now recognizing in Cromwell, the Great Protector, as inspired by the deepest religious sentiments. What can make heroes like the courage inspired by Christianity? the conviction that an Almighty God rules in the affairs of men, and that to put one's self in the way of his providence and to sink all earthly ambitions in the ocean of his will, is the way of a true and useful life? Gordon's convictions are thus given in the English Sunday Magazine: "The unconventional character of his religion is apparent on every page of his letters. He is deeply impressed with the feeling that the worldly favor now shown toward the outward forms of Christianity endangers its original purity and power. Especially he is revolted by the idolatry of respectability, and reputation, and comfort, too often characteristic of outwardly flourishing churches. 'I will tell you a story,' he says, 'of eighteen hundred and forty-eight years ago. There was a workman of Bethlehem who did not agree with the great teachers of an old religion, who answered them roughly, and who did not conform to their views, or pay them the attention to which they were accustomed. He was always in the slums with very dubious characters. This annoyed the church class. 'Why do you frequent those slums?' He said, 'These slums need me to go to them; for they are sick at heart, and I bear them good news. I tell them they are worth something, in spite of their ill deeds. I tell them their God is a merciful God, and that he has worked out their salvation for them, not for their merits.' . . . His strong rebukes were against the white-robed, clean, respectable people who thought they were everything that was good because they had prayer-meetings and sacrifices, and washed their hands before eating. Well, you know this story. The good people could not bear the home thrusts they received, and so they murdered him."

OBSTRUCTION TACTICS.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES, A. M.

A Frenchman is reported to be teaching an ass to talk. In our day this is a work of supererogation, as may be seen in our House of Commons, and even in some of our churches, where the asses need somebody to keep them quiet. In the days of Balaam such an event was a novelty and might be productive of good, but we live in a different age. In the legislature of our country we are perplexed with the talkers who are showing their want of patriotism by hindering the progress of public business by an incessant flood of scurrilous talk.

Such men as Lord Randolph Churchill, Mr. Wharton, and a few others who are more anxious for office than for the good of the nation, are impediments to the progress of legislation. The traditions of gentlemanhood and anxiety for the prosperity of the nation are ignored by the very men who are deriving their incomes, and have received their titles, through an ancestry whom the country rewarded for services which at the time were deemed important, but which many at the present time deem far otherwise.

As a result of this conduct there is setting in a strong tide of communistic feeling which augurs changes in the constitution of a sweeping kind. The foundations of the wealthy families are being examined, how they have received their estates, how they have dealt with the public money, and how wars have been started and carried on for their aggrandizement. Every act of folly and wickedness is being noted and in due time if continued will be avenged. Sir. W. Harcourt declares that it is impossible to pass any bill on any subject whatever. A number of great bills promised by government are waiting to be brought in, but the way is blocked, and progress in any direction is impossible. A paralyzed Parliament mocks the hope of the nation. It seems to us that the Conservatives have made up their minds that no real business shall be done. They are opposing the Franchise Bill, not because they believe in the dangers to the state which they conjure up, but because they are afraid it will put an end to the reign of wealth and privilege. To assail a measure, the fundamental principles of which they have themselves accepted on the ground that it does not contain some thing which they say it ought to include, is a course alike fractious and mischievous. Fair fighting would gain them credit, but mud throwing gains them contempt. The rules of the House were made for gentlemen, but now that there is a scarcity of gentlemen, why do not statesmen of both parties show a little common sense and make rules adapted to the persons who have managed to wriggle their way into the House?

There is too much red-tape. The doctrine that is now being taught, that it is not the first business of the legislature to legislate, must be reversed, and every facility must be given to Parliament to do its work. The evil is great, and the remedy must be found which will bring our legislature into a more efficient state, when it can pass laws adapted to the growing wants and aspirations of the people.

Grimsby, England, April, 1884.

GOD'S WITNESSES.

BY ELDER A. SIMS.

In the former part of Isa. 43d God speaks to his ancient people Israel, of the mighty and wonderful deliverances he had wrought out for them, and his constant care and love for them. Though they had been rebellious and had constantly deserted him, yet he tells them that they were to "Fear not;" that is, they were not to be afraid that he would on that ground, utterly forsake them. But he would, on the contrary ultimately gather together all the scattered portions of their great race, and bring them into their own land once more. He then challenges the worshipers of idols to produce such convincing proofs of the divinity of their gods, as those instances of his power and foreknowledge. "Bring forth the blind people that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears. Let all the nations be gathered, and let the people be assembled; who among them can declare this, and show us former things? Let them bring forth their witnesses that they may be justified, or let them hear and say, It is truth." As much as if he had said, "Let all those who ignore me, and are unbelievers in my rightful claim to the character and name of God, bring forth their evidence that they, or those in whom they trust, can do what I have done, and foretell things to come, as I have foretold them." He then tells his people Israel, that they themselves could testestify to the truth of what he had said; that his predictions and promises of help made in former days had been fulfilled; that his prophets had declared what he would do, and they had seen those very things accomplished. "Ye are my witnesses saith the Lord."

Notice

1. The character of these witnesses.

(1) They are personally acquainted with the facts of the case. One of the most necessary qualifications required in a person who is called upon to give evidence in a court of law, is personal knowledge of what he testifies. It would be useless and absurd to ask one who is totally ignorant of all the facts of the case, to act as a witness. Now God's witnesses are experimentally acquainted with those things of which they are required to testify. Their language is:

> "What we have felt and seen,
> With confidence we tell,
> And publish to the sons of men
> The signs infallible."

His people of old beheld with wondering eyes his mighty deeds and ineffable glory. Later on in the dispensation of grace, Peter—to show that he and his brother disciples had not been deceived, nor misled by mere phantoms, or strong imaginations,—declared that they "had not followed cunningly devised fables, when they made known the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty." Just as a child is able, from personal knowledge, to testify concerning his parents, so the people of God, from their experimental acquaintance with him, are in a position to witness authoritatively and practically of divine things.

(2) They are reliable and impartial. It is sometimes the case in an earthly court of law, that witnesses—though called upon to swear that they will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—do not always adhere strictly to veracity, but give false evidence. But God's appointed witnesses are not of this character. They are neither impostors nor liars; but men in whom dwells the spirit of grace and truth. It is therefore a moral certainty that while they remain of this character, their evidence will be unimpeachable.

2. Of what are they witnesses?

(1) Of the truth of Scripture. For many years the world has furnished us with men who have not blushed to avow their disbelief in the sacred doctrines of the Bible. With a boldness and zeal worthy of a better cause, they have openly denied that the precious word of inspiration came from God, or can claim to be an authentic book. Now if a man brings an accusation of robbery or murder against a certain party, and can produce different persons who saw the deed performed, the guilt of the accused is at once established. Without resorting to any other forcible arguments we might adduce in proof of the truthfulness of Scripture, we reverently bring the Word of God, and ask, "Are there any who have witnessed its prophecies and promises fulfilled? Are there those who have seen, with their own eyes, its wonderful declarations and records accomplished?" God himself answers these questions, and says to his people of ancient times, and to his people of to-day: "Ye are my witnesses."

Further, what about the numerous declarations of the Bible respecting the doctrines of Calvary, and that through the death of Christ guilty men are able to find peace with God? Has this statement ever been verified? Has any one ever found this announcement to be true, by having found peace through faith in Christ? Blessed be God, there are thousands of living souls all over Christendom, who can joyfully exclaim "We are witnesses." This is only one thing in the Scripture to the truth of which God's witnesses can testify. There are thousands of precious promises; respecting every one of which a vast number of glad hearts can say, with their hands placed upon the very words—"They are true—gloriously true—for they have been fulfilled in our own experience. It tells me, that if I call upon God in time of trouble, he will hear my cry. And—all glory to his name—he has done this thousands of times."

(2) Of the fact that Christianity is divine. Skeptical men take great delight in scornfully asking, "Where is your proof that the religion of the Bible is divine?" Ignorant, but honestly disposed persons—in their efforts to decide between the claims of false systems, and those of the Scriptures—have asked, "How are we to know that the system you call Christianity, is of God?" These questions have already been partly answered, by the evidence we have adduced of the truth of Scriptural fulfillment. We can further answer these enquiries by referring to the miraculous power of Christianity—a power which is absolutely impossible for any mere human system to exert. If all previous dispensations have been stamped with a divine authority, by the wonderful displays of omnipotent power that have accompanied them—if the plagues of Egypt, the standing still of the sun and moon; the raising to life of the dead by God's prophets, and other equally striking miracles—if these events were witnessed by thousands of Jews, and regarded as unanswerable proofs of revealed religion—Christianity can also bring forward evidence of the same incontrovertible nature; and, in answer to the question of men, "Is the religion of the Bible divine?"—our God points to the countless millions of Adam's race, who, though they were spiritually dead, have been by Christianity made alive—not merely reformed—but actually made alive; yes, made "new creatures in Christ Jesus." God says to them, "Ye are my witnesses." Every truly converted soul is a living witness that Christianity is divine.

(3) They are witnesses of the comfort and hope of religion. There is often a period in the history of every individual, while in his natural state, when he most earnestly wishes he had some one, or some thing to console him. Especially is this true when trouble, sickness or death, comes upon him. The benighted heathen often feel this. Infidels and skeptics of every class, with all their loud boasting, feel this. The vilest and most wicked feel it. Every branch of the human race feels it. And thousands of times the inquiry has been privately and publicly asked—asked by throbbing hearts and quivering lips, asked in the rich man's palace, and in the poor man's cot, asked by the learned and illiterate, "Is it possible for me to find a religion that will provide me with an antidote for all my sorrows, assuage all my griefs, sweeten every bitter cup, lighten every burden, be a light to me in darkness, and a lasting source of solid joy when all other fountains are dried up?" "I have tried," says the anxious soul, "various systems that pretended to be cure-alls for man's complaints. I have tried good works. I have tried refinement and education. I have tried polite society. I have tried many things, that had no Christ in them, and I am nothing better. What can that system, you call Bible salvation, do for me? Infidelity laughs at it, and ridicules it; but is it in its power to satisfy my inmost cravings, and give me peace?" In answer to all such inquiries, a voice from heaven answers. And to the many thousands who in the deepest poverty have felt contentment, in the most acute pain have been made patient, in the darkest hours of sorrow and anguish have felt unutterable comfort, and who, when deserted by friends, stripped of all earthly bliss, tossed about on the waves of persecution, shut up in dungeons, loaded with iron chains, and streaming with blood from their many wounds have felt divinely happy—this voice I say, speaks to these living arguments, and says, "Ye are my witnesses."

"But," says one, "you tell us what Christianity can do for man in life. That is very well—but I have a consciousness within me, that there is an existence beyond the grave. And I want to know if this religion can lighten up the future, and afford me, in the hour of death, certain hope that I am going to a blissful state. Will it soothe my dying pillow, take from me all fear respecting the great hereafter, and fill my mind with peace?" He—only he who has conquered sin and the grave, and brought immortality to light by the Gospel can answer these questions. To that aged disciple on yonder bed, with wrinkled brow and wornout frame, just tottering into the grave, who exultingly exclaims, "All is well;" to that illustrious but now sainted man, John Petty, who, when dying said, "Draw the curtains aside, that the waves of glory may roll over me;" to that noble band of martyrs, who at the stake passed away in triumphant joy to Paradise; to the countless millions who, in their last moments, testified to the blessed reality of Christ's religion—the foretaste they had of what was to come—and who died in sure and certain hope of a blissful resurrection—to all these he says, "Ye are my witnesses."

IS SECRECY A SIN? NO!

There! Some readers I dare say will lift their eyes and hands in amazement and ask: What! if secrecy is not a sin why does the Cynosure talk so much against it?

When man was created he was like all else which then existed—"very good." Such is the record. The first act of secrecy was after sin had been committed and the guilty ones hid themselves from their Lord for the first time. But the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, restores to man the right use of secrecy and tells us to pray to our Father in secret, to do alms or relieve sufferers in secret and to let not our left hand know what our right doeth. Thus we have a right and a wrong use for the faculty of secrecy which is a gift of God to man for use, but not abuse.

It is then an important point to know where to draw the line between the two ways of using secrecy. Another endowment of man is the love of property. Thus a child seizes an article it likes and tries to keep it; or another more advanced may brag of knowledge greater than that of its companion, and say, "give me that cent and I'll tell you something about Johnny Smith if you promise not to tell any one!" This is an abuse of the love of money, and the love of secrecy, and yet, so natural and common that many people would only laugh at it.

Or, say that a political convention is called. About the first thing done is to bind the whole to abide by the unknown successful nominee of the majority, even if that nominee should be much disapproved by the good sense and moral sentiment of some of those in the convention. The principle is dangerous, but plausible, and is often adopted for party purposes. No man should ever surrender his personal conscience to mere party. He may however act from expediency where conscience does not forbid.

The error consists in deluding, or being deluded into any promises to conceal what you do not know until told. No promise to conceal can rightfully be made until after the matter is communicated. And then to reveal or not must be left to one's own conscience. No mortal man has a right to bind another's conscience, and it is a sin to do so or to have it done. All such binding by promise or by oath is sin, and serve not God but the devil. "Let your yea be yea, and nay, nay. Whatsoever is more to these cometh of the evil one." T. H.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—Thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations.

MY BRETHREN:—The greatest abomination that I know of is Freemasonry. It is not of American origin, but has been brought into the country from other nations. It is as bad as anything that that supposed great Master Mason Solomon ever desecrated Jerusalem with by bringing in his foreign wives. In an old manuscript recently discovered, dating somewhere from the year 120 to 160 of our era, called "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," Freemasonry is utterly prohibited in these words, viz.:

"Thou shalt not forswear thyself, thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not revile, thou shalt not bear malice, thou shalt not be double-minded nor double-tongued; for a snare of death is the double tongue. Thy speech shall not be false nor empty, but filled with doing. Thou shalt not be covetous, nor rapacious, nor a hypocrite, nor malicious, nor arrogant. Thou shalt not take evil counsel against thy neighbor. Thou shalt hate no man."

Thus are the traits of the lodge prohibited.

Nay, this manuscript is still more explicit, if possible, where it says, "Thou shalt judge justly, thou shalt not respect persons in convicting for transgression." But above all it prohibits any one from being "a purifier."

Now that arch infidel himself, Voltaire, one of the early fathers of the lodge, not only acknowledges, but claims, that the initiation into the secret mysteries of the ancients was considered an act of purification from worldly sins. Modern, or Voltairean Freemasonry teaches the same thing. Hence, by the term "purifier," which the teaching of the apostles prohibited, we are to understand clearly and unquestionably that the "ancient and honorable" Freemason is implied. That is, thou shalt not be a Freemason.

My friends, by looking at the 9th to 12th verses of the 18th chapter of Deuteronomy, you will see what kind of pure stuff ancient Freemasonry was made of. Nor is it essentially any different now at the present day. For the spirit that inspires and animates the lodge is not the Holy Spirit, but it is the same spirit that animates the clairvoyant, the astrologer, the Voudooist, the spiritualist and the hooker-shop. The mere trick of calling Freemasonry "honorable" deceives none but them who wish to be deceived.

But my friends, while I quote the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles" against Freemasonry, I must confess that I have not yet conceived an entire faith in the authenticity of that manuscript.

Yet after all, my friends, what need is there of any farther evidence than that of the Gospels and their expounder St. Paul to convince us that no greater abomination was ever practiced than Freemasonry? It is organized, deliberate untruth. The Christian father who by his example leads his son into the purification offered by the lodge, is far more perversely stupid than was the ancient father who passed his son through the fiery lustrations of the ancient pagan mysterics.

My friends, take heed of the general rule that your vote should follow your prayers; for while you may pray for the Freemason, you should never vote for him, unless indeed your prayers for his conversion have first been answered. So MOTE IT BE!

A PLEA FOR PEACE.

Not reformation only, but regeneration is the demand of Christianity, of every individual, of every people, and the whole unified family of the world's nations. It is religion that is to be the basis of all really hopeful and permanent secular reform, and not secular reform that is to bring in by and by a perfect religion. My conviction is profound that the preaching of the Gospel must go before any pervasive self-supporting success of great philanthropies, even in pagan nations, and that we must look for the world's regeneration in a large part before we can expect its reformation throughout any very wide and untroubled portion of its now vexed, harassed, degraded populations. Take the most advanced of present nations, and how near are they to having this inner wisdom of self-surrender to God? Do they possess any considerable amount of the genius that comes from harmony with the divine laws of the human spirit, and of the development of history at large? Only that inner wisdom and that genius can give us the height of human progress. As in the individual an inner regeneration must precede any thorough outward reformation, so in the whole world, which is made up of individuals, we must look to religion as the basis of secular reform. Nothing less stern than this is fit to be preached in the name of science or revelation.

1. The growth of Christianity is already so great that it is responsible for the maintenance not only of national but also of international morality.

2. But international morality cannot be maintained without leading to the reformation of international law.

3. The united Christian sentiment of the globe has power to seize by the throat and break the neck of any unjust international movement.

4. As the slave trade, piracy and other international evils have been abolished, so all the abuses that remain in the conduct of nations toward each other must be reformed.

5. It must be proclaimed unflinchingly that even commerce is not to stand in the way of righteous judgment in the affairs of nations.

Why did Great Britain recently make war with Egypt? Because of commercial reasons. There was likelihood that Egypt would run away with the funds that were needed to pay certain European creditors, and so England and France declared war. I am not saying that, everything considered, this war was wholly unjustifiable; but I have immense sympathy with John Bright, who resigned his position in a proud English cabinet simply because he felt that commerce in England's relations to Egypt had throttled moral law, and that he believed the moral law should throttle every unjust thing in commerce.

6. It is chiefly to-day the inertness, the greed, and occasionally the moral unscrupulousness of nominal Christians, under temptation of gain, which maintains the worst international abuses of the world.

Make the nominal Christians real ones and the principal evils of this earth will vanish out of it as the snow drifts disappear under the vernal heat. As slavery was abolished so a multitude of abuses yet notorious in the international relations of populations called Christian would disappear were once nominal Christians made aggressive ones.

7. Commerce itself, in spite of its selfishness, and even on account of it, may become a chief support of international reform.

8. Communication between nations is becoming so swift and pervasive that it must lead to contact among nations, and contact to conference, and conference to concert, and concert to co-operation, and co-operation to virtual moral confederation.

9. What is wanted is not a union of Christian or even of Protestant or English speaking nations, but an alliance consistent at once with self-government in the different nations, with a cosmopolitan and Christian international ism in their concerted action.

Not purposing the formal political confederation of Christendom, but its close moral alliance, part with part throughout the whole earth, I defend a number of definite measures that would secure, if carried out, what scholars have been asking for these fifty years—universal peace, justice in the relations of strong nations with weak, and a general advance of Christian principle through all the departments of international law. Let us name some measures directly promotive of peace required by international morality.

1. Arbitration in place of war in every case to which it can be applied; treaties including agreements to use arbitration before resorting to war.

2. The complete abolition of the slave trade on the sea.

3. A high court of arbitration in case of disputes between two nations.

4. An annual conference of nations with a view to facilitate intercourse, prevent abuses, and secure international peace.

When the Panama canal is cut why should the United States not guarantee its military neutrality? All wars should be kept out of it and the Suez canal, and out of the seas sixty miles from either end of each. The interests of neutrals in modern European wars have become so great that the great powers have often guaranteed the military neutrality of Belgium, the Rhine and Switzerland. In Australia I heard statesmen saying that after the Panama canal is cut, the time will come when Cobden's doctrine will look practical; that the great highways of commerce on the oceans should have their neutrality guaranteed by the chief powers of Christendom. The time is coming when to the English speaking nations of the world and the self-reformed hermit nations of Asia, the Pacific ocean will be only what the Mediterranean was to the Roman Empire.

International reform you say is a mere kite flown in the winds of philanthropic discussion, and is useful only as a toy. Your Sumner was accustomed to fly it, however, and so was your Longfellow:

"Down the dark future, through long generations,
War's echoing sounds grow fainter, and they cease;
And like a bell with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ say, 'Peace.'"

Charles Sumner, through his whole career, was a defender of the principles on which scholars are trying to build universal peace. He believed in war, indeed, such as our Northern States fought to abolish slavery and maintain the Union, but his aim was to spread the white robe of peace around the whole earth. This same kite has been flown by John Bright, by Cobden, by Emmanuel Kant, by Bentham, by President Woolsey, by David Dudley Field.

When the suspension bridge was built at Niagara the first thing done was to send a boy's kite over the chasm. It carried a silken cord across the roaring abyss beneath it, and that cord drew after it wires, and the wires cables, and the cables a bridge which now bears the thunder of traffic between the two empires. Just so this thought of a league of advanced populations, of this idea that it is the duty of Christendom to maintain international morality, and thus to lay the basis for reform of positive international law, this scheme of an Anglo-American alliance, this theory that it is possible and desirable to bring all advanced nations together in a cosmopolitan moral confederation, may be a kite flown in the winds of discussion; but if you fly it often enough and long enough on both sides the Atlantic and Pacific, and in northern and southern hemispheres, it may ultimately carry over the abysses of international prejudice a silken cord of Christian unity, and that cord may draw after it wires and cables, and by and by a bridge, which shall bear the weight of the heaviest international reforms, and uphold at last the blessed Christ as he walks into the dawn of the millennium day.—Joseph Cook.

THE OBJECT OF PRAYER.

BY ROBERT ARMSTRONG, D. D.

To whom should prayer be addressed? With the Bible in our hands but one answer can be returned to this question. The only proper object of religious worship is Jehovah, the one living and true God. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve," said the Saviour to the tempter. But prayer is a part, and a very important part of religious worship, therefore it should be addressed to God only. To pray to saints or angels, or to address our prayers to God through the intervention of such is idolatry, as real as though we prayed to an idol made of gold, or silver, or wood, or stone, or iron, or any other material. Prayer addressed to any object but Jehovah alone is idolatry. It is to God that we are to let our "requests be made known." (Phil. 4:6). But why attempt to prove this? Who, that believes and understands the Bible, will deny it? To whom else should we pray? God alone knows our hearts, and, therefore, knows what we need, and what would be best for us in the circumstances in which we are placed. He only can hear our prayers, and can answer them. He, and none but he, can forgive our sins. "Who can forgive sins but God only?" And he, and he only can supply our wants; for his resources are inexhaustible. Therefore, to God only should we pray. It is scarcely necessary to say that the heathen who pray to their "lords many and gods many" pray in vain, for their senseless deities can neither hear their prayers nor answer their requests. It is not in them to do good, neither is it in them to do evil; for "they have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not; they have ears, but they hear not; noses have they, but they smell not; they have hands, but they handle not; feet have they, but they walk not; neither speak they through their throat." Equally in vain do those pray who address God through the intervention of the Virgin Mary, saint, angel; for there is but "one Mediator betwixt God and men, the man Christ Jesus." Our prayers to be accepted, like every other part of divine worship, must be offered up in the way of God's own appointment.

The question has been raised, "May prayer be addressed to any of the persons of the Godhead? May we pray to the Son and the Holy Spirit as well as to the Father? Or must our prayers be addressed to the Father only?" As the different persons in the Godhead are equally divine; as the Son is God, and the Holy Spirit is God, equal with the Father, it would appear that prayer may be addressed to each of them. They are each the proper object of religious worship, and as prayer is a part of religious worship, it would seem right to address either in our prayers. The Scriptures, it is believed, furnish instances of prayer addressed to God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit, as well as God the Father. The first New Testament martyr, with his expiring breath prayed to the Second person of the Godhead. "And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God saying, Lord Jesus receive my spirit." (Acts 7: 59.) Then in Rev. 1: 4, 5, we have a prayer addressed to, or "grace and peace" asked from the different persons of the Godhead in common. It is admitted by all that the Father is meant in this passage by "him which is, and which was, and which is to come," and the Son is mentioned as "Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth;" hence the "seven Spirits which are before the throne" must mean the Holy Spirit in the perfection and diversity of his gifts and operations. The judicious expositor Scott says: "This is generally, and doubtless justly, interpreted of the divine Spirit with respect to the abundance, sufficiency, and variety of his gifts and graces and operations." That it cannot refer to any created spirits is evident from the fact that "the seven Spirits which are before the throne" are placed as an object of worship, on a perfect equality with the other persons of the Godhead. Unless then we charge the beloved disciple, while under the influence of inspiration, with giving divine worship to uncreated spirits, we must understand the Holy Spirit is intended. And if so, then we have prayer addressed to him. Then in the apostolic benediction, as recorded in 2 Cor. 13: 14, prayer is addressed to the Holy Spirit. Thus the Scriptures furnish authority for addressing prayer to any of the persons of the Godhead.

But while this is so, the ordinary way, according to the economy of redemption, is to pray to the Father, in the name, or through the mediation of the Son, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit. This seems to be the truth taught in the following passage: "For through him, we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father." (Eph. 2: 18). "Through him," that is through Christ, "we both," Jews and Gentiles, "have access by one Spirit," the Holy Spirit, "unto the Father." Here we are given to understand that it is through the mediation of Christ the Son, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit that both Jews and Gentiles have access to the Father. That there is no acceptable approach to the Father in prayer, or in any other act of worship, not through the mediation of Christ the Son, is abundantly evident from the Scripture. Hence such passages as the following: "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." (John 14: 6.) "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." (Jno. 14: 13.) "Whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name he will give it to you." (John 16: 23.) These passages make it abundantly evident that it is in the name of Christ that we are to pray to the Father. Equally evident is it that we pray with acceptance only when aided by the Holy Spirit. This truth is clearly taught in the following passages: "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." (Rom. 8: 26.) Therefore we are to pray to the Father, through the mediation of Christ, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit.

But the question may arise: "What is it to pray in the name of Christ? Is it simply to mention his name in our prayers?" No. I may mention his name in my prayers repeatedly; I may even say, "All this I ask in the name and for the sake of Jesus," and yet not pray in his name. To pray in his name implies the mention of it; but it includes far more. Any hypocrite might mention the name of the Saviour in his formal prayer. And perhaps among those to whom the Saviour will say in the day of judgment, "I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity," some may be found who pretended to pray in his name. To pray in the name of Jesus is to pray relying exclusively for acceptance upon the merits of his death, and the prevalence of his intercession. When, conscious of our own great need and unworthiness, we ask the Father, in virtue of the atonement work, and all prevalent intercession of Jesus to hear and answer our prayers, then we pray in his name. But if we do not rely on the merits of his death, and the prevalence of his intercession for acceptance, and for the bestowal of the blessings craved, we do not pray in his name, no matter how often it may be mentioned in our prayers.

This then being so, what are we to think of those prayers from which the name of Christ is purposely excluded, lest it should offend the ear of some ungodly listener? And such are the prayers offered in the Masonic lodge. No one can pray there Masonically in the name of Jesus; if there be none to object, and if the person leading in prayer be a professed Christian, he may recognize the mediation of Christ in his prayer, but he does so in violation of Masonic rules; he does not pray Masonically. Their prayers are addressed to God, not as the God of grace, but as the God of nature, as the "great Architect of heaven and earth;" consequently they are not Christian prayers. Not being offered in the name of Jesus, they cannot come up before the Father with acceptance; they must be a stench in Jehovah's nostrils. Such prayers are unworthy of Christian lips and Christian ears. It is a matter of astonishment how any real Christian can countenance by his presence such unchristian prayers. Such prayers insult the Father, dishonor the Saviour, and degrade the Christian who listens to them. As Christians, we should never go where we cannot carry our religion with us; nor should we ever listen to prayers from which the name of our Saviour is purposely excluded.—Christian Instructor.

REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT.

Did John C. Calhoun represent the South Carolina of Washington's days? When Jefferson Davis' shoulders caught the mantle of Calhoun as it fell, did he, Davis, represent the days of Marion and Sumpter, or even Prentiss and Foote? No; it is idle to claim anything of the kind. They represented the slave power and nothing else.

And so, we may ask, Have Senators Edmunds and Morrill represented the Vermont of '30–'60? No; nothing of the kind. They have represented the Masonic lodge and the partisan interests which the lodge manages. Mr. Morrill has always advocated the high tariff interests of Massachusetts while pretending to be a great friend of the Vermont farmer, whose interests the tariff crushes. Vermont, under her Masonic politics, has not only lost in moral character, but it is not worth as much on the scale of material well-being as it was fifty years ago.

The Senator's policy is a double-faced, Masonic one, under which any just interest would wither as it did under the slave power. And the statesmanship that is based on the Masonic lodge no more represents American institutions than did the statesmanship based on slavery. Nor does it represent that ideal character of Vermont for which a Presidential candidate is now sought in that quarter. The average Vermont politician took leave of Vermont character, and abandoned himself to the machinery of the lodge as early as 1860. This fact must be recognized and acted on, or the long list of party frauds and corruption will have no end. It is time that the Masonic dynasty, now of twenty or thirty years standing, should cease. VERMONTER.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

A MERITED CMMENDATION BY A SUCCESSFUL CONGREGATIONALIST PASTOR.

GALESBURG, Ill., May 8.

Said this brother to me in his study, "At the end of each year (Nov. 1st), before renewing my subscriptions, I look over my list of papers and select those that have been to me most helpful in my ministerial and pastoral work. I have read the Christian Cynosure for some time, and unhesitatingly accord to it the first place among the periodicals that come to my study."

Passing from a general to particular statements, he said, "I have never met the office editor, but I have for him a warm personal friendship. He has uniformly a sweet spirit and unwavering fidelity. His taste in selecting and arranging articles is excellent, to which he adds the happy faculty of anticipating the needs of a pastor on living questions, and furnishing in advance what others publish later. I get more facts, suggestions and inspiration from the Cynosure in discussing reform questions than from any other paper, and when it comes I invariably push aside whatever I am occupied with at the time, until I have glanced over its contents, if unable at the time to give it a careful reading." He added several other particulars and among them said, "When I want a religious poem for a Sabbath school concert I invariably go to my files of the Cynosure, where I am pretty sure to find just what I want."

It is certainly encouraging to know that the arduous labors of the editorial staff of our paper are appreciated, and that its weekly visits are helping and encouraging some of the faithful pastors who have not been known among the pronounced and prominent opponents of the secret lodge system. God only knows how many Christian workers are quietly rejoicing and receiving courage and inspiration from the weekly visits of the Cynosure, and while these good brethren are helped and blessed they should remember that the editors who toil and plan and forecast for their encouragement need their prayers and co-operation, and that there are those in their respective congregations who are suffering for the very truth and inspiration furnished each week to the readers of the paper they prize so highly.

DEPOT, GALESBURG, May 8, P. M.

Arrangements have been completed and notice given for me to lecture in Rev. Lindhal's church on Monday evening the 12th inst. This is the largest audience-room and has the most numerous membership of any church in the city. Both pastor and people stand firmly by their rule withholding church fellowship from the minor as well as the major secret societies.

I called on the pastors of several churches, and from all whom I met received words of encouragement. They promised, with one exception, to give notice of my lecture on Sabbath, and this brother expressed sympathy and took the question under advisement. Old friends greeted me warmly and extended the generous hospitality of their homes, for which they have my grateful acknowledgment.

The Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, at the old First Church was to me a very enjoyable and refreshing occasion. In the absence of the pastor, Miss Mary West conducted the meeting. The topic was home missionary work. The case of a converted Japanese who had recently entered Knox College, hoping to prepare for the work of the gospel ministry in his native land, was presented by Mrs. Webster and Mr. M. Willard, after which Miss West made a brief statement of the temperance work, especially among the children. She spoke of the "Band of Hope" that had been doing effective temperance work in the city for ten years, and was followed by some of the older members of the Band with statements of methods employed and results attained, which were very instructive.

My old classmate, Col. Clark E. Carr, one of the Republican electors at large, I found genial as ever and brimful of patriotism. The Colonel believes the Republican party is sound for the present contest, and said, "John A. Logan is square as a brick and straight as a line," but gave it as his opinion that a party would be formed on some new issue that would soon sweep the country. But," said he, "it will not be the issue made by the American party."

"Possibly," I said, "but whoever lives to look back over ten years of history that is now unwritten can judge better of that question than the most penetrating politician of to-day. Wendell Phillips, in 1879, said, when speaking of secret societies, 'This is the next great question that the American people must take up and decide.'"

No one can forecast the future with absolute certainty, but the vision of Mr. Phillips, guided by long and intimate knowledge of state and party politics, may prove as clear as that of one whose vision was bounded by nursery walls when the old hero of conflict was fighting in the forefront of a despised and hated handful of veteran Abolitionists.

MONMOUTH, May 9th, A. M.—I reached this city last evening, and after consultation it has been arranged for me to speak in the First U. P. church on Tuesday, the 13th inst., P. M. The pastor, Rev. T. H. Hanna, D. D., and other leading members whom I have met are very cordial. After seeing Dr. McMichael and such of the pastors as I can reach, I expect to go on to Kirkwood and arrange for meetings there if practicable.

THE GRAND ARMY RITUAL.

AN EX-COMMANDER AND CHAPLAIN TELLS HOW IT IS.

WINDSOR, Conn., May 5th, 1884.

I see by the Cynosure that the correctness of the Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, as published by E. A. Cook, has been called in question.

This may certify that I, Charles T. Collins, late Co. "C" 16th Reg't, C. V., was initiated in Nathaniel Lyon Post, No. 2, department of Connecticut, soon after its introduction into this State. (Introduced by Gen'l Logan.) Have occupied the positions of Officer of the Day, and Senior Vice Commander of said Post, Commander and Chaplain of the Post in Windsor, Ass't Inspector Gen'l and Judge Advocate on the staff of the Department Commander. I hereby certify to its correctness,—the Bible, coffin, crossbones, pickaxe and spade were part of the paraphernalia of the order. Yours respectfully,

CHARLES T. COLLINS.

WHAT "DEGREE" OF CONNECTION WAS THERE?

A pleasant little city, which I will not now name, enjoys prohibition. Of course strict prohibition is always as enjoyable as good health. But the officers had become slack, and it was very evident that a little German was selling liquor with impunity under a State license. An old resident who lived next door was much annoyed at night by their drunken carousals. Though very feeble he offered to testify when the ladies prosecuted. The justice's court was only two blocks away. The witness' summons was given to a policeman, who was also an old resident. After a long absence he returned, saying he could not find the witness, who, it was afterwards discovered, had waited in his house several hours, expecting to be subpœned. Now it being known that the policeman was a Knight Templar, oh, that some one "versed in the ancient mysteries" would condescend to tell us with mathematical precision how high (or low) the saloon-keeper had gone on the same road!

A. F. ACT.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible] intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

CALL FOR NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The National Convention of the American Party will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20, 1884, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, to revise the platform of the party, and transact such other business as may be brought forward.

Each State will be entitled to as many delegates as there are Congressional Districts in the State, and two delegates at large. These delegates may be chosen in such manner as each State shall determine, and they shall be furnished with credentials signed by the chairman of the State Committee, or by the member of the National Committee for that State.

Persons friendly to the cause, who are not delegates, or who are elected to represent organizations friendly to the party, will be admitted to all the privileges of the Convention except that of voting, and this privilege may be extended to them by the Convention provided the delegation of the State from which they come is not otherwise full. Signed— F. W. CAPWELL,

President.

E. D. BAILEY, Eastern Secretary.
J. P. STODDARD, Western Secretary.

THE ROCHESTER DELEGATION.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 7, 1884.

The American convention held in Rochester, May 6th, was opened with an address by Pres. J. Blanchard upon the object of the convention. After this a business meeting was called to order by State Agent W. B. Stoddard. Voted that J. D. Bell act as chairman pro tem and W. B. Stoddard recording secretary. The following officers were duly elected: H. De Jongh, president; Gen. A. W. Riley, vice-president; J. Edwin Seelye, secretary, and J. Sandry, treasurer. The following delegates to the National Convention, which convenes in Chicago, June 20th, were elected: Gen. A. W. Riley, Geo. W. Clark, H. De Jongh, Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rev. L. Wood, Rev. O. M. Owens, C. Roda, Rev. Carl N. Conrad.

Voted that officers of this convention be empowered to fill vacancies in the list of delegates and increase the number at pleasure. W. B. STODDARD,

THE WISCONSIN DELEGATION.

The Wisconsin State Central Committee of the American party met at Baraboo, April 30th, 1884, pursuant to notice. The meeting organized by choosing Capt. Wm. Wilson of Menomonie chairman, and J. W. Wood of Baraboo secretary.

The object of the meeting was stated to be to choose delegates to attend the National Convention of the American party to be held in Chicago, June 20, 1884, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States.

The following persons were chosen for the districts indicated:

1st District, J. W. Suidter of Sharon.
2d District, J. S. Dean of Waupun.
3d District, Isaac Bancroft of Monroe.
6th District, Enos Collins of Coloma.
7th District, J. W. Wood of Baraboo.
8th District, Capt. William Wilson of Menomonie.
9th District, Capt. Clayton Rogers of Hayward.

The 4th and 5th Districts remain to be filled.

Delegates at large, M. R. Britten of Vienna, W. W. Ames of Menomonie.

The delegates, if unable to attend personally, were authorized to appoint as substitutes suitable persons who could.

A WOMAN'S OPINION.

DOUD'S STATION, Iowa, May 1st, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We are heartily in sympathy with you in your endeavors to suppress the secret lodge. We believe that secretism as practiced in the lodge is one of the devil's most potent engines employed against church and state, and everything whereby we would honor and serve our Maker. We have always been and always expect to be an uncompromising opponent of lodge secretism, and have welcomed the Christian Cynosure in our family as one of the very best papers in the land for its fearless and unflinching opposition to the lodge, and for its religious and political purity. Notwithstanding its praiscworthy and high-toned precedents we imagine we see glimmerings of a probable departure from its heretofore unswerving adherence to the side of truth and right upon all those vital subjects engrossing the public mind. We have taken this idea from the action of the American party convention in Washington city, and the sentiments expressed by some of your correspondents, and you not giving even a word of protest against such a palpable wickedness.

We alludc to the probable accepting into the American party platform that most nefarious of all political tenets, woman suffrage, which all wise and good men and women should reject with utter abhorrence as our greatest enemy.

We have plenty of labors to perform in our prcsent position, and do not wish to be degraded to the level of politicians and voters, wherc it is only honorable for the other sex to exercise those prerogatives. It ought not to be expected of us to leave our proper place in which our Maker intended us to stay and where modesty and virtue are our safeguards against temptations, and where we are better fitted to rear and instruct in knowledge and virtue those who are dependent upon us for the virtuous training that is to distinguish them through life for their good works, and that they may have a happy termination of life in faith and hope of a better life to come. It is only by having intelligent and virtuous mothers that you may expect to have a virtuous people. Such mothers lay the foundation of the future character by implanting in the susceptible minds of the young those high and holy aspirations which will enable them to live honorable lives, and thus make our country happy and prosperous. But if we are not allowed to retain or are induced to leave our legitimate sphere, and are allowed or required to unsex ourselves and be man as well as woman, and become teachers, clerks, doctors, lawyers, office-holders, steamboat captains, public speakers and politicians, etc., where we will be thrown continually into the presence of the other sex in a very unusual way for us, we unwarily if not wittingly lose our modesty, and even if we do not mean it the change is so imperceptible we take no note of it till it is gone; then our strongest defence against vice being gone, we become unfit for wives or mothers, or the instructors and models for our children; and through time the divergence becomes wider and worse, till who can foresee the extent of the evil entailed on the coming generation.

We all should study the will of God as revealed to us in his Word more sincerely and thoroughly in relation to such momentous matters before we embrace them. When we read such texts as Gen. 3: 16; 1 Cor. 11: 8, 9; Eph. 5: 22, 23, 24; Col. 3: 18; 1 Tim. 2: 9–15; Tit. 2: 4, 5; 1 Pet. 3: 1, 5, 6, and others, which appears to be the will of God respecting us, we have no inclination to try to set them aside. We humbly accept the conditions, considering it the very best and only way to escape God's chastisements and to obtain his favor. In political affairs we have all confidcnce in the ability and integrity of the male part of the population to run the affairs of government without our voting, which would probably amount only to a greater number of votes without in the least changing the result: and considering the constitutional peculiarities pertaining to our sex, in all probability you would never be able to get more than one-half of the female vote at any one election, if it was eveu right for us to vote. So far as my limited knowledge goes you will be sadly disappointed in the idea that the female vote will always be on the right side no matter what question is considered. In all events, however, we should not do evil that good may come.

We are perfectly aware that the more retired and modest we are the more deserving and beloved we will be, and the more powerful will our influence for good be felt on the rising generation. We have no doubt of our ability to vote intelligently; but we feel it would be a great sin to waste our precious time and turn our energy out of its proper channel by assuming political functions, and we verily believe that not one really religious, intelligent and thinking woman in a thousand desires to be a voter. It appears to us that this iniquitous scheme was gotten up and is propagated mostly by those whose morals, to say the least, are not of a very superior order. And why some apparently good people identify themselves with it is a wonder to us. It certainly betrays in them a lack of a proper investigation of the subject. L. H.

WANTED: A PARTY OF PROGRESS.

The great political need of this country at the present time would seem to be a party of progress, a party that would pursue a policy of reform from love of reform itself, and not merely in obedience to popular clamor. Reforms of various kinds are now urgently needed, and they can be properly dealt with only by a party earnestly devoted to the work. * * * A party whose leaders take no interest in reforms, and will not take a step in advance until driven by public opinion to do so, is wholly inadequate to the work; yet this is the only kind of party we have in the country now. The Republican party held the right position on the slavery question, and did a great work for progress in setting the bondmen free; but since the slavery issue passed away, the party leaders have rarely taken up important reforms except when public opinion has compelled them to do so. As for the Democrats, they have for many years been avowedly a conservative party, and only a radical change of policy on their part can convert them into a party of progress.

The people, however, are determined on having certain reforms effected, and they will not much longer endure a policy of inaction from both their national parties. The American people are determined on a career of progress. Already their material progress has been wonderful, and intellectual and moral progress will not be long delayed. They demand, therefore, a progressive policy on the part of their rulers, aud the party that will pursue such a policy is the party that will rule the country in the future. Politicians, then, would do well to give heed to this fact. It is of slight importance, comparatively, which party wins the election next autumn; but it is a question of no little interest what party will take its stand in the path of progress in the years to come. If party leaders are wise, therefore, they will look beyond the present year and the conditions of immediate success, and will adopt a policy that will bring their party into harmony with the progressive tendencies of the people, and make it a potent agency in promoting the national destiny.

But after we have said this, we are inclined to add that the present condition of affairs has its compensations, and that there are, moreover, indications that the old political order may be to some extent passing away. Perhaps, after all, even political reforms may be accomplished in the future in America without the identical partisan methods which heretofore have generally been thought necessary. There are many reforms to be made in the system of government, and in our national and State legislation, which can be, perhaps, quite as well accomplished by those intelligent on these subjects inside the various established parties. This way of doing things is now in great favor, and may be more and more useful, perhaps even necessary, as our population increases and extends, especially in a country covering such an enormous area as ours, and with such varying exigencies and social interests. At any rate, while we are waiting for the great reform party of the future, each citizen can be his own party of reform, and "make himself felt" not only individually, but by acting in concert with others who are with him interested in special reforms.—The Century for May.

—Bro. S. E. Starry: "The Iowa Central Committee will meet in Cedar Rapids on the 15th inst. to appoint delegates to the Chicago Convention, June 20th. Iowa must be on hand with a full delegation if possible. Today the Masons are laying the corner-stone of their temple in Cedar Rapids."

—J. M'Kelvey, New Wilmington, Pa.: "Ours is a 'Prohibition' platform to all intents and purposes, and the honest Prohibitionists can stand on it without sacrifice of any principle. As for those who are wedded to the idol, conversion is needed rather than a new platform. Don't yield one iota."

—The Onondaga county meeting at Syracuse last week appointed the following delegates to Chicago: Donald Kirkpatrick, N. Wardner, J. M. Pulford, Charles Merrick, Montgomery Merrick, D. S. Kinney, Z. Weaver, Robert Bowers, Emory Jones, S. M. Smith, W. H. Carter and Andrew Post. The officers of the county organization are: President, Donald Kirkpatrick: vice-president, Montgomery Merrick; secretary, N. Wardner; treasurer, Charles Merrick.

The New York Witness gives as fact the information that Gen. Joseph Hawley of Connecticut, the man who stands related to the Republican nominating convention of 1884, as Garfield did to the convention of 1880, is a total abstainer and a temperance lecturer. It is also known of him that he dared to vote against the Chinese bill, and closed the Centennial Exhibition on Sunday. His father was known in the early days of reform in this country as an unflinching, heroic advocate of freedom and equal rights. If the son be like unto him, the republicanism that was once based on a platform of "moral ideas" could give no surer manifestation of a return to its first love than his nomination.—Union-Signal.

A singularly pathctic and touching scene was witnessed in Justice Russell's court yesterday afternoon, when a gentlcman named William Adams, who lives on Park Row, together with his two daughters, all people evidently of superior surroundings, appeared before the court and requested that Mrs. Adams, the wife and mother, be fined a sufficient amount to detain her in the Washingtonian Home until she could be cured of an unfortunate desire for liquor which she had lately contracted, and which was causing most distressing results. The request of the family was complicd with, and a fine of $50 imposed.—Inter Ocean.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LODGE SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

MORSE, Kans., April 25, 1884.

I have been urged to send my name in as a candidate for admission to membership in an Odd-fellow lodge organized last winter at Stanley, a little town a few miles from this place. Of course I refuse to incorporate with any secret organization, and I frequently have to argue in favor of my position, hence I want a good work on Odd-fellowship, as that seems to be the form in which the beast is developing in this neighborhood just now.

This is only what I have been expecting for some time. This locality is, or has been, a hot-bed of the grange, and the leaders have worked faithfully for several years past to draw every person possible into that organization, and with good success, especially with young men and women. There seems to be a lagging in the interest of the grange, but the leaders are working hard as ever—but it is in the interest of the I. O. O. F.

This is what I have long since claimed: that the grange was only a stepping-stone by which to reach the other lodges. There are hundreds of people who would not join a Masonic or Odd-fellow lodge, but are drawn into the grange. After they get them into that it is a very easy matter to get them to go higher (or lower I should say) in the works of darkness.

I am told that when God instituted marriage he organized a secret lodge; that there is no argument in favor of the Christian church that cannot be used in favor of Odd-fellowship; that it holds or contains all that is in the church and more beside. These are some of the assertions made and which I have had to meet; and it does make me feel very bad to hear a man that professes to be a Christian stand up and assert that the church does not afford all that is necessary both for this life and that which is to come. In fact, I do think I have good reason to doubt that man's being a Christian, and yet how many of that class I can count around me.

To-day is a big day in Olathe for Odd-fellows. A great many have gone there from here. And here is a point to note: Last winter a convention was held in Olathe by the National Reform Association. How few there were that went to the trouble to go there to attend it! But let the Odd-fellows announce a parade and they go by the dozen. I think it a mistake that Mr. Feemster did not work up his part of that convention, and work not only in towns like Olathe, but in the villages in the country, as many people will not go far to a reform meeting, hence, the only way to reach them is to go to them.

LODGERY AND THE CHURCH.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am a reader of the Cynosure and I am in full sympathy with your reform work, and may your efforts be blessed of God to the complete overthrow of lodgery, and thus purify and cleanse the church from the least and last remains of a Christless Masonic religion. I wish to give a little of my experience with lodgery in the church.

When I was preaching several years ago for the Baptist church in Starrucca, Wayne Co., Pa., I preached a sermon on baptism and terms of communion. Some took exception to the plain dealing with the subject, and, as I am told from good authority, an ex-member of the M. E. church, who was a member of the Masonic lodge, was sent to Thompson, Pa., to get the Rev. J. T. Warner of the M. E. church to preach a sermon in reply. In Mr. Warner's sermon the following remarkable statement was made: "Elder Swan, the great Baptist revivalist, once cut a hole through the ice in the winter to baptize. The ice being about two feet thick, he cut steps down into the water, and in so doing cut a door into the church. He poked away the ice with his hands, and in attempting to baptize a young lady she in her struggles broke loose from his grasp, and was carried by the current under the ice and was drowned; and her remains were not found until the next spring after the ice thawed away. The brother who told me this said that he was well acquainted with the drowned lady and her family."

The sermon in which the above statement was made was preached in Starrucca, Wayne Co., Pa., April 5th, 1874.

I believed this to be a base fabrication, an unmitigated falsehood of the basest kind, and at once wrote Rev. Jabez S. Swan, widely known as the great Baptist revivalist, to know if any such circumstance, as related by Mr. Warner, had ever occurred during his ministry, and received the following reply: "While I was pastor of the Baptist church in Oxford, New York, some thirty-five years ago the story peddled by the Methodist minister was raised about my having lost a lady under the ice in attempting to baptize her. Satan made a capital mistake and located the affair in the surrounding sphere of my labors, so that the lie died of its own weight. I pronounce the whole thing a malicious falsehood."

Upon the receipt of this letter I gave notice that I would publicly read it, to disabuse the minds of those who heard him make the statement, and also wrote Mr. Warner to attend the meeting and hear the truth in the matter. I was soon informed that Mr. Warner was a secretist, and belonged to the Odd-fellows. All the Odd-fellows and Masons, as far as I know, took sides with the secretist Warner. I lived about 60 miles from Starrucca, and I wrote to Jesse Whitaker advising the church through him to forever close their doors of membership against all secretists, of whatever name, not knowing that Whitaker was a member of the Odd-fellow society.

The next Sabbath, when I went into church, I found that he had informed the choir of my letter as to secretists, and the choir being secretists or their allies, they had all left and taken all the singing books from the church. And the church not paying me as they agreed and my traveling expenses were so great that I offered my resignation, which after much effort, was accepted. I took my letter and removed to East Worcester, New York.

After I had been gone for a number of months they preferred false charges against me, and had a packed Masonic and Odd-fellowship council, as I believe, which sustained the charges and deposed me from the ministry, and excluded me from the church when I was more than 100 miles from the sitting of said council, and had at that time a good and valid letter from said church. The said guilty Starrucca Baptist church have been offered $100 for all the evidence by which that sham trial was conducted. They dare not let me have it.

Were it not for Masonry and secretists in general, I should to-day be on Zion's walls as heretofore, preaching the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. I do solemnly affirm before God and the world that a more willful, revengeful, malicious piece of persecution was seldom if ever perpetrated upon any man. May God hasten the time when secretism and the church shall be forever separated, and when secretist ministers will have no favor or place among the people of God. GEO. W. HOWE.

TELLING DARK TALES.

"SLIGO, May 5.—Fitzgerald and ten other Fenians were arraigned here to-day, charged with being Invincibles and with the murder of landlords and other citizens. Thomas Moran, an informer, a friend of Sheridan, testified that when he joined the Invincibles he swore on a knife, and in the terms of the oath pledged himself to secrecy, implicit obedience to leaders, to act when called upon, and to deal death to all tyrants. He connected Fitzgerald with the Tubbercurry branch of the Irish Republican brotherhood by swearing that Fitzgerald came to Tubbercurry from London to settle their differences."

We cut this from the Daily News. The Invincibles by the oath they thus take prove that their true leader is the devil, for he only would approve such oaths. God condemns them. Murder is the immediate object of these "invincible" sons of Satan.

We are indeed surprised that cunning does not suggest some better covering to this advocated perpetration of crime. True patriotism must mourn over its fate in such hands as these professed friends. It is quite impossible for any devout heart to ask the blessing of God upon such intending murderers, or for any lover of dear old Ireland to desire success to men who would involve their country in the horrors of anarchy, and compel it to welcome despotism as a blessing.

We have no doubt that the present ministry of the United Kingdom is as truly desirous to promote the welfare of Ireland as any of the Invincibles can be, and that if Premier Gladstone and ministry are supported, the measures for Ireland will be the very best which human wisdom can devise under present circumstances for the amelioration of the Emerald Isle and its generous-hearted people. Yours,

A FRIEND OF IRELAND.

PITH AND POINT.

FREE FROM THE TOBACCO CURSE.

I desire to give my views on tobacco. When a small boy I was ensnared into the use of the vile weed, and the habit fastened its coils so tight around me that it held me a slave thirty years. O, how thankful I am that I am free from this evil, and have been free about eighteen years! I expect, through God's help, always to be free. I have now better health, better nerves, a better taste, a better memory and a better conscience. To break off this habit is no child's play, but by God's help we can do it.—JOHN LEEPER, Senecaville, Ohio.

A TENNESSEE VOTER.

The Christian Cynosure is a welcome guest at my house. I don't know how I can do without it. I am an American and expect to vote that way. The platform is the best I ever saw.—R. A. STEWART, Molino, Tenn.

A GOOD USE OF MONEY.

I now realize, more I think than ever before, that money is a great power for good, if rightly expended: for, in using it to circulate literature that will enlighten the popular mind on the errors and evils of the day, and awaken a true sense of danger, and arouse to a timely, proper and concerted action, much good may be done, and much righteousness be brought to pass on the earth. I would that I could put a hundred dollars in this work, yea, a thousand would be too small compared with the interest I feel in this work and my desire to assist it forward, and with my sense of the urgent need of this work against secret combinations being prosecuted with all possible speed and by all honorable means.—C. W. LAMB, Magnolia, Iowa.

IN WORKS DENYING CHRIST.

I remember reading a few copies of your paper about eight years ago, handed me by a lady in Ohio, a noble worker against the abomination of abominations—the lodge. We see the evil effects of it here. Men who profess Christ, elders of the church, will attend a Masonic ball in preference to going to the house of worship. One man in Clay Center had a large brick building erected and dedicated with a lodge ball. Of course liquor was in abundance. This same man is selected to attend to the spiritual wants of the church. What will be the success of such a church?—O. C. COOK, Oak Hill, Kan.

WILL DO WHAT HE CAN.

I am in the midst of secret sworn societies of different kinds, but all of one parentage, and am trying to battle them as best I can. I showed an exposition of Masonry to a man who has been a Mason for years, and asked him what he saw in it that was not right. He said, "Not anything." As I am nearing the tomb and have not much of this world's goods, I cannot help much financially, but will speak out fearlessly and expose all I know, God being my helper.—SILAS HUBBELL, Spring Valley, Minn.

ONE-SIDED REFORMERS.

There are men at the present day who will cry out against some evils and overlook others. I read so much about the use of tobacco and have heard preachers talk against it in the pulpit, and next thing would see them with pipe in mouth. If no less should be said about such things, more should be about secret lodges. I was always opposed to these lodges from boyhood up and am glad I am not alone. There is an army helping in this good cause. March on, brethren, the Lord will help.—H. A. LITTLE, Graffenburg, Pa.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VIII.—May 25, 1884.—Liberal Giving. 2 Cor. 9: 1–15.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—God loveth a cheerful giver. 2 Cor. 9: 7.

THE NEED OF THE POOR. From whatever cause, there was at this period much poverty in Palestine, compared with the other eastern provinces of the Roman Empire. This was in part occasioned by the greater density of population in Palestine compared with the thinly inhabited tracts of Greece and Asia Minor; in part by the strongly marked distinction of rich and poor, which had been handed down to the Jews from the earlier periods of their history. The Christians, besides, were, as a general rule, from the poorer classes, and would be subject to persecutions and difficulties on account of their religion.—Stanley. Then a large number of the Jewish Christians were proselytes from various distant countries, and without their natural means of support. Note those who were gathered at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. The attempt at a community of goods no doubt increased this poverty.—Peloubet.

"That the same might be ready as a matter of bounty," that it might appear to be as it is, an act of your own free generosity, and not forced by our presence and appeals. The word "bounty" (eulogia) means literally a "blessing." Then that which blesses—a gift, donation, favor, bounty—whether of God to men, or of one man to another. Here it refers to their contribution as that which would confer a blessing on others.—Barnes. Originally the blending of the two ideas ("gift" and "blessing") arose from the fact that every blessing or praise of God or man was in the East accompanied by a gift (the modern bakhshish); and every gift suggested the expectation of some other gift or advantage in return.—Stanley. This sense of blessing, combined with the primitive sense, affords the apostle an opportunity for bringing out the true spirit in which Christian gifts should be given.—Alford.

"Not as of covetousness." "Let your gift be worthy of what you call it, a 'blessing' expressed in act, not the grudging gift of one who, as he gives, is intent on gaining some advantage through his seeming generosity." So understood, it expresses the same thought as Shakspeare's well-known lines:

"The quality of mercy is not strained,

. . . . . .

It blesseth him that gives and him that takes."—Ellicott.

"He which soweth sparingly." As the proper motive to acts of benevolence is a desire for the happiness of others, and a regard to the will of God, human wisdom says it is wrong to appeal to any selfish motive. The wisdom of God, while teaching the entire abnegation of self, tells all who thus deny themselves that they thereby most effectually promote their own interests. (Matt. 16: 25; 23: 12.) There can, however, be no hypocrisy in this matter. It is not the man who pretends to deny himself, to humble himself, while he acts from a regard to self, who is to be thus rewarded.—Alford.

"Not grudgingly or of necessity, i. e., constrained by circumstances to give, when you prefer not to do it. Many gifts are thus given sorrowfully, where the giver is induced to give by a regard to public opinion, or by stress of conscience.—Hodge.

"That ye....may abound to every good work." God has dealt bountifully with us that we may be able to be bountiful in helping others. What we wait for, and are looking hopefully to see, is a consecration of the vast money power of the world to the work and cause and kingdom of Jesus Christ. For that day, when it comes, is the morning, so to speak, of the new creation. That tide-wave in the money power can as little be resisted when God brings it on as the tides of the sea; and like these also it will flow across the world in a day.—Horace Bushnell. "No man is thoroughly converted till his piety reaches his pocket." So said a Christian layman who had earned the right to say it. Let the words ring in men's ears. For few, how very few, have learned the blessedness of noble, bountiful, cheerful giving.—Bible Reader's Com. Spiritual prosperity is inseparable from Christian liberality. As often as you practice this duty you must be conscious that the best part of your sanctified nature is called into exercise; your heart is partially discharged of its remaining selfishness; your mind is braced more for Christian activity; your sympathy causes you to feel afresh your alliance with man; your beneficence enables you to rejoice in your union of spirit with Christ, and adds a new bond to that power of affection which binds you to his cause. And while other duties bring you nearer to Christ, this may be said at once to place you by his side, and to exalt you into a real though humble imitator of his divine benevolence.—John Harris.

"And by their prayer for you." Better as in Rev Ver., while they themselves also, with supplication on your behalf. Connect this verse with verse 12. Then the sense will be, "The administration of this service (ver. 12) will produce abundant thanks to God. It will also (ver. 14) produce another effect. It will tend to excite the prayers of the saints for you, and thus produce important benefits to yourselves. They will earnestly desire your welfare, and they will anxiously pray to be united in Christian friendship with those who have been so signally endowed with the grace of God. The prayers of the poorest Christian for us are worth more than all we usually bestow on them in charity; and he who has secured the pleadings of a child of God, however humble, in his behalf, has made a good use of his money.—Barnes.

"Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." God's unspeakable gift is his Son. This, according to the analogy of Scripture, is that one great, supreme, all-comprehending gift, which is here intended. The passage ought to stand, as we doubt not the vast majority of the readers of the Bible understand it, as an outburst of gratitude to God for the gift of his Son.—Hodge.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN CHRISTIAN AND LODGE LIBERALITY.

1. Ministering to the saints is a command which the lodge makes of no effect. V. 1. We are commanded to do good unto all, but especially to those who are of the household of faith. All secret orders require their members to aid a brother member when in trouble or misfortune, but requires no pledge to be kind, or even just and fair towards anybody else. This amounts to a negation of the first clause in this command. Besides, the secret lodge, from Masonry down to the grange, is made up of all kinds of characters, so that the Christian who enters any of these organizations is bound to aid a "brother" in distress, though he be a saloon-keeper, a gambler, or a drunkard, before an unfortunate member of his own church. This negatives the second clause of the command.

2. Christian charity is a matter of bounty—lodge charity is a matter of covetousness. Vs. 5, 7. God desires neither money nor service which is not given from a willing heart. True religion leaves every man free to give just as much and no more than he is willing and able to give. False religions, on the contrary, like Popery and Buddhism, have elaborate systems of taxation which they impose on rich and poor alike. But instead of using it for charity it goes to build splendid temples and support an idle and profligate priesthood. This is one of the many points on which the lodge resembles other false religions. Its charity is not on the New Testament plan of voluntary contributions as needy cases arise, but every member, rich or poor, must pay their dues; and those who are least able must pay as much as the others, whether "grudgingly or of necessity" does not matter, if they are only paid. Nor is its charity genuine any more than that of the other false religions to which we have likened it, for the money which it collects goes to pay for costly Masonic temples, regalia and banquets; and often for bribes to clear criminals or elect some unscrupulous politician to an office for which he is not fit. Sunday-school children far outstrip all the lodges in the land for real charity. It is stated by H. F. Warren, author of "These for Those," that the children of one single denomination in the poorest district in the whole country are giving from three to four thousand dollars annually to the cause of missions, exclusive of what they give to other benevolent objects.

3. Reforms spring from seed-sowing—the more liberally we sow the seed the larger the harvest of good. V. 6. It is said that England, for every ten dollars spent in foreign missions, gets back one hundred through the new demand thus made in heathen lands for her manufactured articles. In like manner all the money and labor which we spend to put down great evils like liquor and the lodge will bring back a hundred fold in our nation's material prosperity; for as everybody is the worse off for their existence, so everybody is the better off in proportion as they are put down. Every Anti-masonic or temperance tract which we scatter, or book that we lend, is so much seed-sowing which may develop into a glorious harvest in the future.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What class of givers does God choose? Ex. 35: 5, 21, 22, 29. What is the rule for Christian giving? 1 Cor. 16: 2. How does this differ from the lodge rule? Where must we sow the seeds of reform? Isa. 32: 20.

The London Times says that Professor Maspero, the distinguished French Egyptologist, has discovered at Ekmeen, the ancient Khemnis (the Panopolis of the Greeks), between Assioot and Thebes, an immense necropolis which dated from the Ptolemaic period. Five catacombs have so far been opened. These yielded 120 mummies. The sites of 100 similar catacombs are still intact. It is believed that they contain as many as six thousand mummies. A large harvest of papyri, jewels and funeral treasures is expected.

WM. HAZENBURG, Cape Town, S. Africa.
A. D. ZARAPHONITHES, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1884.

The leading characteristic of the national canvass, thus far, is apathy. If the American and Prohibition Home-Protection parties unite; throwing off the livery of the lodge, nothing can prevent their sweeping the country. They include every element of power for popular appeal and political success.

The anti-slavery and woman's suffrage movements were, in their early stages, smirched with a dozen heresies. The American reform vs. the secret lodge system, has never swerved from the Bible or the American Constitution. No plank in its platform has been assailed, even by its enemies.

"Two of a Kind."—This is the caption of a colored picture in Puck for May 7th, which represents popery and Masonry as two of a kind, and both mummery. A priest in robes says to a Knight Templar with his cap, cross and sword: "You're a humbug and your dupe the people;" the Templar replies, "You're another!"

Hon. J. G. Birney.—Exceptions are taken to the words in our editorial, "Mr. Birney followed his political file-leader, Clay, into the Masonic lodge." It did not occur to us that our expression would imply that Mr. Birney lacked self-reliance. His whole life contradicted such a supposition. He was one of the most self-reliant of men. But as Clay and everybody else were Masons, he, in point of time and fact went with them.

When a load of hay is drawn through a hazelrough where bees and hornets nests abound, there is wild humming and attempts to sting. Wasps, hornets, yellow-jackets, bees, and even winged ants fill the air with their importunate whirring and whizzing.

The secret societies of this country are being run over by the discussions in Chicago and Washington, and meetings like the following at Cornell College where Mortimer D. Leggett was killed while being initiated may be daily looked for till after November next.

We are sorry Judge Tourgee is literalizing his "Fool's Errand" by embarking in them:

Ithaca, N. Y., May 7.—The fifty-first annual convention of the Psi Upsilon fraternity began its session here this afternoon with the Chi chapter of Cornell University. Judge Hoadley, of Waterloo, one of the founders of the fraternity is the presiding officer. A reception was given to-night at the armory on the university campus. The literary exercises will be held to-morrow in Library hall and the convention will end with a banquet in the evening over which Judge A. W. Tourgee will preside. The convention will be memorable from the laying of the corner stone of the new chapter house of the Cornell chapter.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE SOUTH.

Catawba Presbytery met at Monroe, N. C., Rev. S. Lawrance, D.D., became Moderator. The thirty-nine churches, generally, were found to be in a prosperous condition. * * * Three young men were received under care of Presbytery as candidates for the ministry. In their examination they were asked such questions as these: "Do you use tobacco? Do you belong to any secret society?"—N. Y. Observer, April 24.

The above is very significant, and we are obliged to the Observer for it. We should have been further obliged if the young men's answers had been given us, and the action of the Presbytery on their case. But the fact that a Presbytery of thirty-nine prosperous churches in North Carolina is penetrated by the power of reform shows that, under the surface of society, there is a fire burning which will consume the oaths, false-worship, and blasphemies of the lodge system. Mr. Hinman's Southern work has not been in vain.

THURLOW WEED.

The second volume of Mr. Weed's Memoir, by his grandson, Thurlow Weed Barnes, is out, and is having a large run. One leading characteristic of this work is, that, unlike the volumes of Mr. Seward's life, it neither shuns nor blinks the lodge. It gives on page 231, a letter of Mr. Seward thanking Weed for his agency in his return to the U. S. Senate; in which Mr. Seward says:

"I did not know that the principle of secret associations, which we only scotched, not killed, in 1830 had obtained a secret oath-bound majority in our State Legislature," etc., etc.

In a multitude of instances, the same fearless, outspoken style is used concerning the lodge, declaring it utterly destructive to our American institutions. In the writings of Mr. Seward, a totally different and craven policy was pursued; carefully eliminating from those volumes the terrible indictments of the lodge-system with which Seward's earlier speeches abounded.

Mr. Donald Kirkpatrick says that a new revised edition of Seward's works are under way, from which he believes, but is not certain, those important testimonies, so important to our national life, are not to be expurgated. Will some one who knows inform the readers of the Cynosure what are the facts concerning that forth-coming edition of Seward's works? To mutilate the writings of such a man is a crime in the realm of letters, and should subject the parties guilty of it to condign reprobation. It helps the lodge, as blowing out lights helps robbers and thieves.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ROCHESTER ITEMS.

Spring Garden Cemetery at Cincinnati, and the old Mt. Auburn at Boston are beautiful, but the Mt. Hope Cemetery at Rochester, in wild and beautiful scenery, exceeds all I have ever seen, and the plain marble monument of Myron Holley crowns the apex of one of the most beautiful summits. We shall soon give a full biographical sketch of Mr. Holley, with a likeness of him to the readers of the Cynosure. Standing by his monument overlooking the unnamed multitudes around him, one almost hears anew the eulogy given to the crowd there by Gerrit Smith.

A Masonic funeral was coming; 600 Masons were following to the grave (May 3d) a brother of their order whose story is succinctly this: The son of a distinguished lawyer, who was a convert under Mr. Finney, inherited a large estate, lived freely, never professed Christ, went to the lodge, after lodge went elsewhere for the night, was to have been married next day, but returned home about morning, lay down in his bed and died the hour he was to stand for his wedding; and 600 (estimated) Masons gathered from all quarters to send him to "their lodge above." What brought that crowd of strangers about that corpse? The spirit which gathered the crowd at Ephesus, crying, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" Their lodges are jarred by discussion, and they turn out to intimidate and stun.

Donald Kirkpatrick expects to attend the National Convention, June 20th, at Chicago. Tried by the test, the strength of a cause is in the zeal of its friends, our cause is very strong in the counties in this part of the State which our young State Agent, W. B. Stoddard, is now canvassing; where plenty of men and women still live who heard the cries of a father and husband, torn by Freemasons from his young wife and children to be sunk in Niagara river. In every town we meet persons who, like Col. Hammond of Chicago, knew and testified to the fearful facts, which even Masonic ministers dispute; or, worse still, sneer at. "Blood unavenged defiles the land," saith the Scripture; and these dark and desperate lodges, once driven from the light of day by the virtuous wrath of the people of these counties, without argument, extenuation, or excuse have crawled back from their hidden holes and lift their snake-crest over the corner-stones of buildings and the graves of the dead; and the light multitude look on, like cattle in a slaughter-yard waiting for their turn, and the turn of their children to die by dynamite or daggers wielded by invisible hands.

A Quaker preacher, Mr. Bell, a fine, substantial man, attended our Rochester convention. He asked, "Where are the pastors for whom thee preached First day? Can they not follow our cause behind, even if they can't lead? They remind me of my old friend Sidley More of Nova Scotia, who took his man John down to the wood and found a wolf caught in their trap. Friend More, a stout, resolute man, resolved to take that wolf home alive. He got his head under his arm so he could not bite, and made John take the beast by the tail and carry the trap. As they neared home John moaned out, 'How shall we ever get rid of this wolf?' 'What is the matter with thee, John?' said friend More. 'His hind end can't bite.' He then counted one—two—three, and bade John cast off the big trap, and his end of the wolf, and escaped himself without a bite with only a slight rent in his pantaloons.

"Thy brethren are carrying the hind end of the Easonic Scriptural wolf, and yet, like poor John, they seem afraid it will bite."

Our good friend laughed heartily, as we did, at his graphic narrative. If this anecdote reaches the gentlemanly Rochester pastors we hope they will meditate on its moral—"The fearful," etc., Rev. 21.

Syracuse, May 7, 1884.—Our Rochester convention was a fair success, and several were importunate for more meetings. The State Agent was assiduous and successful. A good American club for Monroe county was formed and officered; and a strong delegation appointed for the National Convention at Chicago, June 20th.

I preached in two churches on National Reform on the Sabbath, to somewhere between one thousand and fifteen hundred people, and was treated with great urbanity in the weekly meeting of the Presbyterian pastors of the city, though the city dailies all announced that I had come to speak against the lodge. Not a syllable or sentence in either of the four dailies gave us a disrespectful word; and we heard citizens freely criticising the great funeral turnout of Masons on Saturday, as heathenish and absurd.

Rev. B. T. Roberts spoke with his usual clearness and force against the secret orders, and stated some most withering facts showing their dishonesty and fraud to laborers. If our National Chicago Convention is large and harmonious, the two Prohibition parties, one excluding, the other including secret orders will soon be one with secrecy left out. The Lord hasten this day.

I met the brethren at the Wesleyan Publishing House in Syracuse and "took sweet counsel." Bro. Kinney was leaving for the New York Conference. But I had a long talk with Bro. Wardner, editor of the Wesleyan. I was glad to learn that the subscription list stood above a thousand higher than ever before, and the denomination is working in harmony. There is no class of Christians in the United States who have had more terrible trials and siftings than the Wesleyan Methodists. Once and again it has seemed as if their denominational ship must founder and go down. But they have a beautiful printing house, out of debt, and they have not bartered their principles for success. And if the American Prohibition Convention in Chicago, June 20th, proves a strong, powerful, and harmonious body, in a little while the Methodist Episcopal church must cease to lean on the lodge for prosperity, or its very best members will wheel off by platoons and join the Wesleyan ranks.

This is written in the study of our good and popular brother Bedford, Seneca Falls, whose two younger brothers are graduates of Wheaton College and students of Wheaton Theological Seminary. J. B.

"A great preacher in London was defending his wine drinking to me," said Joseph Cook; "I said, 'suppose J. B. Gough were a poor inebriate in London, and were to be converted, which church would it be better for him to join, yours where his taste would be recalled and he placed in danger, or Mr. Spurgeon's where you find total abstainers at communion table?' That argument touched him although he was invulnerable to every other. That is the argument we are to apply to every man or woman who would belong to the rescue section of religious society." Precisely the same argument we must apply to the fellowship of the lodge with the churches of Christ. Shall babes in Christ be thrown into the company of men who worship at a devil's altar? No, until it is safe to habituate your innocent child to the scenes and companionship of the saloon.

—General Secretary Stoddard preached in two of the United Presbyterian churches of Monmouth on the Sabbath and spoke at an afternoon temperance meeting. He will fill the appointments for Monday and Tuesday evenings in that place and Galesburg and will probably spend the rest of the week in central Illinois.

—Mrs. Pres. J. Blanchard started for Dale, New York, Monday evening. With the editor of the Cynosure and the New York State agent she will go on to New England.

—Our thanks are due to Gen. Armstrong of the Hampton, Va., Normal and Agricultural Institute for an invitation to attend the anniversary exercises May 22d. Rev. Henry T. Cheever of Worcester, Mass., who is much interested in the institution, reported for our columns the exercises of two years ago, and Bro. Hinman once visited and spoke there, with welcome for himself and his theme.

—The responses to the call for Anti-masonic tracts and literature from India have been prompt and generous. Saturday evening there had been $39 sent in for this purpose, and eleven packages have been sent with several more to follow this week. Let the prayer go up for a blessing on every page. Why should not the N. C. A. have a large foreign work, carried on with economy and success?

—Francis Murphy, the great temperance lecturer, has been one week in Chicago, speaking every evening in some of the West Side churches. Hundreds are signing the pledge and the temperance revival is taking strong hold in some parts of the city. This week Mr. Murphy expects to be joined by his son, and the good work will extend to the other divisions of the city.

—Bro. Isaac Townshend of Tabor, Iowa, who sends a contribution for the East India tract fund, tells why he feels so warm an interest in this tract distribution of Bro. Ward's: "My oldest daughter labored as a missionary in Jaffna, Ceylon, for about fifteen years. She ceased from her labors, and went to her rest August 15th, 1882. I received a letter from the missionary where she labored, saying that there were over 100 Christians to mourn her loss, who had been converted from heathenism to Christianity through her instrumentality."

—Mr. Phillip Kribs of Pennsylvania writes in favor of a house and headquarters for the anti-secret reform in Boston, and one also in San Francisco. He has a donation for each. That is a good look ahead, and as soon as the cause grows so that such an enterprise would be supported in either city, Bro. Kribs will be called upon. We must extend the wings of the reform army as fast as possible, but not so eagerly as to lose what is alrcady gained.

LITERATURE.

TIP LEWIS, by "Pansy," is No. 1 of the Young Folk's Library, a monthly publication by D. Lothrop and Co., Boston. This is a story of the conquering power of God's grace in a young heart fast locked to all good influences, and the result upon other souls for their conversion. The children (for it is written for them), will read this little volume with deep impressions for good, and its excellent instruction and hearty exhortation will move their hearts to accept Jesus as their Saviour and constant friend, as did the hero of the story. Like the little work, "Dick and his Friend Fidus," of years ago, it is a book to produce an abiding effect, a seed whose harvest in eternity will be precious. The publishers are to be commended for beginning their work so wisely. May it continue in the same way to the end.

The Missionary Review, in presenting the best of missionary work, has selected for the May-June number the work of the Moravian churches, which for self-denial, zeal and success surpass the work of any other body of Christians. One in fifty of their members are engaged in foreign missions. Should others reach the same degree of self-devotion, the American churches would send 205,746 missionaries to the heathen, instead of the 2,202 they now send; and from all Christendom would go forth an army of 541,140 instead of but 5,450 as now. The contrast between the salaries of Moravian missionaries and the secretaries and workers of other societies is also instructive for our churches—the one with his $600 to $800 putting to shame the other with $3,000 to 5,000. An interesting report of mission work in Algiers follows, and then an article on Foreign Mission Secretaries holds up to severe but just and Christian examination the policy of this world as exhibited in the over management and high salaries of the secretaries of Mission Boards. It is due to all Christians who contribute funds for foreign evangelization that they should know the facts here presented. A good article of General Gordon, the hero of the Soudan, is accompanied by a portrait. The Review leads the list of missionary magazines. Princeton, N. J.

That the editor of Choice Literature has gathered the best from the English Reviews for his May number must be confessed, when such names as Henry C. Ewart, Dr. Andrew Wilson, Herbert Spencer, Principal Dawson, Matthew Arnold, Archibald Forbes, Goldwin Smith, and the Duke of Argyle appear in the table of contents. Ewart adds something to our knowledge of the grand character of General Gordon, now in the Soudan. Wm. Fowler writes on "India, her Wheat and her Railways," a factor in the great problem of wheat farming which is worth considering by the wheat-growing farmers of the United States. The paper by Matthew Arnold is his address on "Numbers, or the Majority and the Remnant," delivered several times during his late visit to our country. The late noble address of George William Curtis of New York on Wendell Phillips, given in Tremont Temple, Boston, is also printed in full.

"Beecher, Evolution, Science and the Bible" is a reply to the lectures given by Beecher last year in California, by J. A. Miller, D. D., M. D. While not gifted with Beecher's eloquence or learning, his opponent has more good sense and sincerity, when discussing spiritual matters, and writes honestly and from conviction.

"Is Christianity a Failure?" a lecture by Rev. Madison C. Peters, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Ottawa, Ill., is an eloquent argument against the boasts of infidelity, well backed up by striking facts proving how great has been the work accomplished for Christ in late years.

Vick's Monthly paints for us the Convolvulus Minor, or Dwarf Morning Glory, and gives several good and practical articles on the management of garden vegetables. Rochester, N. Y.

A unique contribution to the history of the war in Egypt in 1882 will appear in the June Century. It is the diary of a young daughter of Gen. Stone, chief of the Khedival staff (who himself contributes an introductory note, in which he sharply criticises the British for the precipitancy of the bombardment of Alexandria). The family of Gen. Stone were in Cairo during the bombardment, and were in constant danger of massacre by the Arabs, from which the tact and courage of Mrs. Stone alone delivered them, her husband being on duty at Alexandria.

—The secret order of Foresters here in Chicago believe that their lodge has as much right to advertise itself and make capital out of Decoration day as any other. So, after a hard fight, the order was voted that the 4,000 members of this lodge parade behind their "High Chief Ranger" on that occasion.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I spent part of last week and last Sabbath in Baltimore, and preached for the colored Baptist churches on Clinton and Park Avenues. Their excellent pastors, Revs. Williams and P. H. A. Braxton, are inhearty sympathy with our reform, and I found that so far from testimony against secretism being objected to, it was most heartily endorsed. Both these churches are assuming very considerable burdens in church building. The Clinton Avenue church is to be enlarged at a cost of five hundred dollars, and the Park Avenue church are building a fine stone gothic house at a cost of twenty-five thousand. At present they worship in a commodious chapel.

The pastor of the Leadenhall street Baptist church, Rev. A. Brown, has commenced the publication of a monthly paper in the interests of the colored Baptists of Maryland, which in three months has attained a good circulation. He, too, is most earnestly opposed to the whole lodge system, and will use his pulpit and press as far as practicable to save the people from its delusions.

I visited also Bro. Isaac Keeler and wife at Homestead, on the border of the city. They publish a large, fine, monthly religious paper, "The Banner of Love," and devoted to religion and reform. Their attention has been but recently called to the secrecy question, but their April issue has a good editorial article on this topic.

I also visited the Washington Monument at Mt. Vernon Place, and had a fine view of the city from its top. It stands on an elevated and beautiful location and is 161 feet high. It is a round shaft of white marble standing on a base of the same material fifty feet square and twenty-four feet high. On the top is a statue of Washington, representing him in the act of resigning his commission. This work was commenced in 1815 and completed in 1829. The act of the legislature authorizing its construction was passed 1809, but the war of 1812-15 came on and delayed its commencement. It is less pretentious, but more beautiful than the great monument in this city, which is now being rapidly completed and it is expected that there will be a grand celebration Feb. 22d, 1885.

Among the many objects of interest in Baltimore is the Peabody Institute, a fine marble structure standing on Mt. Vernon Place, and for which Mr. Geo. Peabody gave one million dollars. It has a vast public library and art gallery that are open to the public. A series of scientific lectures are maintained and the whole is supported at an annual cost of $46,609.47.

The leading events here in Washington are:

1. A final relinquishment and end of the ex-detective suits, which is a triumph of rascality over law.

2. The court martial trial of Gen. Swaim, which is now in progress, and is pretty certain to end in smoke. The General bring a Mason of thirty-three degrees has the up hill side.

3. The event which has excited most interest (if I except Barnum's great show), is the final defeat of the Tariff Bill by a vote to strike out the enacting clause, which was taken yesterday, and five majority was recorded against tariff reduction. This is rejoiced in by the Republicans, and yet no one can tell why, as all persons from the President down are convinced that there should be a reduction of the revenues and a lessening of the burdens of needless taxation. The accumulation of a vast surplus revenue together with the retention of the public debt is a most evil portent.

Among the events of minor interest are a Congress of Forestry, which is in session this week at the Agricultural Hall of the Smithsonian. The subjects to be considered are of great interest to our nation and the world. A congress of doctors, of medicine about 600 in number, is now in session and have been received and entertained by the President of the United States; and lastly a series of lectures and Bible readings by Mrs. Hannah Whitehall Smith, who as an authoress and Christian teacher is greatly admired by the earnest thinking people of the city. Among the coming events is the unveiling of the statue of Chief Justice Marshall on the 10th. It has already been placed in position.

It now appears that the investigation of the case of Wm. P. Kellogg before the Springer committee, like the trial before the court, will end in smoke. It appeared on the trial that the dates in the indictment were changed at the suggestion of attorney Bliss; and that it was for this reason that the case did not come within the limits of the statute. It now appears from the statement of Walsh that the reason why Mr. Kellogg was not indicted sooner, was that Mr. Bliss told the Grand Jury that it was a serious matter to indict a United States Senator. Thus it would seem that the great crime goes unpunished by the direct suggestion of those whose sworn duty it was to see that the laws are duly executed. When the infamous lodge governments shall be broken up and men own true and sole allegiance to the laws of the land we may hope for better things.

H. H. HINMAN.

—Mr. Joseph Bowes, a well-known Covenanter, an able man and an exceptionally fine Bible scholar, residing in Washington, D. C., conducts a large and rapidly growing teachers' Bible class in that city, which is thus noticed in a recent issue of the Washington Republican: "Possibly some of the Sabbath-school teachers of this city may not be aware of the fact that there is held at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., New York avenue, every Saturday at 6 o'clock P. M., a teachers' class for the study of the International Sabbath-school Lessons of the day following. This class is in charge of Mr. Joseph Bowes, and is probably the largest and most successfully conducted class of the kind to be found south of Boston or New York. The spacious parlors on the east side of the Y. M. C. A. building are filled every Saturday evening to overflowing with teachers, who find here the very best opportunity offered for the study of the lesson. Sabbath-school teachers and workers who have not been present should make a test of the helpfulness of this class by attending a few of its sessions."—Our Banner.

Mr. Rosewater, the energetic and matter-of-fact editor of the Omaha Bee, although an adhering Mason, candidly admits that Masonry does interfere with politics. And he says he has pigeonholed away a mass of statistics to prove it. This is valuable testimony concerning the influence of secretism. It goes to confirm what we have always believed to be the case; and because of this, we call upon those who cherish the boon of political freedom to assert manfully their rights as American citizens, and resist the encroachment of these insidious and hidden influences which evidently aim at the complete control of our national destinies.—Blanchard Record.

The editor of the Record should cultivate the acquaintance of that editor and get the contents of his pigeonhole for publication.

—The following note of the continuation of some ancient customs in England, from which Freemasons derive some of their idolatry, deserves notice for they are now regarded a piece of folly, while the Masonic trumpery is praised as profound wisdom and sincere piety:

"Mr. E. I. Jones, a native of Wales, tells us that there are still a few Druids in that country who meet annually to celebrate the worship of the sun at Newbridge, Glemorganshire, South Wales. The place of their meeting is known as the "Rocking Stone," a huge flat stone that can be rocked by a child. This remnant of half a dozen Druids still adheres tenaciously to the religious superstitions of their heathen ancestors. They are all eminent Welsh poets and scholars. At their annual meeting some of their poems are read and sung. An umpire decides who has produced the best poem, and it is only those who excel as muses who are admitted into their society. They, of course, are diminishing in numbers and in a few years they will all be gone."

—The Earl Shaftesbury, Wednesday, unveiled the statue of William Tyndal, the martyr burned at the stake at Vilvoorden, in 1536, on account of his religious teachings. The statue stands in a conspicuous place on the Thames embankment, London.

ANTI-SLAVERY PAMPHLETS

Bearing date before 1850, especially annual reports of State and National Anti-slavery societies, wanted at fair prices, by WILLIAM BIRNEY, Washington, D. C.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet pro vides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Pro claiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cyno sure.

5 Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C A., to the amount of 25 cents.

THE HOME.

THE GOOD GREAT MAN.

How seldom, friend, a good man inherits
Honor and wealth, with all his worth and pains!
It seems a story from the world of spirits
When any man obtains that which he merits,
Or any merits that which he obtains.

For shame, my friend! renounce this idle strain!
What wouldst thou have the great good man obtain?
Wealth, title, dignity, a golden chain,
Or heap of corses which his sword hath slain?
Goodness and greatness are not means, but ends.

Hath he not always treasures, always friends,
The good great man? Three treasures—love and light,
And calm thoughts, equable as infant's breath;
And three fast friends, more sure than day or night—
Himself, his Maker, and the angel Death!

—Samuel T. Coleridge.

HOLY MEN.

There have been holy men who hid themselves
Deep in the woody wilderness, and gave
Their lives to thought and prayer, till they outlived
The generation born with them, nor seemed Less aged than the hoary trees and rocks
Around them,--and there have been holy men
Who deemed it were not well to pass life thus.
But let me often to these solitudes
Retire, and in Thy presence reassure
My feeble virtue. Here its enemies
The passions, at Thy plainer footsteps shrink,
And tremble, and are still. O God, when Thou
Dost scare the world with tempests, set on fire
The heavens with falling thunderbolts, or fill,
With all the waters of the firmament,
The swift, dark whirlwind that uproots the woods
And drowns the villages; when, at Thy call,
Uprises the great deep and throws himself
Upon the continent, and overwhelms
Its cities,—who forgets not, at the sight
Of these tremendous tokens of Thy power,
His pride, and lays his strifes and follies by?
O, from these sterner aspects of Thy face
Spare me and mine, nor let us need the wrath
Or the mad, unchained element to teach
Who rules them. Be it ours to meditate,
In these calm shades, Thy milder majesty,
And to the beautiful order of thy works
Learn to conform the order of our lives.

JOSEPH COOK AS A LECTURER.

Rev. Prof. A. P. Peabody, of Harvard University, has said of Joseph Cook: "He is a phenomenon, to be accounted for." We went to see this phenomenon, and hasten to give you our impressions. It might seem something of irreverence to write such an illustrious name so plainly—Joseph Cook. But the orator himself has forbidden all embellishments of dignity, and aspires to the charm of a name, plain and simple. The love of titles has become a passion after a manner, and this lies in the consciousness that most men can get along better with than without them. When one might be the ecclesiastical or academical dignitary, but prefers to be the plain and simple some one, it bespeaks a very pronounced self-consciousness of greatness—and not altogether an absence of some kind of pride and ambition. Whatever titles may bring to other men, they can bring nothing to the names—Beecher, Spurgeon, Joseph Cook, etc., and these worthies themselves have told us so.

It is Joseph Cook then whom we went to see and hear. It was a long journey that at last brought him to this place. His success was as brilliant in Greece, Palestine, Egypt, India, as anywhere in Europe or America. The two grandest gatherings of Edinburg, in all its history, were those of the Free Assembly Hall and the Corn Exchange, addressed by Mr. Cook on the philosophy of religion on the one hand, and by Mr. Gladstone on states matters on the other. The audience that greeted him here were already assured by the name, before they had ever seen the man. But when he stepped upon the stage, and so suddenly posed his body into the attitude of silent prayer, the previous applause subsided abruptly as if ashamed of itself; it was all so unexpectedly like the shifting of scenes; the feelings of the audience were quickly changed like the turning of the hand—and every one felt that they had not thought of that particular element of the lecturer. That silent prayer indicated from that standpoint he would view his theme. In his personale the most striking feature is his head, and of this his eyes are the most prominent. They are not beautiful, but large and luminous enough to be admired. His head is about as squarely planted on his shoulders as that of Napoleon I. He is not exactly elegant in his appearance, but faces you with a frame-work such as you would want Joseph Cook to have—it at least impresses you with a sense of solidity. He moves with about as much effort to gracefulness as Moody, only that this is another than he. He has quite a sufficient mouth, and it was perhaps specially made so to meet the extent of his brains. His voice is not musical nor is it harsh, it is about as good as his arguments—which are very good. But however differently the outward appearance of the man may strike you, it can at best be the least part of him when that man is Joseph Cook.

His manner of speech and action is in the line of utility rather than finished grace. His oratory is of the Wendell Phillips' school, which it correctly interprets as to manner. His power of eloquence is greater than that of Theodore Parker, who was more correct in the art of speaking than in the line of his thinking. He does not exactly storm with forensic passion, and yet he lightens and thunders and lays men and their errors low as by a bolt from heaven. The upward curve of his mouth adds wonderfully to the expression of withering scorn; the inflating of his eyes reveals the fire of the battling passions in his soul, and in calm argument his hand and arm is the blackboard upon which he measures off the progress of history, illustrates the incongruities of things, and demonstrates facts by comparative figures. Mr. Cook utilizes every part of himself before an audience. The lecture of course is but the man put in words. When it is made you can say of it—the lecture is a conviction, the courage of conviction, and the force that backs the courage of that conviction. Perhaps Prof. Peabody is correct in saying that Mr. Cook is a phenomenon that needs to be accounted for. No living orator has undertaken to do what this oracle of modern scientific, Christian thought has done, and with success. It is in his power to take the most abstract scientific and philosophic subject, and delight an audience anywhere with enraptured enthusiasm. He unwinds, though clothed in the fitting garb of logic, embellished in the beauties of universal literature, sparkling with the radiancy of wit and sarcasm—unwinds thought as if reading from some printed book, and yet standing in the freedom of speech; every thought coming forth like a bomb-shell primed, and sent exploding into the barricaded ranks of scientific and vulgar infidelity. He is verily the champion of truth.

Mr. Cook has made a lecturing tour of the world, and only in the last nine months has traveled 12,500 miles. Eight volumes of his lectures have been published in the United States, and ten in England. His great books on Biology, Transcendentalism, and Orthodoxy have passed through sixteen, thirteen, and seven editions respectively. The People's University which he established in Boston, and through which he has maintained for seven years the Boston Monday Lectureship, has made him popular not only to this modern Athens, but to all the world. At noon on Monday, in the busy hour of the day, three thousand people crowd into Tremont Temple to listen to his lecture, which, on the next day, is scattered through the press to a million readers. He is now in the prime of life, and in the full vigor of health—may he live long to bless his nation and mankind.—At Leisure, in the Lutheran.

WENDELL PHILLIPS ON THE "LOST ARTS."

Taking their employment of the mechanical forces, and their movement of large masses from the earth, we know that the Egyptians had the five, seven, or three mechanical powers; but we cannot account for the multiplication and increase necessary to perform the wonders they accomplished.

In Boston, lately, we have moved the Pelham hotel, weighing 50,000 tons, 14 feet, and are very proud of it. And since then we moved a whole block of houses 23 feet; and I have no doubt we will write a book about it; but there is a book telling how Dominico Fontana, of the sixteenth century, set up the Egyptian obelisk at Rome on end during the papacy of Sixtus V. Wonderful! Yet the Egyptians quarried that stone and carried it 150 miles, and the Romans brought it 750 miles and never said a word about it.

Mr. Batterson, of Hartford, walking with Brunel, the architect of the Thames tunnel, in Egypt asked him what he thought of the mechanical skill of the Egyptians; and he said: "There is Pompey's Pillar; it is 100 feet high, and the capital weighs 2,000 pounds. It is something of a feat to hang 2,000 pounds at that height in the air, and the few men who can do it would better discuss Egyptian mechanics."

Take canals, for instance. The Suez Canal absorbs half its receipts in cleaning out the sand which fills it continually, and it is not yet known whether it is a pecuniary success. The ancients built a canal at right angles to ours, because they knew that it would not fill up if built in that direction, and they knew such a one as ours would. There were magnificent canals in the land of the Jews, with perfectly arranged gates and sluices.

We have only just begun to understand ventilation properly for our houses; yet late experiments at the Pyramids in Egypt show that those Egyptian tombs were ventilated in the most perfect and scientific manner.

Again cement is modern; for the ancients dressed and jointed their stones so closely that in buildings thousands of years old the thin blade of a pen-knife cannot be forced between them.

The railroad dates back to Egypt. Arago has claimed that they had a knowledge of steam. A painting has been discovered of a ship full of machinery, and a French engineer said that the arrangement of this machinery could only be accounted for by supposing the motive power to have been steam. Braham acknowledges that he took the idea of his celebrated lock from an ancient Egyptian pattern. De Tocqueville says there was no social question that was not discussed to rags in Egypt.

"Well," say you, "Franklin invented the lightning rod." I have no doubt he did: but, years before his invention, and before muskets were invented, the old soldiers on guard in the towers used Franklin's invention to keep guard with, and if a spark passed between them and the spear-head they ran and bore the warning of the state and condition of affairs.

After that you will admit that Benjamin Franklin was not the only one who knew of the presence of electricity and the advantages derived from its use. Solomon's Temple you will find was situated on an exposed point of the hill; the temple was so lofty that it was often in peril, and was guarded by a system exactly like that of Benjamin Franklin.

"Well, I may tell you a little of ancient manufacturers. The Duchess of Burgundy took a necklace from the neck of a mummy and wore it to a ball given at the Tuilleries, and everybody said they thought it was the newest thing there."

A Hindu princess came into court, and her father seeing her, said: "Go home; you are not decently covered. Go home!" and she said: "Father, I have seven suits on!" But the suits were of muslin so thin that the king could see through them. A Roman poet says: "The girl was in the poetic dress of the country." I fancy the French would be rather astonished at this. Four hundred and fifty years ago the first spinning machine was introduced in Europe. I have evidence to show that it made its appearance 2,000 years before.

WENDELL PHILLIPS' COURTSHIP.

A certain Miss Greene was to make a journey to Albany, and Charles Sumner, then "a rising young lawyer," having a mission to Pittsfield, was at the request of the family to accompany her a part of the way, but Sumner was timid and did not like the idea of traveling with a girl in the seclusion of a stage-coach. He applied to his friend Wendell Phillips to take his place. "If you will go," he said, "I will pay your fare both ways." Young Phillips required no urging. The pair set out and the future agitator had not traversed more than half the journey before he had fallen desperately in love with his brilliant companion. She gave him no encouragement, but the man who could defy a mob was not the man to be daunted when a matter of the heart was at issue. On Miss Greene's return to Boston, he called upon her and then and there asked her to be his wife. She treated his proposal coldly, but he pleaded his suit with all the eloquence which gave him the title of "the silver-tongued." At length overcome by his importunity, the maiden said: "I will marry you upon one condition—that you swear eternal enmity to slavery." "I swore that four years ago," was the reply, "and will willingly swear it again." Miss Greene was then an invalid, and when the two were married it was in her chamber which she was not expected to leave again alive, that the ceremony took place. But Wendell Phillips' devotion had its reward. She lived to be the guide of his life, and to witness the posthumous honors heaped upon his grave.—Boston Traveler.

Conversation gives influence; conversation brings a thousand opportunities of doing good; conversation is a great talent not to be hid, not to be perverted and abused, but to be perpetually employed in the service of Christ.—Interior.

The mind becomes habituated to certain channels and trains of thought, and a man whose attention is always given to material processes, such as the work of tools, sometimes finds great difficulty in bringing his mind to bear on matters foreign to them. This is why many hesitate over simple things, and appear, to the casual observer, to be stupid, when in reality they are far from that.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

HYMN TO THE SEASONS.

When Spring unlocks the flowers, to paint the laughing soil;
When Summer's balmy showers refresh the mower's toil;
When Winter binds in frosty chains the fallow and the flood;
In God the earth rejoiceth still, and owns her Maker good.

The birds that wake the morning, and those that love the shade;
The winds that sweep the mountain, or lull the drowsy glade;
The sun that from his amber bower rejoiceth on his way;
The moon, and stars, their Maker's name in silent pomp display.

Shall man, the lord of nature, expectant of the sky,—
Shall man alone unthankful, his little praise deny?
No,--let the year forsake his course, the seasons cease to be,
Thee, Master, must we always love; and, Saviour, honor Thee.

The flowers of Spring may wither,--the hope of Summer fade,—
The Autumn droop in Winter,—the birds forsake the shade,—
The wind be lulled,—the sun and moon forget their old decree,—
But we, in nature's latest hour, O Lord, will cling to Thee!

RAIN. Read Psa. 65.

He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth. Psa. 72: 6.

1. Want of rain an awful calamity. 1 Kings 18: 1–6, 41–45; Amos 8: 11; 4: 7, 8.
2. God alone can send rain. Jer. 14: 22; Matt. 5: 45.
3. Rain softens the ground and prepares it for seed. Psa. 65: 10; Heb. 6: 7.
4. Rain makes the seed spring up. Isa. 55: 10, 11.
5. Rain supplies the springs and fountains. Psa. 84: 6.
6. Rain is free to all. Isa. 55: 1; 1 Kings 8: 35, 36.
7. Rain shows us the glorious rainbow. Ezek. 1: 28; John 16: 14–16.—Notes for Bible Study.

OUT IN THE RAIN.

There is a touching story of the famous Dr. Samuel Johnson, which has had influence on many a boy who has heard it. Samuel's father, Michael Johnson, was a poor bookseller in Lichfield, England. On market days he used to carry a package of books to the village of Uttoxeter, and sell them from a stall in the market-place. One day the bookseller was sick, and asked his son to go and sell the books in his place. Samuel, from a silly pride, refused to obey.

Fifty years afterward Johnson became the celebrated author, the compiler of the "English Dictionary," and one of the most distinguished scholars in England, but he never forgot his act of unkindness to his poor, hard-toiling father; so when he visited Uttoxeter he determined to show his sorrow and repentance.

He went into the market-place at the time of business, uncovered his head, and stood there for a hour in a pouring rain, on the very spot where the bookstall used to stand. "This," he says, "was an act of contrition for my disobedience to my kind father."

The spectacle of the great Dr. Johnson standing bareheaded in the storm, to atone for the wrong done by him fifty years before, is a grand and touching one. There is a representation of it (in marble) on the doctor's monument.

Many a man in after life has felt something harder and heavier than a storm of rain beating upon his heart, when he remembered his acts of unkindness to a good father or mother now in their graves.

Dr. John Todd, of Pittsfield, the eminent writer, never could forget how, when his old father was very sick, and sent him away for medicine, he (a little lad) had been unwilling to go, and made up a lie that "the druggist had not got any such medicine."

The old man was just dying when little Johnny came in and said to him, "My boy, your father suffers great pain for want of that medicine."

Johnny started in great distress for the medicine, but it was too late. The father on his return was almost gone. He could only say to the weeping boy, "Love God, and always speak the truth, for the eye of God is always upon you. Now kiss me once more, and farewell."

Through all his after life, Dr. Todd often had a heart-ache over that act of falsehood and disobedience to his dying father. It takes more than a shower to wash away the memory of such sins. Dr. Todd repented of that sin a thousand times.

The words, "Honor thy father and thy mother," mean four things—always do what they bid you, always tell them the truth, always treat them lovingly, and take care of them when they are sick or grown old. I never yet knew a boy who trampled on the wishes of his parents who turned out well. God never blesses a willfully disobedient son.

When Washington was sixteen years old he determined to leave home and be a midshipman in the Colonial navy. After he had sent off his trunk, he went to bid his mother good-by. She wept so bitterly because he was going away that he said to his negro servant, "Bring back my trunk; I am not going to make my mother suffer so by my leaving her."

He remained at home to please his mother. This decision led to his becoming a surveyor, and afterwards a soldier. His whole glorious career in life turned on this one simple act of trying to make his mother happy. And happy, too, will be the child who never has occasion to shed bitter tears for any act of unkindness to his parents. Let us not forget that God has said: "Honor thy father and thy mother."—Dr. T. L. Cuyler, in Youth's Companion.

WHAT CAME OF A KIND DEED.

The following incident of Madame Malibran, a famous singer who lived some fifty years ago, is told in Harper's Young People: She was sitting in her room in a London hotel, very weary, when word was brought that a little lad wished to see her, and she allowed him to be admitted. A little flaxen-haired fellow of some ten years timidly entered the room, and taking a roll of paper from his pocket, said: "Madame, everybody tells me that you are so good, so very good to the poor. I do not come to beg, Madame, though we are so poor that my dear mamma, who is very ill, has to do without both food and medicine. I thought if you would sing my little song at one of your concerts perhaps somebody would buy it, and I could get the wine and medicine the doctor has ordered." Tears stood in his eyes as he made his request, and as Madame Malibran took the manuscript and rapidly hummed the lines over, they rolled slowly down his cheeks. "Did you write this music, a little child like you?" "Yes, madame." The lady took from her purse a coin and a card and pressed them into the boy's hand. "Run home as quickly as you can," she said, "and get for your mother all she needs, and this evening come to my concert, to which the ticket will admit you."

Pierre did as he was told, and when evening came he went to the theater presented his ticket and was taken to a seat away down near the stage. The lights, the warmth and the bright colors, to say nothing of the crowd of handsomely dressed gentlemen and ladies, bewildered and dazzled him, and he could only think, "O if mamma were but here, I should be so happy!" Presently he glanced at the platform, and there stood his lovely lady. She began to sing and little Pierre's heart throbbed as if it would burst as the familiar notes of his own little song fell upon his ear. Its simple melody touched the audience too, and it was sung again and at its close the house rang with applause. How the rest of the concert passed Pierre never knew. He staid until it was all over and then hurried home and told his wonderful news. Several days after Madame Malibran called upon Pierre's mother and told her that a London publisher had offered £300 for the song, which offer she had accepted, and pouring into the astonished woman's lap a pile of notes and gold, said: "Madame, your son will one day be a great composer. Thank God for the gift he has given him."

Pierre and his sick mother mingled their tears and thanks to one who seemed to them like an angel sent from heaven. With the money thus obtained Pierre was enabled to pursue his musical studies, and in after years verified the great singer's prediction, and became one of the most talented composers of his day.

THE VATICAN.

This word is often used by many who do not understand its import. The term refers to a collection of buildings on one of the seven hills of Rome, which covers a space of 1,200 feet in length and 1,000 feet in breadth. It is built on the spot once occupied by the garden of cruel Nero. It owes its origin to the Bishop of Rome, who in the early part of the sixth century erected an humble residence on its site. About the year 1160, Pope Eugenius rebuilt it on a magnificent scale. Innocent II. a few years afterwards gave it up as a lodging to Peter II., king of Arragon. In 1305 Clement V., at the instigation of the king of France, removed the Papal See from Rome to Avignon, when the Vatican remained in a condition of obscurity and neglect for more than seventy years. But soon after the return of the Pontifical court to Rome, an event which had been so earnestly prayed for by poor Petrarch and which finally took place in 1376, the Vatican was put into a state of repair, again enlarged, and it was thenceforward considered as the regular palace and residence of the popes, who one after another added fresh buildings to it, and gradually encircled it with antiquities, statues, pictures and books, until it became the richest depository in the world.

The library of the Vatican was commenced 1,400 years ago. It contains 40,000 MSS., among which are some of Pliny, St. Thomas, St. Charles, Boromeo and many Hebrew, Syrian, Arabian and Armenian Bibles. The whole of the immense buildings composing the Vatican are filled with statues found beneath the ruins of ancient Rome, with paintings by the Masters, and with curious medals and antiquities of almost every description. When it is known that there have been exhumed more than 70,000 statues from the ruined temples and palaces of Rome, the reader can form some idea of the richness of the Vatican. It will ever be held in veneration by the student, the artist and the scholar. Raphael and Michael Angelo are enthroned there and their throne will be endurable as the love of beauty and genius in the hearts of their worshipers.—Morning Star.

Gertie's home was in a city where high walls of brick and masonry hid the moon and stars from her view, and not until she was taken to the country, when she was four years old, did she ever see the full, round moon. She gazed at it in great amazement for a minute or two, then exclaimed, "O, auntie, auntie, just look what a big hole in the sky—won't the angels all spill out?"

There are few signs in a soul's state more alarming than that of religious indifference; that is, the spirit of thinking all religions equally true, the real meaning of which is, that all religions are equally false.—F. W. Robertson.

TEMPERANCE.

HORACE GREELEY ON WINES.

George William Curtis, in his address at the seventy-eighth annual dinner of the New England Society, told the following characteristic anecdote of Horace Greeley:

"I remember many years ago, when I was one of a group of young writers upon the Tribune and Mr. Greeley was an ardent temperance reformer, that a vigorous article appeared one morning urging young men to avoid the tempter in whatever form he might appear, whether as punch or bitters, as sherry or Madeira, as hock or claret, as Heidsieck or champagne. [Laughter.] The young writers—who were not ardent temperance reformers—greeted Mr. Greeley uproariously when he appeared at the office, and with infinite glee pointed out to him that Heidsieck was not a different wine, but only a particular brand of champagne. As the laugh rang round the room Mr. Greeley, who as his opponents usually found, was quite able to hold his own, leaned with his shoulder against the wall looking benignly at the laughing chorus, and when it became quiet he said: 'Wal, boys I guess I'm the only man in this office that could have made that mistake,' and then he added: 'It don't matter what you call him, champagne or Heidsieck, or absinthe, he's the same old devil.'" [Much laughter.]

A LONDON PUBLIC HOUSE OF A SATURDAY NIGHT.

More than one-fourth of the daily earnings of the denizens of the slums goes over the bars of the public houses and gin palaces. To study the drink phase of this burning question let us take the districts from which I have drawn the facts and figures I have submitted to your readers in previous articles On a Saturday night in the great thoroughfare adjacent there are three corner public houses which take as much money as the whole of the other shops on both sides of the way put together. Butchers, bakers, greengrocers, clothiers, furniture dealers, all the caterers for the wants of the populace, are open until a late hour; there are hundreds of them trading, round and about, but the whole lot do not take as much money as three publicans—that is a fact ghastly enough in all conscience. Enter the public houses and you will see them crammed. Here are artisans and laborers drinking away the wages that ought to clothe their little ones. Here are the women squandering the money that would purchase food for the lack of which their children are dying. One group rivets the eye of an observer at once. It consists of an old gray-haired dame, a woman of forty and a girl of about nineteen with a baby in her arms. All these are in a state which are best described as "maudlin;" they have finished one lot of gin and the youngest woman is ordering another round. It is a grandmother, a mother and her baby—three generations together—and they are all dirty and disheveled and drunk, except the baby, and even that poor little mite may have its first taste of alcohol presently. It is no uncommon sight in these places to see a mother wet a baby's lips with gin and water. The process is called "giving the young 'un a taste," and the baby's father will look on sometimes and enjoy the joke immensely. But the time to see the result of a Saturday night's heavy drinking in a low neighborhood is after the houses are closed. Then you meet dozens of poor wretches reeling home to their miserable dens; some of them roll across the roadway and fall, cutting themselves until the blood flows. Every penny in some instances have gone in drink. One dilapidated ragged wretch I met last Saturday night was gnawing a baked potato. By his side stood a thinly-clad woman bearing a baby in her arms, and in hideous language she reproached him for his selfishness. She had fetched him out of a public house with his half-penny in his pockets. With that half-penny he had bought the potato which he refused to share with her. At every corner the police are ordering or coaxing men and women to "move on." Between twelve and one it is a long procession of drunken men and women, and the most drunken seem to be those whose outward appearance betokens the most abject poverty.—The Bitter Cry.

Rev. D. S. Phillips, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church of Kankakee, Ill., recently closed his church doors against Mrs. Mary B. Willard unless she would pledge herself to deal with temperance in a general way, and not advocate prohibition. Mrs. Willard, like all W. C. T. U. women, is too conscientious to lower her standard for a preacher more readily than for a saloonkeeper, and she sensibly concluded to speak elsewhere.

The Bavarians, according to the Brewer's Journal, drink sixty-two gallons of beer per capita annually, including men, women, children and babies. This gives the able-bodied men about two hundred gallons each. In the United States we are at present content with eleven gallons each.

A few days ago a man named Harold opened a saloon in Canton, Kansas, in violation of law. This was Friday. On Monday he got into a row over one of his drunken customers, and was shot by a constable. On Tuesday the women of the place raided his saloon and poured his liquor into the street. He now realizes that prohibition prohibits. The conduct of the women is endorsed by all good citizens.

Mr. John B. Tolman, a veteran printer of Lynn, Mass., has given the Young Men's Christian Association of that city an estate valued at $30,000, stipulating that the income shall be used in promoting the cause of temperance.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. E. C. Oggel, of the Westminster Presbyterian church, Chicago, has been invited to become the pastor of the Bethel church at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands. Mr. Oggel is brother of Dr. Oggel, editor of the reform paper in the Holland language at Pella, Iowa.

—One of the Bible classes of the Second Presbyterian church, Chicago, meets at 9:30 each Sabbath morning to read and discuss the lesson in the original Greek, and half an hour later others come in, when the lesson is discussed in English in the light of the best commentaries altogether forming a very pleasant and profitable exercise under the direction of Professor Ira W. Allen, LL.D.

—A revival in the Congregational church at Kewanee under pastor Leeper and evangelist Wiard is reported with much joy, there being some twenty-five conversions. But it is a grief to learn that Mr. Wiard is an adhering Odd-fellow and possibly Mason, and to believe that the work of salvation may have been much hindered because of this discount on his piety. Is it true that Secretary Tompkins of the Illinois Home Missionary employs an adhering lodgeman to go about among the churches as an evangelist?

—The list of Sunday-school lessons for 1885 have been selected by the International Committee. Study from the Acts will occupy the first four months. May and June will be given to studies in the Epistles. All the lessons for the third quarter, and seven lessons for the fourth, are from the Old Testament books of the Kings. Two lessons from Jonah and three from Isaiah will complete the work of the year.

—Rev. R. B. Howard formerly pastor at Princeton, Ill., and also assistant editor of the Advance, has lately been appointed corresponding secretary of the American Peace Society. This organization that has labored for more than half a century to harmonize the discordant forces of society without bloodshed, is the oldest Peace Society in the world, and its friends rejoice that after many years of struggle with financial difficulties it finds itself, through the receipt of several legacies and other sources, in a position to call to its aid a gentleman of such ability. Mr. Howard is brother of Gen. O. O. Howard of West Point.

—The last communion season was a glorious day for the little church in Providence, Bureau Co., Ill., when sixty-one persons united with the church, all but three on profession. Nearly all were adults; the oldest was eighty-two. There were twenty families among the number, including husband and wife, and in several instances one or more children. About thirty-five others professed conversion during the blessed revival that visited this place last winter, nearly all of whom will doubtless join the church at some future time.

—The close of 1883 completed a half year of missionary work for the Presbyterian church (North). Its missions now number 29, with 91 stations and a multitude of out stations, of which the number is not reported. It has 160 ordained American ministers in its service, 92 ordained natives and 133 licentiates. Its lay missionaries number 867, of whom 266 are American ladies (138 unmarried), and 580 are natives. The communicants in connection with its missions number 18,656, and the scholars in its boarding and day schools 21,223. In 18 months ending May 1st, 1833, the Board received $6,-431.90. For the year ending May 1st, 1883, its receipts were $655,588.19, including $102,729.33 from the various Women's Societies auxiliary to it. The General Assembly of this church meets soon in Saratoga Springs, N. Y. The editor of the Cynosure expects to attend this meeting.

—The American Tract Society held its fifty-ninth annual meeting last week Monday at New York. The donations and legacies for the year were $102,869, and the expenditures $354,082. Sixty-three missionaries distributed 133,463 volumes.

—The Directors of the American Bible Society held their sixty-eighth annual meeting at New York Thursday. During the year 1,808,215 copies of the Scriptures have been distributed. Increased contributions are necessary for the proper workings of the society.

—The address of the Bishops was read in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church May 5th. It states that there are ninety-nine annual conferences, fourteen missions, 11,349 traveling preachers, 12,026 local preachers, 1,769,534 members and probationers. The increase in the past four years was 69,322. The number of traveling preachers who died was 654, and of members 58,891. The accessions were 138,787. In 1883 there were 18,741 churches and 9,815 parsonages, valued at $79,238,000. There are ten theological seminaries, forty-five colleges, sixty-six institutions and eight female colleges. The bishops refer to the laxity of the laws on divorce and ask for more stringent regulations regarding the solemnization of the marriage of divorced persons.

—Mr. William H. Vanderbilt has deeded to the Moravian Church Society in New-Dorp, Staten Island, ten acres of land adjoining the Moravian Cemetery, in which the Vanderbilt mausoleum stands. The mausoleum is to be replaced this summer by a new one designed by Mr. Richard M. Hunt, which is to cost $90,000. The land has lately been improved and laid out in drive-ways, walks, and grass-plots, and contains a pretty miniature lake.

—The New York Examiner has an interesting account of a convention held by the Karens of Burmah to celebrate the publication of the whole Bible in their dialect. They have been raised by missionary efforts from a degradation, given a written language and a Christian literature, and many thousands are now enlightened, civilized and true Christians.

—The forthcoming Wycliffe celebration is attracting considerable attention in religious circles in Great Britain. The arrangements of the Quincentenary Committee are approaching completion, and the celebrations on May 21 promise to be of unusual interest. Peers, bishops, deans and arch-deacons of every church hue, historians, such as Mr. Froude, and college professors are daily being added to the committees. The programme, thus far, comprises a sermon at St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe, Queen Victoria street, church of the parish wherein Wycliffe's doctrines were condemned; a meeting at the Mansion House for the discussion of schemes for perpetuating Wycliffe's memory, and a popular demonstration in Exeter Hall.

—The Morning Star (Baptist) says: "Seventy-five years ago several students of Williams College used to go out behind a 'haystack' in the vicinity and pray for missions. And they prayed to such good purpose that the outcome was the inauguration in this country of the foreign mission movement. There is need—the most urgent need—of a 'haystack' in close proximity to the colleges of the present day, and to the churches as well. 'Wanted: Haystacks!'"

—In Canton, recently a persecution was begun among the Tartan soldiers, of a few Christian believers. An old man of sixty, an attache of the Southern Baptist Mission, was singled out and pressed to sign a paper renouncing Christianity. He refused, and told them they might kill him if they would, but he would not give up his faith. The Tartan general heard of the affair and stopped the persecution, saying: "Christianity is good. The Christians are my best men. I only wish more of my soldiers were Christians."

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION

TO THE LUMBERMEN OF MICHIGAN.

The last report of the blessed work among the lumbermen of eastern Michigan by Bro. W. F. Davis and his companions brings the record down to April 1st. This mission is supported entirely by voluntary offerings and now engages six persons. Any information can be had of Wm. F. Davis, Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass. The report says:

We rejoice to be able to announce, at the end of six months, that the Gospel fountain opened last October at 202 South Washington Street, East Saginaw, has poured forth the healing Word every day since then.

On the evening of February 1st, twenty-six persons rose as disciples of Jesus Christ, twenty-four of whom testified to his goodness by word of mouth. Five at the same meeting expressed a desire and determination to become Christians.

Our noon meetings have been among the most precious and prized. The prescribed quorum of two or three requisite for the effective church administration of the Lord's business, has always been present.

On the morning of each Lord's day Christians meet in affectionate remembrance of our Lord's death and resurrection, and encourage each other to look for his glorious return. Then follows the meeting in the jail at one o'clock. Attending this meeting with Bro. Marsh on the 3d of February, we found eight prisoners incarcerated, of whom six at the close of the service expressed the desire for salvation through Jesus Christ. God grant that they may follow on to know him. At the gospel meeting in the hall that evening eight sought the Saviour.

The cottage meeting on Thursday evening still continues to receive God's blessing in the conversion of sinners.

A teamster who has "followed the woods about twenty years," came home with us on the evening of February 13th, and was anxious for a preacher to visit the camps for which he draws supplies, but specially begged us to first visit a poor woodsman at Coleman, whose right arm had been crushed by the engine of a logging train. Our caller had himself suffered some shocking injuries during his twenty years' experience as teamster in lumber camps.

Starting for Coleman early the following morning, I soon found the injured woodsman, whose arm had been amputated after a delay of ten hours. He gratefully accepted the word preached, promising to live henceforth as Christ commands.

The outside world but feebly realizes the terrible vicissitudes of the lives of woodsmen and mill-men. Dreadful accidents daily transform the finest specimens of physical development into shapeless corpses, or cripples maimed for life.

One hundred and thirty of these sudden and awful deaths, and one hundred and four additional ghastly manglings, liable at any time to issue fatally, are reported in the columns of a single lumber journal as having occurred in the first three months of this year. Other equally appalling casualities have occurred in the camps since January 1st, of which I have seen no published record.

No one can doubt that the gospel, preached in purity and power, would tend to reduce to the minimum the shocking tragedies now daily enacted under the combined misrule of greed, gambling, narcotic poisons, and lust. Mangled, dying men beckon us to come and tell them of a Saviour who died for them, but the great majority of them die unvisited by the gospel.

At the meetings which I have been allowed to address in East Saginaw, in the camps, and in other places, more than five hundred persons have publicly declared their purpose to enter upon a new life of obedience to the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Kind friends, old and new, near and far, have upborne us in their prayers, and shared their money freely with us. Our tears have flowed at the reception of offerings from sewing-girls and widows in Massachusetts, Michigan, Ohio and Rhode Island, from children and Chinese, when we knew not through whom our Father would next supply our daily wants. Our health has been precious in his sight "who careth for us." Avoiding all entangling alliances with the world, and every yoke of ecclesiasticism, we have sought only to exalt the Scripture testimony unto Christ as the only Saviour, and have steadily witnessed against the prevalent vices and sins of our day. Covetousness, fornication, lying, theft, self-poisoning by alcohol and tobacco, and the evils of oath-bound secret societies have received their share of rebuke, according to the grace given, and God has blessed the testimony to the deliverance of many souls out of darkness.

But the good work is only begun. From eighty to one hundred missionaries are imperatively needed to preach the gospel in the neglected regions of Michigan alone. Similar fields invite gospel labor in the timbered tracts of thirty States of our Union. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

THE FRENCH MISSION.

CHICAGO, Ill.

MR. EDITOR:—I am a recanted man from the church of Rome, whose poisonous teachings I have sucked on the lap of my mother. I am recanted not only from the errors of that debased church but I can say, and with joy, that I recanted also from my vices and sins, all cleansed by the blood of Christ, my only, personal Saviour. Hearing that Bro. Seguin has given up also the Pope to follow Christ and preach his Gospel in this city among his countrymen, I can say as Simeon of old, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation," Since my conversion to God, my continual prayer to God was that this free salvation might be preached to my numerous countrymen of Chicago. At last my prayer has been heard and answered. I and many other French Christians pledge ourselves to do all that is in our power to assist our dear Bro. Seguin in bringing souls to Christ. Through Christ we can do wonderful things, and with a man of the stamp of Bro. Seguin and the assistance of our fellow Christians, the American people, we can but expect a grand work done among our deluded Romish brethren. The wheat is gray and the laborers few, but when we get them, why should not we do our share to render them cheerful in this laborious, arduous work of rescuing the perishing souls who are at our doors?

There is much done to send missionaries into strange continents and countries to save the heathen: why should we not begin this glorious work at home? We have got them by scores of thousands in our city. God would move more freely among them if only honest, sincere, genuine, good Christians were willing to lend a helping hand to those who have renounced everything to follow the Master and do his bidding. FRANK DUPIL.

THE
CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The Odd-fellows claim an addition of 22,000 members last year, and an addition of four grand lodges.

—A new order known as the Royal League is gathering in its dupes from the broad way multitude. Its chief officer is called "archon." A lodge of this name most of whom are from the Knights of Pythias has just been organized in this city.

—The Masonic Grand Orient of Italy replies to the Pope almost exactly as described in the striking cartoon of Puck, "Two of a Kind." God has decreed the downfall of the Pope and he may rave about human dignity and lament his lost temporal power.

—At Milford, Mass., Father Cuddihy, the Romish priest, protested publicly against the corner-stone laying of Memorial Hall building by the Freemasons.

—At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the Masons have just had an immense time in their own estimation. The corner-stone of the new Masonic Library building was laid last Wednesday. Theodore S. Parvin, the Grand Secretary, has with much good sense insisted on this building, instead of a great Masonic temple for lodge orgies, after the manner of other States. The library which he has been for years collecting comprises a large number of choice Anti-masonic works, including a file of the Cynosure. The library has been almost doubled by the bequest of Robert F. Bower of Keokuk, a high Mason, who seemed to have a passion for collecting books of all kinds on Masonry, pro and con. He also owned a file of the Cynosure. The Cedar Rapids Masons also laid the corner-stone of a hospital on the same day, and think no such work has been done in one day by the order since the founding of the tower of Babel.

—There are now nine divisions of the Sons of Temperance in the District of Columbia, four of which have been organized this year.

—At Byron, Ill., the Sons of Temperance have a secret political committee, which looks after the elections and arrogates great glory for carrying the town for prohibition. The honest, praying people of that town who are for temperance and not for something so called and hidden behind winks, nods, and passwords of secretism, must feel complimented that public virtue has to be sustained by such means.

—The Illinois Knights of Honor lately met in this city voted that every member of the order should pay eighty cents tax for the State lodge and $600 as their proportion of the expenses of the "Supreme" lodge which meets here this week.

HOW TO DEAL WITH FREEMASONRY IN COURTS.

On one occasion, said Oakey Hall in his reminiscences, a witness to all moral conclusions, perjured himself, and yet he seemed cool and natural. Presently the recorder of the court turned in his peculiar, affable way, and said: "My friend, the room is not hot, the day is cold, and yet you are in a perspiration, are you not?" There were no signs of this, but the witness instantly caught up his handkerchief and began to mechanically wipe his forehead. "Are you ill; you look so pale?" He responded by turning pale and gulping down some water. Here the counsel for the defense showed signs of wishing to interfere, being afraid of his witness breaking down, but the recorder interposed with: "Sorry to have agitated you, but my duty is like yours" (the recorder had an impressive voice,) "to ascertain nothing but the truth." Then the witness turned and said: "Please let me go; I am indeed ill." His testimony was withdrawn by consent. At the conclusion of the case the recorder said to me: "I knew he was committing perjury, for he had a peculiar tremor of the eyelids, which, from my nearness to a witness, I can always see. And this tremor may generally be noticed in men and women who are lying."

SEVEN GREAT

MONARCHIES of the Ancient Eastern World. By GEORGE RAWLINSON. Best American edition. Complete in three volumes of over 2,000 pages, and over 700 illustrations and maps. Price reduced from $18 to $2.40. NOW READY. Specimen pages free. NOT sold by dealers.

"One of the best historical works of the Nineteenth Century. It covers the ground as that ground is covered by no other publication in the English language, and shows splendid critical ability, as well as profound scholarship and laborious research. Marvelously as cheap as it is, this classic work should now find its way into every library in the land."—THE HERALD, Syracuse, N. Y.

"'The Seven Great Monarchies of the Eastern World' ranks with the greatest historical works of modern times, with Gibbon's 'Roman Empire,' Grote's 'Greece,' Green's 'England,' and Bancroft's 'United States.' In some respects it is a greater work, displaying more labor, more scholarship, and more critical ability. It is, perhaps, not so well known, because it is so expensive that it has not been within the reach of people of moderate means. But John B. Alden, the well-known New York publisher, appreciating the importance of a cheap edition, has begun to republish such an edition in three volumes. There is now no excuse for any one to be without one of the greatest historical works of the century."—DEMOCRAT AND CHRONICLE, Rochester, N. Y.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphin.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM AND GARDEN.

STRAWBERRIES.

The soil and culture of this delicious and early appearing fruit is a very important factor necessary to real success. While it is true the range of latitude and soil upon which it is naturally found and will grow is quite extensive, yet to obtain it in great perfection and at the same time realize the large crop which it is capable of producing, there is an apparent choice of soil and conditions from which the cultivator cannot depart, or the ingenuity of man has not been able altogether to solve or produce artificially.

What would be considered in an agricultural point of view rich soil, or such as would produce 25 bushels of wheat per acre, might fail to produce a satisfactory crop, and on the other hand a soil or condition of same that would not produce ten bushels of wheat per acre might bring forth a heavy and satisfactory crop of handsome berries. It therefore appears, a well stuffed soil with plant food might be a comparative failure unless the mechanical conditions were such as is described by the natural habits or desires of the plant. A pertinent inquiry now would be, what kind of soil naturally does the plant require, or how can the mechanical conditions of uncongenial soil be made acceptable by artificial means, or at least as near as they may be by the intelligence and means at our command.

In the first place my observation leads me to conclude it is one of those species of the vegetable kingdom whose roots delight and revel in the genial warmth produced by the sun's rays (the corn plant being another), just as much as you or I would enjoy in holding our feet, if cold and wet, to a warm, blazing fire on the hearth. Such being the nature and desire of the plant it would follow, the soil best suited by natural conditions would be one that is of a loamy open character, or a new clearing full of vegetable material, so that heavy beating rains would not compact and run the surface together, thereby excluding the sun's rays from penetrating and warming the earth immediately in contact with the fine fibrous feeding roots. You who have been close observers will, I think, agree with me that the large crops of fine, handsome and good berries have been and will be produced where such conditions exist, and are I think, due more to the loose open condition of the surface soil than actual richness, provided the subsoil is not of a leechy character, but on the contrary, retentive of moisture. It would follow then, heavy clay soils, especially when well worn by continued cropping of grain, would be very unfavorable and uncertain for strawberry growing. Such has been the result of my observation and experience, especially with reference to the fruit, while so far as the growth and multiplicity of the plant is concerned, the result has been more satisfactory where judicious manuring has been resorted to.

I have in mind now an instance of the Sharpless strawberry last spring, on the loamy, sandy, warm open soil of the big Miami Valley, where the gentleman who saw the bed exclaimed it was a sight truly wonderful to behold—he believed he could pick a handful at one grab. This soil is perfectly congenial to corn and 60 to 75 bushels per acre can be raised with only ordinary culture, and is not rich, in the true acceptation of the term, either.

Upon the heavy clay soils, unless newly cleared and full of vegetable matter, there seems to me no way by which they can be brought into proper mechanical condition for field culture, or on a large scale, except at a cost much too great for the profits to be realized therefrom. On a small scale, however, for the amateur and home garden I think it possible by the following means: Gather road dust off the graveled roads and turnpikes in the summer time, or haul sand or fine gravel from the creeks and gravel banks, and spread some three inches evenly over the surface of the ground and work it in and through the soil evenly. In the absence of mineral matters vegetable substances may be used, and it would seem to me the most convenient and best would be corn fodder run through a cutting box and chopped into pieces not more than one-half to three-fourths of an inch in length. No objections to some leaves or cut straw of about the same length mixed in. The coating to be spread on and worked in the same as in the case of dust or sand and gravel. This would leave the soil open and porous, admitting the rays and warmth of the sun in upon the roots, at the same time conserving moisture and furnishing vegetable food for the plants.

Within my own personal knowledge, some cultivators have failed in securing satisfactory crops, both in yield, appearance and quality, on such soil, although their industrious efforts and anxiety were worthy of the fullest success. These thoughts, therefore, have been written with a view of awakening experiment to ascertain if it is not possible almost anywhere and everywhere in this favored land, to obtain this choice early appearing fruit in its best and pristine condition, on a small scale, at the least expense.—From a Paper before the Cincinnati Horticultural Society.

HOW TO PLANT TREES IN STRAIGHT ROWS.

The Country Gentleman lately published the following easy method of planting trees in straight rows:

"The orchard is first laid out with lines, placing a small stake wherever a tree is to be set. Then take a board six or eight inches in width and about ten feet in length and bore a hole in each end, and cut a notch in the middle of the board just large enough to admit the stem of the tree. When ready to dig a hole for the tree, this board is laid down on the surface so that the notch in the middle fits the stake marking the position of the tree; small pegs are then thrust into the holes at the ends of the board. The board is then removed and the hole dug. Then replace the board on the end pegs, and the notch in the center will show exactly where the tree is to be placed. This will bring the trees in exact straight rows, and be more satisfactory than by trying to straighten them by ranging and sighting with the eye. Fence posts can be set in the same manner with far less trouble and labor than by the usual method of sighting them, and with greater accuracy."

GROWING PUMPKINS WITH CORN.

Pumpkins are valuable for stock in autumn and early winter, or as long as they can be conveniently kept, though the amount of nutriment, in proportion to bulk to be taken care of, and their liability to decay, have led most farmers to discard them, and adopt roots or squashes for succulent food. As a rule, every crop needs all the ground it occupies, and all the air and sunlight available. Corn is a "sun plant," and to shade the soil and the lower stalks with the dense foliage of pumpkin vines must be more or less injurious, even if the latter do not rob the former of any needed nutriment. On very fertile, new soils, with short-stalked varieties of corn, in localities where frost is not to be feared, it may be allowable to plant pumpkin seed at the second hoeing, in every third or fourth hill, in each second or third row. With favorable weather, the corn will produce about the usual yield, and after the early gathering of the corn, the growing pumpkins, thus exposed to full sunlight, will ripen up those pretty well developed. As a rule, let the pumpkins have the whole ground; but still better are the harder fleshed squashes, which will probably supply more nutriment than field pumpkins, whether for man or beast.—American Agriculturist for May.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 429 pp.....75 cts.

Hand Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "Standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees; paper cover.....35c

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

IN BRIEF.

A vessel off Paris reports falling in with a mass of spiders floating in the air. The rigging and sails were covered with the web, the long threads of which formed the balloon for the tiny aeronauts. For several miles this spider swarm continued, the captain estimating that there were millions blown from land.

It is expected that 200,000 head of cattle will be driven from Texas into Colorado this year, and that 50,000 more will come from other Western States. The calf crop this year is about 250,000, and when all the new cattle are there, Colorado stock will amount to about 2,000,000. The largest purchasers of Texas cattle have been the Pryor Brothers of Pueblo. They will drive 45,000 head into Colorado, and to do that will require a force of 40 men and 400 horses. The journey will last from sixty to ninety days.

The late public meeting in Exeter Hall, presided over by Lord Shaftesbury, to protest against over pressure in elementary schools, brought out the fact that the number of deaths from different forms of brain trouble among children of school age had lately increased from twenty to fifty per cent. The fact noted by Mr. Hoyle that in some districts forty per cent of the children go to school without their breakfasts may account for these figures. This is a condition of things full of warning. Our city principals and boards of education should ponder such statistics.

Going to the Reichstag Bismarck is guarded as closely as the Czar when he appears in public. Police agents in plain clothes are posted all along the way from his house and even in the Chamber itself, and no one—not even a regular Government employe—is admitted to any part of the building without a special permit. As soon as the Chancellor reaches his desk, attendants place before him half a dozen well-sharpened pencils and a large glass of Moselle wine.

The Greenock Advertiser, a Scotch Tory paper, announces its demise within black borders in the following terms: "In memoriam: The Greenock Advertiser, which, having survived empires and revolutions, dies at last because the party to which its best efforts were devoted is so inspired by the spirit of Christian meekness that it prefers journals which misrepresent its sayings and revile its policy. Born 8th January, 1802; died 8th April, 1884. Too bad for blessing, yet too good for banning."

Some remarkable stories of the freaks of the late tornado have come into Macon, Georgia, showing the great force of the wind. In Chipley Mr. Delford's body was blown against a tree an was wrapped around it in such a way that it had to be stripped in shreds from the trunk. Mrs. Lanford was found lying amid the wreck of her home, her infant child clasped in her arms with an embrace so strong that the strength of four men was required to release the child from the arms of its mother. The home of Dr. Thornton was scattered like chaff before the wind. His wife and a one-week-old babe were blown some distance and were lodged upon a feather bed which had been blown ahead by the wind. Mrs. Thornton says she could see by the flashing lightning that her babe was drowning in the torrents of water, and that by shaking it and turning its face downward she saved its life. Mr. Irvin was ill with typhoid fever when his house blew away around him. He lifted the timbers off his bed, which it afterward required the strength of four men to move. A waterspout formed in Paulding county, which dug a hole forty feet deep. The rain did $100,000 damage in Heard county.

The Western Union Telegraph Company has ordered a reduction of from 20 to 30 per cent on the rates to prominent points in the South and West. All night messages to points as far west as Kansas City will be forwarded at 15 cents for ten words and 1 cent for each additional word. There will be no change in the tariff for Eastern messages.

A number of prominent electricians and representatives of electric lightning companies from all parts of the country met at the works of the Bain electric company, Chicago, to witness the public exhibition of a new electric generator invented by Force Bain, which was a wonderful and unexpected success. At the exhibition one generator supplied an electric current to six arc lights, each of 2,000 candle power. The generator was run by a single leather belt only five-eighths of an inch wide, running at a speed of 2,000 feet per minute, and thus giving 1,000 revolutions to the generator. Elliot's indicator card showed that but one horse power was required. The second test demonstrated the fact that the generator can work both arc and incandescent lights at the same time, or, working independently, can supply a current to sixty incandescent lamps. In the third test, a six-light generator was connected with the Bain meter, which ran a powerful two-stamp ore crushing mill at high speed with perfect ease, showing that the only loss in original energy was due to friction, which was about three per cent. —Standard.

AN ARMY EXPERIENCE.

HOW AN OLD VETERAN ESCAPED ANNIHILATION AND LIVED TO IMPART A WARNING TO OTHERS.

(National Tribune of Washington.)

A pleasing occurrence which has just come to our notice in connection with the New York State meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic, is so unusual in many respects that we venture to reproduce it for the benefit of our readers.

Captain Alfred Rensom of New York, while pacing in the lobby of the armory, previous to one of the meetings, suddenly stopped and scanned the face of a gentlemau who was in earnest conversation with one of the Grand Army officers. It seemed to him that he had seen that face before, partially obscured by the smoke of battle, and yet this bright and pleasant countenance could not be the same pale and deathlike visage which he so dimly remembered. But the recollection, like Banquo's ghost, would not "down" at command, and haunted him the entire day. On the day following he again saw the same countenance, and ventured to speak to its owner. The instant the two veterans heard each other's voices, that instant they recognized and called each other by name. Their faces and forms had changed, but their voices were the same. The man whom Captain Rensom had recognized was Mr. W. K. Sage of St. Johns, Mich., a veteran of the 23rd N. Y. Light Artillery, and both members of Burnside's famous expedition to North Carolina. After the first greetings were over, Captain Rensom said:

"It hardly seems possible, Sage, to see you in this condition, for I thought you must have been dead long ago."

"Yes, I do not doubt it, for if I am not mistaken, when we last met I was occupying a couch in the hospital, a victim of 'Yellow Jack' in its worst form."

"I remember. The war seems to have caused more misery since its close than when it was in progress," replied the Captain. "I meet old comrades frequently who are suffering terribly, not so much from old wounds as from the malarial poisons which ruined their constitutions."

"I think so myself. When the war closed I returned home, and at times I would feel well, but every few weeks that confounded 'all-gone' feeling would come upon me again. My nervous system, which was shattered in the service, failed me entirely and produced one of the worst possible cases of nervous dyspepsia. Most of the time I had no appetite; then again I would become ravenously hungry, but the minute I sat down to eat I loathed food. My skin was dry and parched, my flesh loose and flabby. I could hold nothing on my stomach for days at a time, and what little I did eat failed to assimilate. I was easily fatigued; my mind was depressed; I was cross and irritable, and many a night my heart would pain me so I could not sleep, and when I did I had horrid dreams and frightful nightmares. Of course, these things came on one by one, each worse than the other. My breath was foul, my tongue was coated, my teeth decayed. I had terrific headaches which would leave my nervous system completely shattered. In fact my existence, since the war, has been a living death, from which I have often prayed for release."

"Couldn't the old surgeon do you any good?"

"I wrote him, and he treated me, but like every other doctor, failed. They all said my nerve was gone, and without that to build upon I could not get well. When I was at my worst, piles of the severest nature came upon me. Then my liver gave out, and without the use of cathartics I could not move my bowels at all. My blood got like a stream of fire, and seemed literally to burn me alive."

"Well, you might better have died in battle, quick and without ceremony."

"How many times I have wished I had died the day we captured Newberne."

"And yet you are now the picture of health."

"And the picture is taken from life. I am in perfect condition. My nerve tone is restored; my stomach reinvigorated; my flesh is hard and healthy; in fact I have new blood, new energy and a new lease of life wholly as the result of using Warner's Tippecanoe. This remarkable preparation, which I consider the finest tonic and stomach restorer in the world, has overcome all the evil influences of malaria, all the poison of the army, all traces of dyspepsia, all mal-assimilation of food, and, indeed, made a new man of me."

The Captain remained silent for a while evidently musing over his recollections of the past. When he again raised his head he said:

"It would be a godsend if all the veterans who have suffered so intensely and also all others in the land who are enduring so much misery could know of your experience, Sage, and the way by which you have been restored."

And that is why the above conversation is recounted.

The Culture of Beauty.

ALTHOUGH nature alone can produce perfect beauty, art may in a great measure supply nature's deficiencies. We see this instanced in the clearness and lustre imparted to even a sallow skin by Glenn's Sulphur Soap. The lady of forty, who uses this beautifier, drops at least ten years of her age. Unlike the dangerous cosmetics which obstruct the pores, it is entirely harmless. See that "C. N. Crittenton, Proprietor," is printed on each packet, without which none is genuine. Sold by druggists and fancy goods dealers.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The House of Representatives Thursday passed the bill appropriating $100,000,000 for the Cotton Exposition at New Orleans.

—The iron-clad oath adopted during the early days of the war was repealed last week, the House concurring in the Senate bill which passed some time ago.

—In the Senate Wednesday Senator Edmunds introduced a bill to place General U. S. Grant on the retired list of the army. He would then draw $15,000 salary.

—The Secretary of War has directed a national salute of twenty-one guns to be fired from Fort Columbus, New York harbor, on the occasion on the departure of the Arctic steamer Alert, in honor of the English ensign which will be displayed at the fore. This is in recognition of the action of the British Government in giving this vessel to the United States for use in search of the Greeley party.

—The House Committee on Postoffices and Postroads has made its report on the postal telegraph bill. A majority of the committee were opposed to the United States either purchasing or constructing and operating a telegraphic system on its own account, and approve a contract system, which is simply the application of the principle involved in carrying the mail to the transmission of the telegraph business of the country.

COUNTRY.

—An arbitration committee, appointed for the purpose, as required by law, examined the 100,000 pounds of tea condemned by Inspector Barnard, and affirmed his condemnation.

—Undermined by floods, the Methodist colored church at McKinney, Texas, collapsed Monday night while filled with worshipers. Two lamps exploded, scattering the blazing oil broadcast, one woman being burned to death and another fatally scalded. A great panic prevailed.

—William Missey, paying teller of the Bank of Commerce, Baltimore, was arrested Wednesday, charged with embezzling $57,000 by false entries.

—Pere Hyacinthe, the French Catholic reformer, who with his wife and young son is visiting his mother-in-law at Madison, Wis., spoke there last week to a large audience on "America and France."

—A dreadful wreck occurred on the St. Louis division of the Wabash railroad ten miles from Decatur early Wednesday morning. The two rear coaches and a sleeper were thrown from the track, and forty people injured, three thought to be fatally.

—The steamship Titania arrived at Montreal having on board twenty-four of the crew of the steamship State of Florida. The latter collided with a bark in mid-ocean and went right down. Out of 167 souls only forty-four were saved, if the other twenty have also been picked up. The bark also went down with 12 souls.

—Train-wreckers, five of whom were captured, ditched an express near Queretaro, Mexico, Tuesday night, the engine and two cars being overturned and the mail agent injured.

—The Massachusetts Prohibition State Convention was held Wednesday at Boston, the resolutions declaring for the suppression of the liquor traffic by constitutional and statuory measures.

—The steamer City of Portland, plying between Portland, Me., and St. John, N. B., struck on a ledge off Owl's Head early Thursday morning, and broke up. The passengers and officers kept cool, and no lives were lost, a sloop and steamer taking off all on board.

—Eleven models and thirty-two drawings for the Garfield monument, submitted by European and American artists, have been received at Cleveland and are on exhibition.

—The Marine Bank of New York suspended Tuesday, May 6th, causing a great sensation in that city. J. D. Fish, the president, has business relations with Ward, partner of General Grant in the banking company of Grant and Ward, which was seriously affected by the bank failure, and suspended next day. A partial examination of the failure shows that the loss of the latter firm will amount to $8,000,000. This enormous failure is laid to the inexperience and speculative habits of Gen. Grant's two sons, who were also in business together, and have failed. His partner Ward is also greatly blamed and is under arrest. This failure will leave Gen. Grant without property, except a gift of $250,000 raised by the New York Times, and which is invested for him and the principal of which is out of his reach.

—Residents of the towns of Brisbin and Gilman's Depot, Pa., destroyed by the forest fires, are in great distress, sleeping in their clothes wherever they can find shelter. Assistance in clothing and money is needed. The loss by the fires in Elk county, Pa., will reach $1,000,000. In most of the districts rain has subdued the flames.

—A locomotive exploded in the Missouri Pacific round house at Parson, Kan., Friday, blowing two persons through the roof and wounding several others, besides demolishing the structure. The financial loss is $30,000.

—The lower section of Davenport, Iowa, was swept by a cyclone Monday evening last week, a number of structures being demolished. One person was killed and many others wounded.

—In the United States and Canada during April the fire losses were $10,300,000, and since January $37,550,000, nearly $6,000,000 greater than for the first four months of 1883.

—The greatest portions of Tensas and Madison Parishes, Louisiana, are inundated, and colored people are gathered on the levees waiting to be removed. Gnats are killing the mules and cattle which have not died of starvation.

—The probabilities that a general strike of iron workers will be inaugurated at Pittsburgh, June 1st, are increasing. Oliver Brothers & Phillips' three mills have suspended operations, and it is said that they will not resume until the wages question is settled.

FOREIGN.

—Two English railway companies, owing to the depression in trade, discharged 2,500 employes, and reduced the salaries of clerks 10 per cent.

—British imports decreased in April, compared with April last year, £8,300,000. The exports increased £308,000, compared with April last year.

—Judah P. Benjamin, formerly United State Senator from Louisiana and ex-member of the Southern Confederacy, died at London Wednesday.

—Near Queretaro, Mexico, wreckers threw the baggage car of a Mexican Central train from the track but were frightened off by military, who shot and killed three of the banditti. The train carried $60,000 in silver.

—The prefect of police of Berlin has received letters threatening to blow up the Parliament chambers with dynamite upon Bismarck's next appearance.

—Bismarck has sent a formal protest to London and Lisbon against the ratification of the Congo treaty. It is reported the King of the Belgians has intimated to Earl Granville his readiness to dispatch Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, to lead an expedition to the highest accessible point in the Congo region, for the purpose of aiding General Gordon in his retreat from Khartoum, upon the condition that the English Government shall recognize the International African Association.

—An Arab journal affirms that El Mahdi demands a ransom of £500,000 for General Gordon's release, the sum to be paid to him within three months.

—General Wolseley advises that General Graham be placed in command of the autumn expedition to Khartoum. If an English force is sent the war office plan is that 5,000 troops shall start from Assioot for Khartoum about the end of July.

—Attempts are now being made to send messengers to General Gordon in Khartoum by all routes, including Massowah, with the Earl Granville's message of April 24, asking Gordon how many troops he requires, but not positively promising him any assistance.

—Outbreaks between soldiers and natives are of daily occurrence in Egypt. Friday a fight took place outside Alexandria between a party of English soldiers and a number of Bedouins from Lake Mareotis, in which several were killed. The Arabs around Assouan have received a message from El Mahdi, and threaten to revolt.

—Advices from Tientsein say that Captain Fournier, acting in behalf of the French Government, and Hi Hung Chang for China have signed a treaty, under the provisions of which China recognizes the French protectorate over Tonquin and Annam, with existing frontiers. It stipulated that the contracting parties shall together regulate the customs police on the frontier. The provinces of Quang Tung, Kuang Hi, and Yunnan will be opened to general trade. No indemnity will be paid to France.

Prof. Richard A. Proctor, the English astronomer, is to erect a fine house in St. Joseph, Mo., and will make his residence there, arriving in June or July. St. Joseph was the former residence of his wife. He will devote himself mostly to literary pursuits, but will do some lecturing in the lecture season.

In Austria they know better how to deal with Mormonism than we. A missionary of that depraved system has been condemned to a month's imprisonment by the Austrian courts. President Taylor's proselyters will take warning and the young women of Austria will be saved from the enticement of these fanatical apostles of infamy.

New Orleans is preparing to offer the world a much more honorable entertainment that the profligate Mardi Gras. In December next she will open a World's Fair which will be open five months and in which every State and Territory and nearly every nation will be represented. Congress has just voted $1,000,000 for its expenses and in some respects the Centennial at Philadelphia promises to be eclipsed. This enterprise deserves special notice as the first of the kind ever attempted in the Southern States, and like the Atlanta Cotton Exhibition manifests a return of business energy and tone to a land long cursed with the lethargy of slavery and the waste of war.

Talmage in a late sermon on theatres and actors denounced in his sweeping and passionate style the plays of the last fifteen years as being almost universally unfit for American families to witness. Said he: "You might as well go to the village grog-shop as to go to see the 'Ticket-of-Leave-Man' to obtain moral elevation. 'She Stoops to Conquer' is as full of moral miasma as were the dives of Pompeii, and the 'School for Scandal' is rotten clear through with lasciviousness." Mr. Talmage speaks after personal investigation; but it is not necessary to taste the cup of poison and sensual delirium to know what its effect must be. In any part of a large city where brothels are thickest, there will be the low theatres whose flaming posters in all the neighboring streets are a constant appeal to depraved and inflamed appetites of bad men and women. On the Friday night after Talmage's sermon President Arthur attended Wallack's theatre, New York, and saw the play, "She Stoops to Conquer."

At the Father Hyacinthe meeting in Farwell Hall, Chicago, last week, Dr. Lorimer, the representative of the military order of Knight Templar Freemasons presiding over a prominent Baptist church on the South Side, was down for a short speech. He closed by comparing Pere Hyacinthe to a victor who had siezed a flag. After slaying the standard-bearer he breaks the flag-staff from the dead man's grip. So had Hyacinthe left the "stinking, putrid carcass of popery, a system whose old head, the pope, dares to make opposition to Masonry," etc. The Rev. Mason uttered this sentiment with a very pronounced emphasis of scornful disgust. He was confident of the support of some in his audience and was at least safe from any reply by others. This was perhaps the first time Masonry has been advocated openly in any public meeting of general character in this city. If Dr. Lorimer is willing to defend the position he has so boldly taken and maintain that the pope's condemnation of Masonry is wrong the Cynosure will find an antagonist to debate the question publicly with him.

Chicago has had one nominating convention for the campaign and Butler is the first candidate to be set upon the pedestal in 1884. The anti-monopoly meeting of Wednesday last was not formidable in numbers or in ability, if we may believe the press reports: it was, in short, very like to the meeting of last year, part iron and a good share of clay in personal character. The platform, which has nothing for female suffrage or against the national banking system, is quite general in its condemnation of abuses. It opens finely with the declaration that "labor and capital should be allies, not enemies, and we demand justice for both by protecting the rights of all as agaiust privileges for the few." Let this sentiment prevail among the workingmen and it will be honored also by employers. But for a convention of anti-monopolists to vote, on the nomination of a woman from California, for Ben Butler, is a joke for a cartoon in Puck. Butler with his thirty-three degrees of lodge monopoly; swollen with a monopoly of titles: Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret, Sovereign Grand Inspector General, Prince of Mercy, Grand Pontiff, Graud Elect Perfect and Sublime Mason, etc.; a monopolist of capital; and the great monopolist of political chicanery—it is the joke of the campaign. The anti-monopolists have their leader as the frogs had their king.

There is one striking feature of the New York panic. It began with General Grant, who has been the idol of a large political party and a kind of demigod with a large following in that party, and who has had undoubtedly the confidence of a large majority of all parties; it dragged down the great Metropolitan Bank and its president, George I. Seney, whose name has been within the past year attached to some of the largest gifts to benevolent and religious enterprises; and it practically ended in the suspension of the firm of Fisk and Hatch, whose names are also known to philanthropy. Mr. Hatch gives largely for the advancement of religion and follows his gifts with personal effort, assisting Jerry McAuley in his Cremorne Mission. It is a warning for all when men who are trusted get into the bad company of speculators and stock gamblers.

The enemies of righteousness have made another attack on public morals in Chicago. The managers of the Driving Park have given out that during the season they will have racing on the Sabbath. The announcement has aroused an indignant protest from pulpit and press. The Inter Ocean has collected the opinions of a large number of men, most of them patrons of the race-course, who unanimously condemn the innovation; though if asked to show in what respect the Sunday theatre, which is tolerated here, or the Sunday base-ball game which has just opened are less depraving, they would hesitate for an answer. Last Sabbath a "Buffalo Bill" combination of Indians, cow-boys, ponies and buffaloes drew a crowd of over 40,000 to the driving park, and the managers of the races see with greedy delight the prospect of its repetition. Of the sermons against this desecration Dr. Kittredge of the Third Preslyterian church was most severe and personal. In the meeting of park managers three whisky-sellers carried the vote for Sunday races. They promise no liquor shall be sold on the grouuds, but no lack of it will be found outside. Dr. Kittredge characterized the Sunday race course thus: "Put together in one vast caldron of vice the saloon, the gambling hell, the low theatre, and the brothel, and you have a true picture of the Sunday race-course. It is a carnival of drunkenness and gambling." Of the directors of the park he said: "The burglar and the highwayman are better friends to the poor man than are these hypocritical money-makers who invite him to the Sunday races and there first take his few earnings, then take his reason, then his purity, and, if he is willing, his manhood." But liquor-sellers are not the men to quail before public sentiment, and give up a profitable enterprise. They know, too, that they have nothing to fear from the Masonic city government. But to the so-called respectable patrons of the race-course, this revelation of its character should be like the opening of a chasm at their feet, revealing the blasting horrors of the pit, whither all these ways of vice broadly lead down.

OATHS.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES, GRIMSBY, ENGLAND.

The subject of oaths has just been brought before the country in a pamphlet by J. M., uuderstood to be Sir John Mellor, late Judge of the Queen's Bench Division. The subject is placed in a very clear and forcible way. He says that "the existing want of reverence and awe rightly attached to the name of God is mainly due to the frequent and profaue use of oaths." The writer is convinced by a long judicial experience that oaths are worthless as a test of truth, and so he advocates their abolition; but would retain the punishment for false declarations wherever the law prescribes a penalty for an oath. He avers that "an honest man's testimony will not be made more true under the sanction of an oath, and a dishonest man will only be affected by the dread of temporal punishment. He maintains that the oath of allegiance is unnecessary, vain, and therefore profane. This oath does not extend or make stronger the duty of allegiance which is a fundamental principle of the Constitution. As the oath fails in this, the writer maintains that it involves the taking of the name of God in vain. As a substitute for the oath he suggests the signing of a declaration by every member of Parliament on taking his seat, that he will give "allegiance to the Queen, her heirs, and successors according to law." This would interfere with no person's conscience and would be a great saving of time and trouble, and to our thinking would be in harmony with the teachings of him who said "Swear not at all."

There are many persons, however, who think that oaths and oath-taking are sacred and respectable survivals of antiquity, and are a kind of heritage bequeathed to us by the early Christian church. Such persons would do well to read a very excellent epitome of the subject in an able and learned work by the late Edward Backhouse entitled Early Church History. It is there shown that the early Christian writers deprecated all use of oaths and would not on any occasion resort to them. The names of Clement, Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Chrysostom, Jerome, Ambrose, and many others are quoted as strong in their opposition to all kinds of oaths. Basilides, a catechumen of Origen's, in 202 A. D. was beheaded rather than take an oath in his profession of a soldier, declaring that, as a Christian, it was not lawful for him to swear at all. Evidently these early Christians could not have been enticed into any secret order or conclave whatever.

NEW JERUSALEM.

Jerusalem in Hebrew is a compound word, the latter part often found in plural form. In this respect it is like Elohim, chayim, damim, etc., and may portend or imply peace in a double sense, internal or external, as Elohim may imply the triune deity or Three in one; chayim, life of body and soul, etc.

We read of New Jerusalem in Revelation, 21st chapter, a great city and holy, having a wall great and high upon twelve foundations, also twelve gates of solid pearl. The foundations were garnished with all manner of precious stones; similar, I presume, to those in the priestly breast-plate of judgment. The glory of God did lighten it and the Lamb is the light thereof. The value of a precious stone is its light or lustre. Disarrange its particles and dim its light and it is carbon, silex, alumina, etc. The Word was made flesh. In him was life and the life was the light of men. "Know you not that Christ is in you except you be reprobate." The same that lightens the city lightens the truly regenerate soul. "The glory of God did lighten it and the Lamb is the light thereof." "If the light that is in thee be darkness how great is that darkness?" Carbon, alumina,—oh, what opacity! If no light of Christ enlightens the dark lodges of secretism are its oath-bound dupes admissible to that of the holy city? How can they boast other religious light than that of Satan's transformation? He appears to be the "Grand Architect" that helped build their system of divinity and honor,—"Unto their assembly mine honor be not thou united." "What then of their grand lodge above?" "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city." "For without are dogs and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolators, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." Is such the place and companionship for "Rev. Septimus Jones?" QUAKER BOY.

ANTI-CHRISTS.

ADDRESS OF PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD IN CARPENTER HALL BEFORE THE CHICAGO ANTI-SECRECY CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

There are certain themes which are rarely presented in the pulpits and from the platforms of to-day. This is as you all know a business age, a time of railroads, steamships, telegraphs, telephones, small margins, large sales and high pressure in every department of human life. Our papers, pulpits and public speakers deal with the practical, the present, and perhaps we are likely to forget that the great forces which determine the future are often hidden as the turbine which drives a whole mill is less conspicuous than the vane on the tower which simply tells the direction of the wind. Let us to-night pause for a single moment amid the din and hurry of life and consider one of the great facts, which, less conspicuous than many others, is perhaps second to none in practical importance.

It is agreed generally that the expression, last, times in the Bible denotes the period intervening between the first and second comings of our Lord Jesus Christ. These last times have already continued eighteen hundred years and more, and it is now the opinion of many that they are near their end, while others believe that they are to continue indefinitely. I mention this diversity of judgment simply in passing, and call your attention to the fact that the presence of anti-Christs is one of the characteristics of that time. Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that anti-Christ shall come, even now there are many anti-Christs whereby we know that it is the last time. 1 John 2: 18. This is to be noted because we are confessedly living in these last times and if anti-Christs be characteristic of them, then we should be careful to penetrate their disguises, and reject their pretensions. Now, as in the days of John, there are many.

It is also to be remembered that though anti-Christs are many there is yet one who by reason of his malignance, power and success is called the anti-Christ. By comparing the passage quoted above with 2 Thess. 2: 3–10, we see that there are to be two things before the coming of the Lord, viz.: First, an apostacy, a general falling away from God and his truth, and, Second, a revelation or manifestation of the man of sin, that wicked one who is called in John the anti-Christ. 1 John 2: 18. We are then to remember that while at the present time there are many un-Christian, anti-Christian wicked institutions and men, there will come a time when all the rage and malice of Satan will be concentrated in one powerful man who will claim the throne of Jesus and seek to make good his claim by war.

We find in the 22d verse of the chapter referred to above, the distinguishing characteristic of the anti-Christs. They are men or societies which deny Jesus. Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is anti-Christ that denieth the Father and the Son. 1 John 2: 22. Wherever, then, we find those who deny Jesus to be the Anointed One, there we find anti-Christ. This simple test shows how erroneous the opinion of those who hold, as almost all Protestant commentators do, that the church of Rome is so designated. The popes have never denied that Jesus was Christ, and in general the church of Rome holds the truth of the Bible. Protestants found their objections to the papal church not so much because of denials as because of additions. It is not so much what they omit as what they insert.

Other marks of anti-Christ are cruelty, craftiness, boastfulness, blasphemies, false miracles and the like. 2 Thess. 2: 4, 9, 10; Dan. 7: 25; Dan. 8: 23–25. And it cannot be denied that these secondary characteristics of anti-Christ have been found in the ecclesiastical system above named. It is strange, however, that so few scholars have observed how perfectly the lodge system of to-day fulfills the entire description of anti-Christ. For example, secret societies in general entirely ignore the names and claims of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Do you believe in one God?" is the question usually put to the candidate at the entrance of the lodge. Inside are prayers which do not mention the name of Jesus; readings from the Scripture are selected that do not name him, and when his name does occur in the Scriptures selected in the Masonic Royal Arch chapter that holy name is stricken out. This particular society, and in a certain measure all others which are modeled after it deny that Jesus is Christ; not in words, which would be manly if not Christian, but by acts, which are neither one nor the other.

As in this great particular so in others. Secret societies are continually speaking great, swelling words: Worshipful, Right Worthy, Grand, General Grand, Sublime Princes, Most Puissant, Sovereign Grand High Priest, Grand High Priest, General Grand High Priest, etc., etc. God himself does not when speaking of his own will, word, and work adorn himself with such titles as may be found in a whole family of secret societies. So also in the matter of cruelty, the penalties in Freemasonry, throat-cutting, tongue-tearing, beheading, etc., etc., social ostracism, business opposition and other lines of secret society defence clearly indicate the spirit that animates the lodge system. In the lodge which planned the murder of William Morgan were two ministers and both of them advocated the crime, while at the present time it is not difficult to find men who will affirm that if a man breaks his obligation to a secret society he should be killed.

The close of correspondence between the Bible descriptions of anti-Christ and the Masonic system comes out very clearly under a close examination. The Master of the Blue Lodge personates the Lord Jesus Christ. The High Priest of the chapter personates God Almighty. In the chapter they use an imitation ark of the covenant, imitation manna, a pine stick with tissue paper flowers represents Aaron's rod that budded, and the unspeakable name of God is used as a test word by drunken and profane members of a secret lodge. Along with these blasphemies is an assumption of innocence, a denial of selfish ends, especially of a religious or political sort, and a continual boasting of purchased charities which would be marvelous were they not so common. Any one who will study with a little care the Bible descriptions of the man of sin and the manuals of secret lodges will, I think, arrive at the conclusion, that today anti-Christ is the lodge system of the world.

The question instantly arises: How then can so many professors of religion be connected with such societies? Nor is an answer far to seek. The divinely foretold order of events is: 1st. The Apostacy. 2d. The anti-Christ. 3d. The Lord from heaven. We are now living in the times of falling away when the love of many waxes cold and iniquity abounds. False doctrines and bad living are now in possession of the religious world. Becoming a Christian has ceased to involve separation from the world. The world and the church instead of being enemies as they are by the Word of God required to be, have become friends, and in too many cases ministers of the Gospel lead in the departure from the apostolic practice and teaching. A strong writer has said that no nation was ever yet corrupted without the consent of the clergy, and there are many reasons for considering this statement true. It is also to be said that many men have united with these anti-Christs in ignorance of their real character, and after once putting on the chains they have not strength to break them.

WHAT WILL THE END

be? Why, the tares and the wheat will grow together until the end of the age—until harvest time. Matt. 13: 30, 39. Anti-Christian systems will continue to develop power and malignancy until the anti-Christ shall come, take his place in the temple of God, show himself as God, and when his power is greatest and the whole world is wondering with a great admiration, Jesus will come and destroy in an instant him and his adherents.

But some one may say: What then is the use of your work if anti-Christ is to be destroyed only when the Lord comes? let us go each one on his way and wait. Once more it seems to me the answer is close at hand. We are to bear witness for Jesus and against all that opposes him. He is our dearly beloved one, our Brother, Companion, Friend. All about us are those who would love him did they know him, but they are caught in the man traps of Satan. They are blinded, deceived, and in their darkness and pain they cry out for some one who can quiet the feverish blood and give relief to the aching heart. It is ours to bring them the blessed Gospel that Jesus Christ came into this world to suffer and die for poor sinful men, and that now the gates of mercy are open while messengers go up and down the earth, crying: "Come, for all things are now ready." This is our holy mission. God give us more tender, loving hearts, more watchful eyes that our mission be not a failure.

Dr. Delamatyr says that once he had occasion to walk with his son, seven years of age, at night, between a dark forest on the one side and a black flowing river on the other, in the State of Florida. The boy was timid and nervous when alone, but this time he walked on happily until his father said: "Are you not afraid, my boy?" "Oh, no, papa." But there are panthers and bears in the wood and alligators in the river." "Yes, I know, but (grasping the father's hand more tightly) you are with me and have your gun." Happy child who can thus trust an earthly parent. Happy man who walks on the narrow path of duty through this world, between the wood and the river, but who can reach up through the mists and darkness to lay an unfaltering palm in the great hand of him who has taught us when we pray, to say, "Our Father who art in heaven."

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—And they immediately left the ship.

MY BRETHREN:—The Masonic lodge is slyly reversing the order of things established by the Saviour. It claims to be the most moral institution that ever existed, and hence, doubtless, feels itself obliged to undo what the Saviour has done. We know that when the Saviour began his mission, he commanded men to leave their material interests, their nets, their ships, their worldly callings and family obligations and to follow him. But the lodge virtually tells our young Americans—Follow us and we will improve your material interests, your nets, your ships, your means of getting wealth, your worldly callings and your family relations. We will give you exclusive privileges over the masses, and will make you successful fishers for office and wire-pullers for the control of men, and when you die we will take you straight up to the great lodge above. You may go to church if you please, for appearance sake, for decent conformity with the ways of the world, and for improving your material interests with church-goers; but this idea of the cross and crown is played out; it is the square and crown-compasses that tell in religion as well as in trade.

My friends, I have no doubt that when the Apostle John began his career as a Christian, he thought that the synagogue was a very pious and holy institution. And it was, indeed, a great deal better than the Masonic lodge. The laws of Moses were preserved in it, not as a piece of furniture or a mere show, but every man was allowed to enter and expound and comment on these laws and on the prophets. It seemed very fair to honest, unsuspecting men; but there was a ring of Pharisees in it, just as there is now a ring of Masons in the Christian church, perverting even the laws and the prophets to low, base, material ends, and always looking after the ships and the nets, and the interests of cousins and uncles and aunts, striving for chief seats, office, pensions, etc., at all hazards, laws or no laws.

But, my friends, the Apostle John, before he came to die, learned more of the true inwardness of the synagogue, and he called it "the synagogue of Satan." Is it at all likely, therefore, that he ever joined the Masonic lodge, which is altogether conceived in iniquity, and which is ten-fold more a child of the devil than the synagogue ever was?

My friends, if the great Masonic High Priest in Kentucky should keep a register of every lodge and of every lodge-member in the country, and, like the "Old man of the Mountain," could make himself felt in fear or favor everywhere; slipping a sly, corrupt advantage in trade into a young man's hands here; surprising him with sudden unexpected gain there; helping him to extend "his patent" or to rob a neighbor of his in another quarter, giving aid in repairing nets, overhauling ships, etc., etc., and occasionally helping to suppress or remove a rival—if, I say, the Masonic High Priest should do this, and make his dupes believe that corrupt favor in politics and trade is the very best of all possible religions, what is to become of our church, of our republic, and of the dignity of human nature? Wherein shall we differ from a synagogue of Jews who bought the Lord of Life for thirty pieces of silver? Wherein should we differ from a set of Mormons?

My friends, let us continue by our tracts and our sermons in the work of initiating every knave of the country into the mysteries of Freemasonry. Let us by our writings hold up to all our young men, good or bad, the moral deformities of the worshipers of the lodge, as wax-work is made to exhibit in the most revolting way to the worshipers of Venus the horrid, yet truthful consequences of their uncleanness.

If in our village we find two young watch-makers, one of whom not only cleans watches but is betraying the Lord to the lodge for less even than thirty pieces of silver, looking to get custom thereby, and the other is relying simply on his own personal and workmanlike merits, which of these two shall we employ? If two men solicit our votes for the Presidency, one of whom has sold himself to the lodge for gold and silver, and the other has not, for which should we vote?

My brethren, when a man is called to serve the Republic, and he turns to looking after his nets and sticks to his ship, steering for back-pay grabs, credit Mobilier speculations, Indian wars, false coinage, Star-route bonanzas, railroad grants, fraudulent pensions, etc., etc., or remains silent on these works of the synagogue of Satan, never vote for him. Amen and Amen. SO MOTE IT BE!

CONTROVERSY.

I've struck the milk-white quartz with gentle blow,
And split with hammer fragment from the rock,
When lo! unquarried by the shivering shock,
The precious emerald's crystal beauties glow!
Thus from the mine of thought, obscure and low,
Does force of argument the gem unlock
Whose charms the beams of star-born diamond mock!
That gem is Truth—the truth which angels know!
Delve patient; make the stubborn barriers fly;
Though long the toil, let hope assuage thy care;
Each blow the glad and glistening beams may wake.
With zeal contend; the inquisition ply;
Yet in debate this needful caution bear—
Be gentle, or the crystal thou mayst break!

THE HANDS OF BOTH ALIKE.

When Macbeth was horrified at his own blood-stained hands, his wife tried to comfort him with the assurance that her hands were of the same color as his. So Mr. William Walter Phelps finds comfort for Mr. Blaine in that Mr. Edmunds' hands are of the same color as his. The inference is that as one of these Presidental candidates is no better than the other, neither is to be held to any account for alleged fraud.

But the real question before the country is not whether one politician is as rapacious and self-seeking as another, but whether the country is to have a reform or not. The crying need of the hour is reform. The Republican party is stained, spotted and defaced with fraud and corruption. It is worse even than its own silver dollars which, under a pious motto, are designedly fraudulent and deceptive. The moral infection which they convey is worse than the idea of small-pox in the folds of dirty shin-plasters.

We all know how very pious the pretensions of Freemasonry are, and how exceedingly fraudulent and deceptive Freemasonry is; and we know too, that Freemasonry is the main-spring of political action with both parties and especially with the Republican party; and we also know that neither Mr. Blaine nor Mr. Edmunds has ever identified himself with reform in any way, being satisfied to receive honors and support from a corrupt party. Nay, not only from a corrupt party, but from a party with Freemasonry in it. To look to such men for reform would be like looking to King Herod for a system of moral science, or to the late slave-power for republican liberty, or to the Jesuits of France for republican government.

The real question now is,—and a very vital question too—is a Presidential candidate a Freemason, or a tool of Freemasons? If he is either, he cannot possibly represent the interests of reform. It is reform, not parties, that the country needs. Any one who has received office by, through, or from the Masonic lodge has been bribed, feed, and muffled, and is morally paralyzed and incapable of acting in the interest of reform. He may serve a corrupt party, and serve it well; but he can never serve the cause of reform.

To have two ruling sources of political power in the country is a constant menace to the government. We have recently gone through some of the disastrous results of such an anomalous state of things. Not many years ago there were two sources of political power in action; one lay in the slave-power, and the other lay in the people. But the latter source, in the effort to gain the ascendency, occasioned a bloody war. A similar state of things exists now, one source of political power lies in the Masonic lodge, and the other lies in the people; and the longer this state of things is allowed to exist, the greater will be the danger of war. It is the people that must rule here, or the government must change its form.

Under no circumstances ought one to vote for a Freemason, any more than he would for a return of the slave-power. A FORMER REPUBLICAN.

THE POPE AGAINST FREEMASONRY.

THE ENCYCLICAL LETTER OF APRIL 20TH, 1884, AS TRANSLATED FOR THE NEW YORK SUN.

Leo, Pope, XIII., to all venerable Patriarchs, Primates, Archbishops, and Bishops in the Catholic world who have grace and communion with the Apostolic See.

VENERABLE BROTHERS: HEALTH AND THE APOSTOLIC BENEDICTION! The human race. After, by the malice of the devil, it had departed from God, the Creator and Giver of heavenly gifts, divided itself into two different and opposing parties, one of which assiduously combats for truth and virtue, the other for those things which are opposed to virtue and to truth. The one is the kingdom of God on earth—that is, the church of Jesus Christ, those who desire to adhere to which from their soul and conducively to salvation must serve God and his only begotten Son with their whole mind and their whole will. The other is the kingdom of Satan, in whose dominion and power are all who have followed his sad example and that of our first parents. They refuse to obey divine and eternal law, and strive for many things to the neglect of God and for many against God. This twofold kingdom, like two States with contrary laws working in contrary directions, Augustine clearly saw and described, and comprehended the efficient course of both with subtle brevity in these words: "Two loves have made two states, the love of self to the contempt of God has made the earthly, but the love of God to the contempt of self has made the heavenly." (De Civ. Dei, lib. xiv., chap. 77.)

The one fights the other with different kinds of weapons, and battles at all times, though not always with the same ardor and fury. In our days, however, those who follow the evil one seem to conspire and strive all together under the guidance and with the help of that society of men spread all over, and solidly established, which they call Freemasons. Not dissimulating their intentions, they vie in attacking the power of God; they openly and ostensibly strive to damage the church, with the purpose to deprive thoroughly if possible Christian people of the benefits brought by the Saviour Jesus Christ.

Seeing these evils, we are compelled by charity in our soul to say often to God: "For lo! thy enemies have made noise; and they that hate thee have lifted up the head. They have taken malicious counsel against thy people, and have consulted against thy saints. They have said: Come and let us destroy them, so that they be not a nation." (Ps. 82: 2-4.)

In such an impending crisis, in such a great and obstinate warfare upon Christianity, it is our duty to point out the danger, exhibit the adversaries, resist as much as we can their schemes and tricks, lest those whose salvation is in our hands should perish eternally; and that the kingdom of Jesus Christ, which we have received in trust, not only may stay and remain intact, but may continue to increase all over the world by new additions.

The Roman Pontiffs, our predecessors, watching constantly over the safety of the Christian people, early recognized this capital enemy rushing forth out of the darkness of hidden conspiracy, and, anticipating the future in their mind, gave the alarm to princes and people, that they should not be caught by deceptions and frauds.

Clement XII. first signalized the danger in 1738, and Benedict XIV. renewed and continued his Constitution. Pius VII. followed them both; and Leo XII., by the Apostolic Constitution—quo graviora—recapitulating the acts and decrees of the above Pontiffs about the matter, validated and confirmed them forever. In the same way spoke Pius VIII., Gregory XVI., and very often Pius IX.

The purpose and aim of the Masonic sect having been discovered from plain evidence, from the cognition of causes, its laws, rites, and commentaries having come to light and been made known by the additional depositions of the associated members, this Apostolic See denounced and openly declared that the sect of Masons is established against law and honesty, and is equally a danger to Christianity as well as to society; and, threatening those heavy punishments which the church uses against the guilty ones, she forbade the society, and ordered that none should give his name to it. Therefore, the angry Masons, thinking that they would escape the sentence or partially destroy it by despising or calumniating, accused the Popes who made those decrees of not having made a right decree or of having overstepped moderation. They thus tried to evade the authority and the importance of the Apostolic Constitutions of Clement XII., Benedict XIV., Pius VII., and Pius IX. But in the same society there were some who, even against their own will, acknowledged that the Roman Pontiffs had acted wisely and lawfully, according to the Catholic discipline. In this many princes and rulers of States agreed with the Popes, and either denounced Masonry to the Apostolic See or by appropriate laws condemned it as a bad thing in Holland, Austria, Switzerland, Spain, Bavaria, Savoy, and other parts of Italy.

But the event justified the prudence of our predecessors, and this is the most important. Nay, their paternal care did not always and everywhere succeed, either because of the simulation and shrewdness of the Masons themselves, or through the inconsiderate levity of others whose duty required of them strict attention. Hence, in a century and a half the sect of Masons grew beyond expectation; and, creeping audaciously and deceitfully among the various classes of the people, it grew to be so powerful that now it seems the only dominating power in the States. From this rapid and dangerous growth have come into the church and into the State those evils which our predecessors had already foreseen. It has indeed come to this, that we have serious fear, not for the church, which has a foundation too firm for men to upset it, but for those States in which this society is so powerful—or other societies of a like kind, and which show themselves to be servants and companions of Masonry.

For these reasons, when we first succeeded to the government of the church, we saw and felt very clearly the necessity of opposing so great an evil with the full weight of our authority. On all favorable occasions we have attacked the principal doctrines in which the Masonic perversity appeared. By our encyclical letter, quod apostolici muneris, we attacked the errors of Socialists and Communists; by the letter, Arcanum, we tried to explain and defend the genuine notion of domestic society, whose source and origin is in marriage; finally, by the letter which begins Diuturnum, we proposed a form of civil power consonant with the principles of Christian wisdom, responding to the very nature and to the welfare of people and princes. Now, after the example of our predecessors, we intend to turn our attention to the Masonic society, to its whole doctrine, to its intentions, acts and feelings, in order to illustrate more and more this wicked force and stop the spread of this contagious disease.

There are several sects of men which, though different in name, customs, form and origin, are identical in aim and sentiment with Masonry. It is the universal centre from which they all spring, and to which they all return. Although in our days these seem to no longer care to hide in darkness, but hold their meetings in the full light and under the eyes of their fellow-men, and publish their journals openly, yet they deliberate and preserve the habits and customs of secret societies. Nay, there are in them many secrets which are by law carefully concealed not only from the profane, but also from many associated, viz., the last and intimate intentions, the hidden and unknown chiefs, the hidden and secret meetings, the resolutions, and the methods and means by which they will be carried into execution. Hence the difference of rights and of duties among the members; hence the distinction of orders and grades and the severe discipline by which they are ruled. The initiated must promise, nay, take an oath, that they will never, in any way or at any time, disclose their fellow members and the emblems by which they are known, or expose their doctrines. So, by false appearance, but with the same kind of simulation, the Masons chiefly strive, as once did the Manichæans, to hide and to admit no witnesses but their own. They seek skillfully hiding places, assuming the appearance of literary men or philosophers, associated for purposes of erudition; they have always ready on their tongues the speech of cultivated urbanity, and proclaim their charity toward the poor; they look for the improvement of the masses, to extend the benefits of social comfort to as many of mankind as possible. Those purposes, though they may be true, yet are not the only ones. Besides, those who are chosen to join the society must promise and swear to obey the leaders and teachers with great respect and trust; to be ready to do whatever is told them, and accept death and the most horrible punishment if they disobey. In fact, some who have betrayed the secrets or disobeyed an order are punished with death so skilfully and so audaciously that the murder escaped the investigations of the police. Therefore, reason and truth show that the society of which we speak is contrary to honesty and natural justice.

There are other and clear arguments to show that this society is not in agreement with honesty. No matter how great the skill with which men conceal, it is impossible that the cause should not appear in its effects. "A good tree can not yield bad fruits, nor a bad tree good ones." (Matt. 7: 18.) Masonry generates bad fruits mixed with great bitterness. From the evidences above mentioned we find its aim, which is the desire of overthrowing all the religious and social orders introduced by Christianity, and building a new one according to its taste, based on the foundation and laws of naturalism.

What we have said or will say must be understood of Masonry in general and of all like societies, not of the individual members of the same. In their number there may be not a few who, though they are wrong in giving their names to these societies, yet are neither guilty of their crimes nor aware of the final goal which they strive to reach. Among the associations also, perhaps, some do not approve the extreme conclusions which, as emanating from common principles, it would be necessary to embrace if their deformity and vileness would not be too repulsive. Some of them are equally forced by the places and times not to go so far as they would go or others go; and yet they are not to be considered less Masonic for that, because the Masonic alliance has to be considered not only from actions and deeds, but from general principles.

Now, it is the principle of naturalists, as the name itself indicates, that human nature and human reason in everything must be our teacher and guide. Having once settled this, they are careless of duties toward God, or they pervert them with false opinions and errors. They deny that anything has been revealed by God; they do not admit any religious dogma, any truth but what human intelligence can comprehend; they do not allow any teacher to be believed on his official authority. Now, it being the special duty of the Catholic church, and her duty only, to keep the doctrines received from God and the authority of teaching with all the heavenly means necessary to salvation, and preserve them integrally incorrupt, hence the attacks and rage of the enemies are turned against her.

Now, if one watches the proceedings of the Masons, in respect of religion especially, where they are more free to do what they like, it will appear that they carry faithfully into execution the tenets of the naturalists. They work, indeed, obstinately to the end that neither the teaching nor the authority of the church may have any influence; and therefore they preach and maintain the full separation of the church from the State. So laws and government are wrested from the wholesome and divine virtue of the Catholic church, and they want, therefore, by all means, to rule States independent of the institutions and doctrines of the church.

To drive off the church as a sure guide is not enough; they add persecutions and insults. Full license is given to attack with impunity both by words and print and teaching the very foundations of the Catholic religion; the rights of the church are violated; her divine privileges are not respected. Her action is restricted as much as possible; and that by virtue of laws apparently not too violent, but substantially made on purpose to check her freedom. Laws odiously partial against the clergy are passed so as to reduce its number and its means. The ecclesiastical revenue is in a thousand ways tied up, and religious associations abolished and dispersed.

But war rages more ardently against the Apostolic See and the Roman Pontiff. He was, under a false pretext, deprived of the temporal power, the stronghold of his rights and of his freedom; he was next reduced to an iniquitous condition, unbearable for its numberless burdens, until it has come to this, that the sectarians say openly what they had already in secret devised for a long time, viz., that the very spiritual power of the Pope ought to be taken away, and the divine institution of the Roman Pontificate ought to disappear from the world. If other arguments were needed for this, it would be sufficiently demonstrated by the testimony of many who often, in times bygone and even lately, declared it to be the real supreme aim of the Freemasons to persecute, with untamed hatred, Christianity, and that they will never rest until they see cast to the ground all religious institutions established by the Pope.

If the sect does not openly require its members to throw away Catholic faith, this tolerance, far from injuring the Masonic schemes, is useful to them. Because this is, first, an easy way to deceive the simple and unwise ones, and it is contributing to proselytize. By opening their gates to persons of every creed they promote, in fact, the great modern error of religious indifference and of the parity of all worships, the best way to annihilate every religion, especially the Catholic, which, being the only true one, cannot be joined with the others without enormous injustice.

But naturalists go further. Having entered, in things of greatest importance, on a way thoroughly false, through the weakness of human nature or by the judgment of God, who punishes pride, they run to extreme errors. Thus the very truths which are known by the natural light of reason, as the existence of God, spirituality and immortality of soul, have no more consistence and certitude for them.

Masonry breaks on the same rocks by no different way. It is true, Freemasons generally admit the existence of God; but they admit themselves that this persuasion for them is not firm, sure. They do not dissimulate that in the Masonic family the question of God is a principle of great discord; it is even known how lately they had on this point serious disputes. It is a fact that the sect leaves to the members full liberty of thinking about God whatever they like, affirming or denying his existence. Those who boldly deny his existence are admitted as well as those who, like the Pantheists, admit God but ruin the idea of him, retaining an absurd caricature of the divine nature, destroying its reality. Now, as soon as this supreme foundation is pulled down and upset, many natural truths must needs go down, too, as the free creation of this world, the universal government of providence, immortality of soul, fixture, and eternal life.

Once having dissipated these natural principles, important practically and theoretically, it is easy to see what will become of public and private morality. We will not speak of supernatural virtues, which, without a special favor and gift of God, no one can practice nor obtain, and of which it is impossible to find a vestige in those who proudly ignore the redemption of mankind, heavenly grace, the sacraments, and eternal happiness. We speak of duties which proceed from natural honesty. Because the principles and sources of justice and morality are these, a God, creator and provident ruler of the world, the eternal law which commands respect and forbids the violation of natural order; the supreme end of man settled a great deal above created things outside of this world. These principles once taken away by the Freemasons, as by the naturalists, immediately natural ethics has no more where to build or to rest. The only morality which Freemasons admit, and by which they would like to bring up youth, is that which they call civil and independent, or the one which ignores every religious idea. But how poor, uncertain, and variable at every breath of passion is this morality is demonstrated by the sorrowful fruits which partially already appear. Nay, where it has been freely dominating, having banished Christian education, probity and integrity of manner go down, horrible and monstrous opinions raise their head, and crimes grow with fearful audacity. This is deplored by everybody, and by those who are compelled by evidence and yet would not like to speak so.

Besides, as human nature is infected by original sin and more inclined to vice than to virtue, it is not possible to lead an honest life without mortifying the passions and submitting the appetites to reason. In this fight it is often necessary to despise created good, and undergo the greatest pains and sacrifices in order to preserve to conquering reason its own empire. But naturalists and Masons, rejecting divine revelation, deny original sin, and do not acknowledge that our free will is weakened and bent to evil. To the contrary, exaggerating the strength and excellency of nature, and settling in her the principles and unique rule of justice, they cannot even imagine how, in order to counteract its motions and moderate its appetites, continuous efforts are needed and the greatest constancy. This is the reason why we see so many enticements offered to the passions, journals and reviews without any shame, theatrical plays thoroughly dishonest; the liberal arts cultivated according to the principles of an impudent realism, effeminate and delicate living promoted by the most refined inventions; in a word, all the enticements apt to seduce or weaken virtue carefully practiced—things highly to blame, yet becoming the theories of those who take away from man heavenly goods, and put all happiness in transitory things and bind it to earth.

What we have said may be confirmed by things which it is not easy to think or to speak. As these shrewd and malicious men do not find more servility and docility than in souls already broken and subdued by the tyranny of the passions, there have been in the Masonic sect some who openly said and proposed that the multitudes should be urged by all means and artifice into license, so that they should afterward become an easy instrument for the most daring enterprise.

For domestic society almost all the doctrine of naturalists is that marriage is only a civil contract, and may be lawfully broken by the will of the contracting parties; the State has power over the matrimonial bond. In the education of the children no religion must be applied, and when grown up every one will select that which he likes.

Now, Freemasons accept these principles without any restriction; and not only do they accept them, but they endeavor to act so as to bring them into moral and practical life. In many countries which are professedly Catholic, marriages not celebrated in the civil form are considered null; elsewhere laws allow divorce. In other places everything is done in order to have it permitted. So the nature of marriage will be soon changed and reduced to a temporary union, which can be done and undone at pleasure.

The sect of Masons aims unanimously and steadily also at the possession of the education of children. They understand that a tender age is easily bent, and that there is no more useful way of preparing for the State such citizens as they wish. Hence, in the instruction and education of children, they do not leave to the ministers of the church any part, either in directing or watching them. In many places they have gone so far that children's education is all in the hands of laymen; and from moral teaching every idea is banished of those holy and great duties which bind together man and God.

The principles of social science follow. Here naturalists teach that men have all the same rights, and are perfectly equal in condition; that every man is naturally independent; that no one has a right to command others; that it is tyranny to keep men subject to any other authority than that which emanates from themselves. Hence the people are sovereign; those who rule have no authority but by the commission and concession of the people, so that they can be deposed, willing or unwilling, according to the wishes of the people. The origin of all rights and civil duties is in the people or in the State, which is ruled according to the new principles of liberty. The State must be godless; no reason why one religion ought to be preferred to another; all to be held in the same esteem.

Now, it is well known that Freemasons approve these maxims, and that they wish to see Governments shaped on this pattern and model needs no demonstration. It is a long time, indeed, that they have worked with all their strength and power openly for this, making thus an easy way for those, not a few, more audacious and bold in evil, who meditate the communion and equality of all goods after having swept away from the world every distinction of social goods and conditions.

From these few hints it is easy to understand what is the Masonic sect and what it wants. Its tenets contradict so evidently human reason that nothing can be more perverted. The desire of destroying religion and church established by God, with the promise of immortal life, to try to revive, after eighteen centuries, the manners and institutions of paganism, is great foolishness and bold impiety. Not less horrible or unbearable is it to repudiate the gifts granted through his goodness by Jesus Christ to individuals, to families, and to States; benefits very important even according to the opinion of his adversaries. In this foolish and ferocious attempt, one recognizes that untamed hatred and rage of revenge kindled against Jesus Christ in the heart of Satan.

The other attempt in which the Masons work so much, viz., to pull down the foundations of morality, and become co-operators of those who, like brutes, would see that become lawful which they like, is nothing but to urge mankind into the most abject and ignominious degradation.

This evil is aggravated by the dangers which threaten domestic and civil society. As we have at other times explained, there is in marriage, through the unanimous consent of nations and of ages, a sacred and religious character; and by divine law the conjugal union is indissoluble. Now, if this union is dissolved, if divorce is juridically permitted, confusion and discord must inevitably enter the domestic sanctuary, and woman will lose her dignity and children every security of their own welfare.

That the State ought to profess religious indifference, and neglect God in ruling society as if God did not exist, is a foolishness unknown to the very heathen, who had so deeply rooted in their mind and in their heart not only the idea of God, but the necessity also of public worship, that they supposed it to be easier to find a city without any foundation than without any God. And really human society, for which nature has made us, was instituted by God, the author of the same nature, and from him emanates, as from its source and principle, all this everlasting abundance of numberless goods. As, then, the voice of nature tells us to worship God with religious piety, because we have received from him life and the goods which accompany life, so, for the same reasons, people and States must do the same. Therefore, those who want to free society from any religious duty are not only unjust, but unwise and absurd.

Once grant that men through God's will are born for civil society, and that sovereign power is so strictly necessary to society that when this fails society necessarily collapses, it follows that the right of command emanates from the same principle from which society itself emanates; hence the reason why the minister of God is invested with such authority. Therefore, so far as it is required from the end and nature of human society, one must obey lawful authority as we would obey the authority of God, supreme ruler of the universe; and it is a capital error to grant to the people full power of shaking off at their own will the yoke of obedience.

Considering their common origin and nature, the supreme end proposed to every one, and the right and duties emanating from it, men no doubt are all equal. But as it is impossible to find in them equal capacity, and as through bodily or intellectual strength one differs from others, and the variety of customs, inclinations, and persoual qualities is so great, it is absurd to pretend to mix and unify all this and bring in the order of civil life a rigorous aud absolute equality. As the perfect constitution of the human body results from the union and harmony of different parts, which differ in form and uses, but united and each in his own place form an organism beautiful, strong, useful, and necessary to life, so in the State there is an infinite variety of individuals who compose it. If these all equalized were to live each according to his own whim, it would result in a city monstrous and ugly; whereas if distinct in harmony, in degrees of offices, of inclinations, of arts, they co-operate together to the common good, they will offer the image of a city well harmonized and conformed to nature.

The turbulent errors which we have mentioned must inspire Governments with fear; in fact, suppose the fear of God in life and respect for divine laws to be despised, the authority of the rulers allowed and authorized would be destroyed, rebellion would be left free to popular passions, and universal revolution and subversion must necessarily come. This subversive revolution is the deliberate aim and open purpose of the numerous communistic and socialistic associations. The Masonic sect has no reason to call itself foreign to their purposes, because Masons promote their designs and have with them common capital principles. If the extreme consequences are not everywhere reached in fact, it is not the merit of the sect nor owing to the will of the members, but of that divine religion which cannot be extinguished, and of the most select part of society, which, refusing to obey secret societies, resists strenuously their immoderate efforts.

May heaven grant that universally from the fruits we may judge the root, and from impending evil and threatening dangers we may know the bad seed! We have to fight a shrewd enemy, who, cajoling peoples and kings, deceives them all with false promises and fiue flattery.

Freemasons, insinuating themselves under pretence of friendship into the hearts of princes, aim to have in them powerful aids and accomplices to overcome Christianity, and in order to excite them more actively they calumniate the church as the enemy of royal privileges and power. Having thus become confident and sure, they get great influence in the government of States, resolve yet to shake the foundations of the thrones, and persecute, calumniate, or banish those sovereigns who refuse to rule as they desire.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

KIRKWOOD, May 10, 1884.

I remember Galesburg as it was when I first visited that then justly famed center of abolition, education and reform. Not a grog-shop disgraced its public or private walks, and no drunkards were seen reeling or heard blaspheming on its streets. Quiet reigned on the Sabbath, and honest industry was not taxed to support crime, or honorable business "badgered and boycotted" by base and vicious slaves to drink. No lodge met in secret to plot and plan for the protection and gratification of the "initiated," at the expense of justice and the common, civil, commercial and social rights of its citizens. "One Master" and "all brethren" together, was the prevailing sentiment when, as a student, I entered Knox College, became a citizen of the town and subsequently a member of the old First Church, under the pastorate of Dr. Bascom.

Coming from a farm in the country where I had very indifferently improved the limited advantages within my reach, and without experience in temperance, culture or Christian society, the change was like to entering a new world filled with the unknown. Familiar with social ways of frontier life, at which the "jug" was deemed indispensable to the highest attainments of conviviality, ambition for intellectual culture or serious aspirations to the attainment of a "new heart wherein dwelleth righteousness," seldom if ever disturbed my thoughts, or invaded the sanctuary of my hidden life. The elements into which I had entered were not only new to me, but highly conducive to a radical change in my entire future. I became first an observer, then a learner and afterwards a student. From noting men and movements I passed to effects and their producing causes, and then to books and systematic study. Temptations to dissipation were few, while the inexperienced were hedged about with salutary influences, brought into constant contact with Christian examples and incited to action by faithful instructions.

Doubtless many of those influences favoring a high state of intellectual and religious culture are still alive in the College and churches of Galesburg, but the outside appearance is most wonderfully changed. Saloons abound on all the principal thoroughfares, and judging from the number of men I saw staggering and heard swearing on the streets with apparent impunity, I infer a very lax state of morals in the community, unlike to that of twenty-five years ago. High license does not seem to have diminished the evils of drunkenness in Galesburg, or surrounded its institutions of learning and churches with a moral atmosphere conducive to either intellectual or spiritual development. Had I found such an atmosphere and been exposed to such allurements when I entered Knox College and came under the social and moral influences surrounding it, I have every reason to believe that my life would have been far more imperfect and less creditable than it has been. If Galesburg has not fallen into the power of its worst inhabitants, beyond the hope of recovery, the better class ought to rally their forces and rescue their city from the power that dominates and licenses the pestilence of rum, that now pervades the atmosphere of every business street. They owe it to themselves and to their children; they owe it to the young men and women who come from their homes to "drink at the fountain of knowledge," and to their confiding parents who commit to their care for a time those who are dearer to them than their own lives; they owe it to the sacred memory of the godly founders of the town and College, and God will hold them responsible in the final account, if they do not "put away the accursed things from among them."

AMERICAN POLITICS.

CALL FOR NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The National Convention of the American Party will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20, 1884, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, to revise the platform of the party, and transact such other business as may be brought forward.

Each State will be entitled to as many delegates as there are Congressional Districts in the State, and two delegates at large. These delegates may be chosen in such manner as each State shall determine, and they shall be furnished with credentials signed by the chairman of the State Committee, or by the member of the National Committee for that State.

Persons friendly to the cause, who are not delegates, or who are elected to represent organizations friendly to the party, will be admitted to all the privileges of the Convention except that of voting, and this privilege may be extended to them by the Convention provided the delegation of the State from which they come is not otherwise full. Signed— F. W. CAPWELL,

President.

E. D. BAILEY, Eastern Secretary.
J. P. STODDARD, Western Secretary.

AMERICAN PROHIBITION CLUB

Organized May 10th, 1884, at Canandaigua, Ontario Co., N. Y. J. Haire, president; John Carrington, vice-president; Frank W. Perry, secretary; H. Tiffany, treasurer. Delegates to Chicago, June 20th: C. D. Brooks, Wm. Wright, D. Booth, J. Haire, H. Tiffany, John Carrington, John Warfield, Ezra Pierce, Daniel Arnold, John Depew, James Chase, and Howard Dewey. Officers empowered to fill vacancies and appoint other delegates.

W. B. STODDARD, Secretary.

THE WARSAW MEETING.

The American convention for Wyoming county, New York, was held in the court house at Warsaw, May 16th.

The meeting was called to order by State president F. W. Capwell, and F. W. Capwell was elected chairman and W. B. Stoddard, secretary. Prayer was offered by Rev. I. C. White. Explanatory remarks were made by F. W. Capwell of the object of the meeting, etc.

Voted that the chair appoint a committee to present names to the county convention for central committee and also for delegates to the National convention.

Chair appointed R. W. Lyman, Rev. I. C. White and W. B. Stoddard as said committee. Remarks on platform were made by Pres. J. Blanchard.

Committee on nominations reported for Central committee: F. W. Capwell, E. S. Mather, W. T. Warner, Rev. I. C. White, Charles Lathrop, T. B. Catton and P. P. Fullington; for delegates to National convention: F. W. Capwell, E. H. Miller, D. Barrett, E. Gay, G. Sweet, A. Sleeper, R. W. Lyman, W. B. Stoddard, Warren Smith, John Jones, S. W. Olds, W. W. Belden, Horace Howe and Luther Stevens.

Voted to accept and adopt report of committee, and that the chair be empowered to fill vacancies.

A PLEA FOR WOMAN.

BELOIT, Kansas.

Since the organization of the American party and the framing of the American platform, there has been much hopeful waiting and praying to see one more plank added to that grandest of all political platforms ever known in the United States. That plank is for the enfranchisement of woman. Favorable omens are reaching out towards the consummation of this much desired end. The late Washington convention has agitated this subject in such a forcible manner that already the tread of the "coming woman" may be heard with her deposit for the ballot box.

"Woman's Complaints," as recorded in the Cynosure of 27th March, are favorable arguments, yet in that report one very important and one of the strongest reasons why woman should have a voice in making the laws by which she is governed is left out. That point it is the purpose of this article to discuss.

Of all the privileges denied woman by the ballot the most heartrending is the right to her own offspring. Talk of the agonies of the Southern slave mother when her children have been torn from her embrace and banished from her loving care! This is too barbarous truly to be tolerated in a Christian (?) land. But it was an enemy that did it, and David said, "If it had been an enemy I could have borne it." If a sole title to the children is to be invested in any one it should be the mother; she who has borne the anguish, and whose ceaseless vigils day and night have protected, and in too many instances, wholly provided for those who have been forced upon her already overburdened hands and heart. There can no stronger earthly love exist than that of a mother for her child, and yet it is at the option of the father according to law, custom, and the Scriptural reasoning of many, whether she can have any control whatever over the child. In how many instances the children have been taken almost from the mother's breast, and put to tasks that those of more years ought not to have borne. No matter how many sleepless nights of weeping the mother may spend, how many prayers she may offer (though God never fails to do his part), or how many times her pitiful pleadings for her child may be silenced by a blow that lays her senseless at the feet of her sworn protector, he is the "head," the sole power is his, and there is no redress. The work of murder goes on, and none dare interfere, until the earthly scene closes over a premature grave where the mother's bleeding heart lies buried too, with the precious jewel God made to bless her in her old age and the world while life should last.

There are other instances all around us where this sole investment crushes the very life's blood out of woman's heart. One of personal knowledge was of a man in prime of life who was dying of consumption, and used his investment in putting his two bright little girls, with the property that had been a mutual gathering, all in his brother's hands to be controlled solely by him when the father was dead. The mother could have these children with her just as long as she abided by the commands of the brother and dealt with them just according to his dictation. What a bruised heart that woman carried through the few years she dragged out after her husband's death; and how bitter were the remembrances of that act of tyranny, the force of which began to be felt with the going out of his life. Another incident was that of a man who answered to the first call for volunteers at the time of the rebellion. He raised a company and went as captain into the first battle at Bull's Run, and was shot through the heart. Before leaving home he made use of his "investment" by putting two beautiful daughters just growing into womanhood, with all his property for their maintenance and education, into the hands of a Catholic priest. The mother was Protestant in faith, though not a Christian (the father was an infidel), she had toiled hard, early and late, and with an economy far surpassing that of her husband, had made the larger share of the property aside from her duties of motherhood. But her heart was broken, and it took only a few years for the slow torture to wear out the once vigorous life and lay another victim of "sole" proprietorship in an early grave.

One more instance and this argument will close. Now rises before us a man whose intellect was often compared with Daniel Webster's, and he was considered qualified for any office our States could give. He was of a large, wealthy and aristocratic family, the only one of whom was addicted to drink. His father set him up in the mercantile business, but rum ran away with that. Next his father gave him a wholesale boot and shoe store; from that he went to a hotel with a bar, and from that to a hovel and beggary, dragging wife and children with him. The children, when there was no other way out of starvation, used to be sent to the father's mother for the crumbs she would throw to her dogs or swine, and were told in these pitiless words, "She supposed she must give the brats something to keep them from starving to death." Thus the iniquity of the father was visited on the children. Neither was beggary the hardest thing they had to bear. Rum made a fiend of that father, and when his staggering step was at the door the children would crouch behind their mother's chair or hide beneath the bed or anywhere, to shun the brutal blows that would be dealt unsparingly on the first within reach. And when driven out of their home, as would often be the case, the mother and little ones used to resort to the "city of the dead" to weep and pray and comfort one another as best they could until the mad frenzy was over, or that "head" of the family had gone again to his cups. At length the mother, who had exhausted everything in her effort to keep soul and body of herself and children together, felt perhaps all would be better off if she should take refuge under other roofs, but she was soon made to feel the "sole" power in having her children taken from her, her only little girl being put into the hands of the aforesaid grandmother, who kept her in her chair only as necessity compelled her to leave it, and she was not allowed to speak or be spoken to. Two little boys were in another place with about the same treatment, and much care was taken to let the mother know just how her children were treated, and she said, "I will go back and die with my children," and she did, but did not have to live long.

It seems as if this ink would turn to blood if an attempt should be made to write what that woman, one of the grandest of earth, suffered at the hands of her husband. But she was "a woman and could not be a man." So, could not use the ability she had to provide for and protect herself and children, which she was fully competent to do if she had not lost her identity by becoming a married woman, consequently a mere machine to act as she was acted upon, and without any defence more than a machine in the eyes of civil law. And some would wrest even the moral law to the binding of women soul and body, to their Juggernaut of covetousness, and pervert the rendering of the Scriptures as did "Gath Rimmon." (1 Cor. 11: 3). "But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ; (mark) and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God." Now every true woman gladly and proudly acknowledges this headship in its fullest sense, and every woman that is married to a man she cannot look up to, lean upon, and acknowledge as head, is as a bird with clipped wings beating against prison bars earth has decreed can never be broken.

"The head of every man is Christ." Admitted. Now what does Christ do for man; and what does he require of man? Christ makes ample provision for man's highest good, best interest, greatest happiness; watches over him, protects him from all harm, loves him, never leaves him nor forsakes him, and "so loved him that he gave his life for him." Has, or will man do all this for woman? If so, woman will render him the homage of her whole being, and gladly acknowledge him as her "head."

"But," says one, "Christ demands obedience." True, and the church, the Lamb's wife, seeks no higher joy than to obey, for there are no demands made but there is ample provision made for their fulfillment. Christ is not a tyrant seeking only his own good and glory, neither is any true man, which in this sin-cursed age is the exception and not the rule. It is the perverting of the power, and the absorbing process which are to be remedied.

It is yet to be learned that the church loses her identity or her individual responsibility in Christ. In short she is an individual representative body, and woman is to man what the church is to Christ—an identity, independent of man to a certain extent, and has the God-given right to use her free moral agency independent of man, as the church has of Christ. It is argued a family with two heads is a monster. What is to be done with a triune Head? Cannot the two heads be as sweetly and harmoniously blended as the three? Yea verily, when pervaded with the same spirit, and when this is the case we will hear no growls from the would-be lions nor no appeals from woman for redress from unendurable outrages. That a woman is a being with a soul and body subject to law does not argue that she shall do any immodest or unlawful act (according to the moral law), if she bear a part in making the laws by which she and her children are governed.

It is all bosh to argue that "the wife of the Mason and rumseller would vote with their husbands." What! rivet chains on themselves that would wear quite through their hearts? Nay, verily, except the power of the "head" be so ponderous that they know their own will be broken if they don't, and many women would rather have their heads broken than to vote such chains.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ADVENTURE WITH A PIRATE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While at Maple River, Michigan, a lady with whom I met related to me a most thrilling narrative which she received many years ago from the lips of the unfortunate sea captain himself. She was personally acquainted with him and knew the story to be true. It occurred many years ago.

This sea captain during one of his voyages was pursued and overtaken by a pirate ship. The pirate captain was sailing under false colors to prevent suspicion. When he got near enough to secure his prey he displayed his true colors, but it was too late for the unfortunate vessel to escape. The fiendish crew directly boarded her and commenced an indiscriminate massacre of all on board. The mate, however, took advantage of the confusion and excitement, hastily lowered a boat and made good his escape unobserved. He succeeded in reaching a small island. He put up a signal of some kind, was discovered by a passing vessel and rescued, and finally reached his home.

When all the crew were massacred, some by cutting their throats and then throwing them over the bulwarks of the vessel, others by being strung up to the rigging, they came at last to the captain. Already a rope had been thrown over the yard-arm ready to be drawn around his neck when all at once he bethought himself of his Masonry and gave the sign of distress. Immediately the pirate captain halted and cried out to his men to take down the rope. The eager, furious crew at first refused to obey. Finally, summoning all the strength and resolution he could command, he with a furious stamp of the foot cried out in thunder tones: "Take that rope down!" They at length reluctantly obeyed. They now stripped him of all his valuables, his watch and every cent of money, leaving him nothing but the clothes on his back. They placed him in confinement, telling him that if he dared to utter a word or a groan it was at the peril of his life.

The terrified and suffering man, by a tremendous effort, maintained perfect silence till they came to a small island on their way, when he was taken from the ship and set ashore on the desolate island to live or die as best he might; but his hair, which, to use the language of our informant, "was raven black" when he was placed in confinement, was now as white as wool. He too, like the mate, displayed a signal and was rescued by a passing vessel, and finally reached his home again. He found the mate had arrived before him and had spread the news of his supposed fate. His friends had mourned him as dead and had had his funeral sermon preached and had put on mourning for him. He never went near the lodge again.

VERY BROAD RELIGION.

"They wanted a church to exclude Strauss with worship of the universe, and to include such as believed in a living will at the heart of the universe, who made all and directs all to a glorious consummation. Let it be broad enough to include all who hold this faith, under whatever variety of form they clothe their belief." "Christianity is eternal on the principle of the survival of the fittest. But might not the church have to pass away, so that Christianity might remain?"

The above is quoted from a report of a religious meeting in England to show how the principles of the religion of Freemasonry crop out into public notice, and how the skeptical spirit hypocritically assumes the garment of professed faith in Christ, while subverting the Scriptures and the authority of the only name given under heaven whereby men must be saved. Much may be very pretty as sentimentalism or poetry, but how void of the grand truth of Jesus as the Saviour of men churches would be which would welcome to their liberal fold all such as believed only in a Creator! Heathendom itself might then be within the church! But the church of Christ would be dead, and the doctrines of the lodge itself might rule when such a faith is all that shall be required of "church" members! Perhaps Masonic rites would not then need to be kept secret.

PITH AND POINT.

ALLIANCE FOR PRAYER.

I send for insertion in your paper an article from Words of Life, which I hope may be an encouragement to some who are engaged in the anti-lodgery and temperance reform, who have great trials and whose prayers seem to remain unanswered. Christian friends, let us cling to the promises in the Word "which are yea and amen in him unto the glory of God." We have this injunction and promise from our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; "When thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." The work is of vast importance. The cause and the workers need great help from the Almighty Jehovah, to whom belong "power and riches and wisdom and strength." Let us have an alliance for prayer for this work, which shall meet morning and evening at a throne of grace. This will be a great strengthening of the hands in God.—M. A. Tapley, Columbus, Miss.

A NEW ORDER OF BISONS.

Canada lodgeries seem to flourish about Toronto, the capital of Ontario. It used to be imagined that Lower Canada, now the province of Quebec, was the most benighted part of the Dominion on account of the dominancy of French Romanism. It was said to be priest-ridden. Could this have been the cause of envy on the part of the people of Ontario? Could this have prompted them to excel their Eastern fellow-subjects by seeking and submitting to the conscience-binding priestisms of secret societies?

The Toronto Mail has about four columns filled with notices of the different lodgeries, all the way from Ancient Freemasonry to the "Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes!" That sublime order was to meet at the "Genuine," and send Bro. Bland as a delegate to the Grand Lodge in England. How happily do these names apply! Verily it should need a very bland delegate to persuade any one among a civilized people that there can be even in be-knighted Canada, a "genuine" meeting of "Royal Antediluvian Buffaloes!" In what dark diggings were their bones discovered? By what magical arts have they been made to rattle and to make any of our credulous neighbors believe that such deformed monstrosities are alive and kicking in our day and generation?

But after all, Americans are ahead—always a little smarter than the Kanucks. Let them go on and they may prove bye and bye worthy of welcome among the slavish, darkening fraternities of these free and enlightened United States. This is the notice: "R. A. O. B.—The Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, of this city, will meet at the 'Genuine' on Thursday evening next, for the election of officers. All members are expected to be present to meet Bro. Bland previous to his departure for England as a delegate to the Grand Lodge." T. H.

FOR ILLINOIS AND IOWA CONGREGATIONALISTS.

In looking over your list of Anti-masonic churches, I see that the States of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge. But they will not let it be discussed in any of their associations, either district or State. Now it looks something like this to me: as if I should pass a resolution condemning the use of intoxicating liquors, and then freely use them and let all my family use them, and then not let any one say anything against their use in my house or before my family. As Freemasons are admitted into almost every Congregational church, and they will not let it be discussed in any of their meetings.—ISAAC TOWNSHEND, Tabor, Iowa.

The brother's objection is well taken. It is true these associations have voted against Masonry, but in works they deny the truth to which they have confessed. We print simply the fact of their having voted a testimony, while the world sees how lightly they value such a solemn statement of their convictions when the cross of unpopularity must be taken up. May God give repentance for this evil.

BLESSINGS IN DISGUISE.

Bro. Young, who some time ago was discharged from the Milwaukee Sentinel office, for refusing to join the printers' secret union, found employment in the Republican office, and is now employed on the Republican Sentinel, in the same room he worked before his discharge. He is receiving better wages, and has more agreeable companions; while those who derided him and called him an "anti-secret rat" are out of employment, some of whom now congratulate him on his course. Who knows but what his standing up firm for truth's sake may yet be a means to deliver some of his enemies from the coils of the serpent? Surely all things work together for good to them that stand firm for the right, putting their trust in the Lord.—S. H. PIERCE, National Home, Wis.

AN ITEM OF MASONIC HISTORY.

I read in the Utica Observer a notice of the death of Dr. Bristol, as one of the oldest Masons in the State, and that he organized the Good Templar lodge. I take it they mean he was the originator. Now please, if you can, let us know if it be the fact. He was an M. E. presiding elder some twenty years ago and preached at our schoolhouse. A neighbor informed me he was a great Mason. I am unable to go out, and can do but little; but I am in full sympathy with you in Chicago and Washington." Am glad to have one to associate with in my labors—E. J. Clemens. When I began to get acquainted, and let him have papers, tracts and hooks he was cautious at first, but soon when I was talking with his neighbor upon the subject he came up and testified, "That's so; for I have been there." I am in hopes yet that we shall be able to have some lectures here. There are many who want to see your lecturer. One, a seceding Odd-fellow, has read the expose, says it is correct, is opposed to secret societies, and I think will not vote for one.—N. GREEN, Clayville, N. Y.

A PETITION.

WHEREAS, Every combination of persons for the purpose of robbery, stealing or other crime, is a secret society and bind their members under oaths whose penalties are death of the body to keep their acts secret; and

WHEREAS, All of the secret societies in these United States of America bind their members under oaths or obligations to keep their secrets under penalties of death of the body or loss of character; and

WHEREAS, Robberies and crimes are so frequent; therefore

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, do hereby petition and pray that your honorable body, the Congress of the United States of America, will appoint a committee whose legal duty shall be to ascertain or find out and publish to the public at large which one of the secret societies does commit either one or all of the robberies and other crimes that are committed, that the guilty secret society may be punished and broken up: and if said committee shall fail to find out which one of the secret societies has done the crime or crimes, then we request that your honorable body will make it the legal duty of said committee to put all of the secret societies under censure and compel each one to prove itself clear, or be held guilty.—H. L. WOODARD, Monroe Center, Michigan.

A WELCOME FUNERAL.

A man had been converted to God. He had been dissipated and had contracted various evil habits, but the Lord had graciously saved him from them.

One evening he went into the prayer-meeting, and heard a man tell how the Lord showed him the evil of using tobacco, and led him to abandon this habit. Our friend listened to the story of his experience, and after meeting went home. He hunted around the house and found a shovel, and went and dug a hole, a grave, two feet deep. He gathered up his tobacco and its belongings,—every old pipe that he could find about the house, a ten dollar meerschaum, and all the appliances and paraphernalia pertaining to the weed, and buried the whole; and from that night abandoned the unclean habit, and has found improvement in body and soul and pocket by so doing. Would that some others might attend such funerals as chief mourners, and bid an everlasting adieu to "the dear departed."

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON IX.—June 1, 1884.—Christian Liberty.—Gal. 4: 1-16. Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.—Gal. 5: 1.

THE GALATIAN CHURCHES were founded by Paul at his first visit, when he was detained among them by sickness (Gal. 4: 13), during his Second Great Missionary Journey, about A. D. 51 (Acts 16: 6).—Alford. Again in the autumn of A. D. 54, at the beginning of his Third Missionary Journey, Paul visited them (Acts 18: 23). The church seems to have been troubled by Judaizing Christians, who insisted on the Gentiles conforming to Jewish rites and ceremonies, and becoming Jews as well as Christians, and who therefore repudiated the authority of Paul, opposed his doctrines, misled the converts as to the essentials of salvation, and divided the church. The result was that the church has scarcely appeared in history, not a single name of person or place connected with it being recorded.

THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. Reports of the above state of things were brought to Paul from time to time, between A. D. 54 and 57, till at last as he was leaving Macedonia, the news was such as determined him to write at once. The Epistle is an argument for Christian liberty. The Epistle to the Galatians has always been held in high esteem as the Gospel's banner of freedom. To it and to the kindred Epistle to the Romans we owe most directly the springing up and development of the ideas and energies of the Reformation.—Meyer.

THE BONDAGE OF THE LAW. The early training in every department of life is a bondage of law. When a child begins to read, he must read by rule, spelling his words, thinking of his pronunciation, counting his stops. It is mechanical. Every new language is acquired first by a bondage under grammars and dictionaries. The musician must strike his notes first by rule, and be in bondage under the principles of music. This bondage is necessary and universal. This principle holds equally well in relation to the childhood of the world. God trained the world into spiritual truth and life by laws and ceremonies, a bondage at first, but fitting for the glorious liberty of the sons of God. (1) The law was a rule of right doing, to be obeyed as law till it was natural to do right without thinking of the law. (2) Outward ceremonies and observances trained them in the worship of God. (3) God by his miracles and wonders taught them his power and greatness, and by his temple with its holy of holies, he taught his perfect holiness. (4) The distinction of clean and unclean, and the separation of Jews from Gentiles, taught the distinction between holy and unholy, pure and impure. (5) The evil of sin was taught by temporal rewards and punishments (6) The atonement was taught by the sacrifices. (7) Joy in God by their great festivals. (8) The spiritual kingdom of God by his kingdom among the Jews. All these things pertained to the childhood of men. By the Jews and by natural religion, all the rest of the world were likewise under a childhood training.—Peloubet.

THE FULNESS OF THE TIME. (1) As to the training of the Jews. All that laws and ceremonies could do had been done. The Jews were now able to understand spiritual things and holiness of heart as necessary to salvation. They felt the need of more than the law to do this; moreover, this was the time prepared and foretold to them by God through the prophets. (2) As to the training of the Gentiles. They had done their best—attained to the widest empire, the highest literature, the deepest philosophy, but could not save themselves or others. They were a moral and a religious failure, and were becoming conscious of it. (3) The state of the world. (a) The world was at peace; (b) the Greek language was almost universal; (c) the Romans held sway over nearly the whole known world, and prepared the way for travel and protected the missionaries; (d) idolatry was declining, and the hunger of the soul for God was felt.—Peloubet.

"Might receive the adoption of sons." That is, be received into the family of God as his sons and heirs. (1) By believing on Jesus we are born by the spirit of God, and receive his life. (2) He forgives all the past sins that separated us from himself, and welcomes us back to himself, and to his home and love as his own dear children. (3) We are children of God because we have received his holy, spiritual nature. This is called adoption because our sins had deprived us of our worship, and our right to the entrance of eternal life; we had become strangers, aliens, and enemies, and upon our return to God and reconciliation with him, our forfeited privileges were not only restored, but heightened through the paternal love of God. Adoption, then, is that act by which we who were alienated, and enemies, and disinherited, are made the sons of God, and heirs of his eternal glory. —Watson's Theol. Institutes.

"Abba, Father." Abba is the form which the Hebrew word ab (father) had taken in the Aramaic language, commonly spoken in Palestine in the time of Jesus. It was thus Jesus spoke to God when he called Him "Father" (comp. Mark 14: 36). It has been thought Paul employed the form here because he made use of it habitually in his own prayers, and that he added the Greek translation, "father," in writing to the Romans and Galatians, because the Aramaic was unintelligible to them as former Gentiles. Like the terms Amen, Hosanna, Hallelujah, this word "Abba" had no doubt passed from the liturgical language of the primitive Judeo-Christian church into general ecclesiastical language.—Godet.

"Wherefore thou art no more a (bond) servant." This liberty of the sons of God is therefore (1) freedom to do as he wishes, because he wishes to do right; (2) freedom from the fears of the penalties of the law; (3) freedom from the hindrances and restraints of sin in his nature, causing him to do what he would not; (4) mental freedom, free thought and feeling; (5) freedom from corroding cares and anxieties; (6) freedom of Christian action. All his duties, his praying, his working, his keeping the commands, are the free, glad, joyous outflow of his nature, as natural and as free as the morning song of the birds.—Peloubet.

"How turn ye again." The sense is, "If the Jews were in such a state of servitude, how much more galling and severe was that of those who had been heathens. Yet from that servitude the Gospel had delivered them, and made them freemen. How absurd now to go back to a state of vassalage, and to become servants under the oppressive rights of the Jewish law!" —Barnes.

"Ye have not injured me." This going back to the bondage of the law harms you, harms the cause of religion, but is no personal injury to me. This is an allusion to their past behavior as a reason and motive why they should now accede to the entreaty just urged: "ye did not injure me formerly, do not injure me now by refusing to act as I beseech you to act.—Ellicott.

"Through infirmity of the flesh." On account of an attack of bodily illness. There is no doubt that this is the accurate translation. It seems that on his first visit to Galatia he was hindered and detained by this cause, and this led to a full reception of the blessing of the Gospel by the Galatians. He recalls a most touching passage in his experience and theirs. Detained among them by illness, he doubtless won the more upon their affections, and they could not easily forget all the circumstances of that time.—Cook.

"Am I therefore become your enemy because I tell you the truth?" It would seem that something had happened upon St. Paul's second visit to Galatia (the visit recorded in Acts 18 : 23) which had caused a change in their feelings towards him. His plain speaking had given offence.—Sanday. Should his telling them the truth about the bondage of their present course in going back to Judaism show that he was their enemy? Nay, his telling them the truth was a proof of his friendship. How apt are we to feel that he who tells us our faults is our enemy!—Barnes. Censure hurts that most quick and delicate and constant of all feelings, self-love. And who dares to say in how many points the full, unmitigated application of truth to him would not be censure. It is a wise self-love that would draw a protective and inviolable line round everything that is ours; round all the defects and faults we may have, which are our closest and most mischievous enemies. As if a garrison should make a point of most sacredly protecting the very traitors it knows or suspects it has within, because they belong to their town! The right disposition of mind is that which desires earnestly "the truth!"—"the truth!" in whatever manner it may come to us.—John Foster.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

MASONRY A SYSTEM OF SPIRITUAL BONDAGE.

1. The folly of seeking truth by signs and symbols. Vs. 3, 9. By "elements of the world," St. Paul means the mere rudiments of religious knowledge which men had before Christ came. Though he is speaking primarily of the Jewish ceremonial law, which with its show of outward observances had taken the fancy of the Galatians, it really includes and represents every system of religious belief which is outside of the Gospel, and has therefore no soul-saving power. Even under the grosser forms of paganism there were glimmerings of religious truth. It is said by Heckethorn that the ancient mysteries date from the period when the knowledge of the true God became obscured after the patriarchal ages. The pure truth that fell from the lips of Enoch and Noah and Abraham began to be covered up by symbols, the key to which was gradually lost, even by the priests who pretended to explain them. Instead of being free to all like the air and the sunlight it was taught in the darkness and secrecy of caves to the few with money to pay for and courage to bear the ordeal of initiation. Masons tell us that many religious truths are taught in their ritual, as, for instance, the mock raising of Hiram Abiff, which symbolizes the resurrection. But these same truths were taught by almost the same symbols in the ancient mysteries, from which, as we have learned in previous lessons, Masonry owes its origin. The old ceremonial law of the Jews typified and shadowed forth Christ's atonement, but Paul calls the religious knowledge which is thus taught by signs and symbols "weak and beggarly elements." Weak because they cannot save men, and beggarly in contrast to the riches of God's free grace in the Gospel. He calls them "foolish Galatians" to want to return to the bondage of the Jewish rites after they had been made free from their Gentile superstitions. But Masons and Odd-fellows who try to learn religious truth by means of the heathen symbols and ceremonies of the lodge are quite as foolish.

2. The service of God is the only true liberty. Vs. 4–7. The drunkard in bondage to strong drink complains that prohibition infringes his personal liberty. Brewers, distillers and saloon-keepers think their rights are invaded when the liquor traffic is restricted or suppressed. But license to do harm, either to others or ourselves, is not liberty. So if "the charters of all secret lodges should be withdrawn and their oaths prohibited by law," there are many secret society men who would declaim loudly against it as despotism and tyranny, when in reality it would be freeing hundreds of thousands from a galling bondage to unknown superiors. Some persons hesitate to become Christians because they do not want to give up their liberty to do as they like—to seek honor and gain, or worldly pleasures and amusements—but in reality this so-called "liberty" is the very bondage from which God sent his Son to redeem them.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Why do we no longer need signs and symbols? 1 John 2: 8. What can make us free? John 8: 32. How did David find liberty? Ps. 119: 45.

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1884.

"WE ARE UNDER A REIGN OF TERROR," said Rev. B. T. Roberts, at Rochester. "There are thousands on thousands who say they are opposed to secret societies; and they are sincere. But only here and there one will take open ground against them. An undefined dread lest something should happen to them if they act out their convictions, let their light shine as Christ commanded, keeps them under a sinful and degrading cowardice. I say degrading, for 'the fearful' will at last stand with the 'unbelieving,' and 'the abominable,' and 'whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.' The promises of the Saviour secured the early Christians from the bites of serpents even."

BAPTIST TESTIMONY DILUTED.—The Examiner, the leading Baptist organ in the United States, gives the following answer to a query sent by one of its subscribers. Before Dr. Nathan Brown went to Japan, we saw him in New York city, whence the Examiner issues. That good man said, mournfully: "Once every Baptist church in this city excluded adhering Masons; but every one of our churches in this city has succumbed to the lodge but the one I belong to." Let us hail the timid testimony below as a token of returning life. If, as the Examiner shows, lodges are "unfruitful works of darkness," why not disfellowship them? What care they for words?

Be kind enough to state what you think of secret societies, and would you advise me to become a member of such a society when I am told that I can advance the interests of religion by so doing.
S. B. S.

We have never belonged to any such society and have no thought of so doing. If a society is in itself good, and has no other object than to do good, why should it make secrecy one of its fundamental principles, and bind its members by the most solemn vows and the severest penalties to disclose nothing that is said or done in it? We cannot conceive of any circumstances in which it would be best for a man to be a member of a secret organization having such vows or penalties. .

CHARACTERS.—We clip from a Rochester paper an extract from its sketch of the Alling firm:

Their building corners on Exchange and Wilbur streets, is of brick, five airy stories high. It has forty-four feet frontage on Exchange, and runs back along Wilbur 140 feet to Aqueduct, and is thus lighted from three streets. The main store, with its large windows, its high ceiling, its handsome iron columns, and its elegant cherry finish, is very attractive, and the office, divided from it by a heavy glass partition, has plenty of room, and is elegantly fitted up.

It is fifty-two years and more since William Alling, senior member of this old yet enterprising firm, first began business in this city. No man among us is better known of business men, or more thoroughly respected for his integrity. His partners are his son, Joseph Alling, whose younger blood bears the same traits, and David Cory, whose face always reminds us of Oliver Wendell Holmes. Such a reputation for honor and fair dealing as this house enjoys is better than gold.

Mr. Alling has been clerk of the sessions of the Central Presbyterian church through all its fortunes from a little canal Bethel, to a wealthy fashionable church, which the lodge dominates, so that it would blow the church to fragments if the swords and skulls and fuss and feathers of Knight Templary were either resisted or even questioned. Elder Alling, however, has avoided these invisible meshes of Satan; and, like ten thousands of good men in the Presbyterian church, will rejoice when these Achans of modern idolatry are cast out.

Mrs. Alling was the daughter of a now sainted mother; born where the shadows of the crests of the Green Mountains of Vermont were thrown by sunsets over her home. She was Lady Principal of Knox College, Illinois, before her marriage with Mr. Alling. Their son Joseph, with his wife, are now on the coasts of the Mediterranean, and lately explored the ruins of the Alhambra. Mrs. Alling took us to the monument of Myron Holley, and her calm, clear mind abhors the sorceries of the lodge, though she is perplexed by its power over good men.

GEN. A. W. RILEY.—We met this gentleman in Rochester for the first time, though long years since we had known him as a self-sustained lecturer on temperance in Europe and America.

He was married to his present wife when 76 years of age; and since then he has used a full million of brick in erecting tenements. He now lives in his own elegant mansion, though he has made and lost fortunes. He is now 89 years old, and walks erect and with vigor. As, doubtless, many of the adult readers of the Cynosure have seen, and nearly all have read of General Riley, we have obtained a die for an engraving of his picture which we shall soon give to our readers.

He came into our Rochester meeting, of which he acted as vice-president, and spoke with very great originality and force against the lodge. He knew and was intimate with the early Anti-masons, Gerrit Smith, Seward, Holley, and others, and knew all the conspirators who compassed Morgan's death, so far as the Marcy and Spencer trials developed them.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLIFTON SPRINGS, N. Y., May 9, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I spent last night at Seneca Falls with the Wesleyan pastor, Mr. Bedford. He has a fine church edifice and an excellent church. Several young people came forward for examination last evening and were recommended for membership in the church by an intelligent committee. They were interesting young converts, and Mr. Bedford says that his church is in a harmonious and prosperous condition. His two brothers, J. N., and O. C. Bedford, who are graduates of Wheaton College, complete their theological course in the Wesleyan Theological Seminary at Wheaton, in June, next month, under Pres. L. N. Stratton.

As this Wesleyan pastor is a successful and approved minister, his opinions represent a large part of the Wesleyan ministry. He says, "I devoutly wish there could be a recognized union of all Christians opposed to secret societies. In Pennsylvania, a Presbyterian moved into our neighborhood where there was no Presbyterian church. His pastor visited him and advised him to unite with us, and gave the following reasons for his advice. He said, in the village of Hume, Pa., the home of the late P. P. Bliss, there were three pastors of good churches, and all three well sustained. Secret lodges obtained a footing there and flourished; and now, though the population of Hume has not diminished, or the wealth of the people, there is but one pastor there; and he is poorly sustained. The secret orders are disintegrating and destroying the churches."

Rev. Mr. Bedford also says he and others wish the Free Methodists and Wesleyans would unite and become one denomination. He sees no human reason why they should not. They are one in doctrine, one in reform, and one in their general methods, which differ no more than individuals of each of those denominations differ from each other; and if brethren Roberts and Travis, Kinney, Wardner and Stratton would recommend union, he continued, "and set the example, I believe the people of both denominations would hail and welcome the union which would greatly increase our strength, and set a good example toward that union which must take place among all real Christians before Christ will come and reign."

The Cynosure warmly endorses these sentiments of this excellent brother. The beautiful printing house at Syracuse is amply sufficient for both denominations, and the local churches need very little alteration to complete such a union; and if the labor now expended on the Wesleyan and the Free Methodist were bestowed on the united paper, its force would be doubled, while its cost would be diminished and the ramparts of Satan would tremble under the strokes of the new banner of God.

"The Springs" here give tokens of activity and life. The water which pours out in abundance is not Saratoga water, but many think it benefits them. The atmosphere of the place is religious; and though there are some individual Masons here there is no Masonic or Odd-fellow lodge.

To-night we meet in council at Canandaigua, the sight of whose jail Gerrit Smith said always filled him with gloom, as the place where Morgan was incarcerated by a sham process, and whence he was violently taken to his doom.

YORK, N. Y., May 12, 1884.—I am here in a beautiful study where robins, orioles, and American canaries sing to Rev. Mr. MacDonald, pastor of the U. P. church, where I addressed a strong meeting last night against the secret lodge system. In the morning I had preached for Rev. Mr. Allen and his Covenanters; and I had half as good as a visit to Scotland with Elder McMillan (only 82 years old), and his excellent lady, who has not wholly forgotten the Gaelic tongue. She surprises me by telling me that this old native Scotch dialect is still spoken, not only by Lock Katrine and Ben Venue, but also in some neighborhoods of New York and Michigan.

There has been no Masonic or Odd-fellow lodge in this (York) village since the one they had went down under the popular Morgan cyclone. The churches have kept the lodge-pests out.

IN CANANDIAGUA.

We met in the Town House. It is a beautiful village, but full of Masons and memories. There we visited the old stone jail where Morgan was shut into a debtor's cell. The man who "went to jail" with me, last Saturday (only two days and a night ago) hauled stones six miles, with an ox team, to build that jail. He (Mr. Booth) knew all the parties here to the desperate murder which politicians prompted, Masons executed, and God has avenged. Cheesbro, Lawson, poor Bruce, etc., etc., the story of their deaths, as one after another relate them to us, would furnish a chapter of horrors. They ought to be collated and printed together. And not only the ruffians who executed, but the "High Priests" (De Witt Clinton & Co.), who put them up to it, should be hung up in this gallery; showing, each by name, the death-agonies of the lodge assassins; and in the background, the lodges which raised the money to defeat the law and furnish the criminals with food and delicacies while they lay in jail.

But, some will say, since history is full of outrages, why should this one be selected from the mass, and hung on the walls of libraries and reading rooms?

The answer is, to save American history from its assassins, who seek to banish truth from the earth, and fill the void with lying legends, until memory shall become of no use to men, because no one knows what to believe.

A Congregational minister in Illinois lately said to me, "The Masons never took off Morgan!" Dr. I. N. Tarbox of Boston said in a convention, "Intelligent, educated men, within three weeks past, have told me they did not believe there ever was such a man as Morgan; that the whole Anti-masonic farce was based on falsehood for political effect."

Thus Masonic ghouls murder men for speaking and writing truth; and then murder history by denying that their victims ever lived!

Last night good Elder McMillan told me the age and pedigree of the horses which drew Morgan from Canandaigua on toward Niagara. Mr. Bement, a respected citizen of Canandaigua, said in our meeting there: "I one time drove that same span." Mr. Booth showed where Hubbard (I think it was) drove the hack or coach up to the well in the front of the jail where it still is. The jailer, Mr. Peck, told us of the debtor's cell where Morgan was put; and we (Mr. Booth and myself) visited the aged and honored Judge Henry W. Taylor, once law student of John C. Spencer, four times elected to the legislature, long a judge on the Supreme Bench; and now living still in Canandaigua, honored by all, revered by the intelligent and loved by the good. I said, as he sat in his mansion among his books:

"Judge Taylor, were you retained in any of the Morgan trials?"

"I assisted the District Attorney in one of them."

"Have you read Thurlow Weed's late letter? and did you know Mr. Weed?"

"I knew him very well and have read his letter."

"Do you of your own knowledge, believe the contents of that letter?"

"What particular contents? The letter was a long one."

"Have you any doubt that William Morgan was taken by Masons from his young wife and children in Batavia; locked up in the jail on a sham process, in this village, yonder; and thence taken out by Masons, gagged, carried nearly a hundred miles along the Ridge Road; shut up in the fort, and drowned in the river Niagara?"

"I have not the least doubt of it in the world," said the Judge.

Now think of Congregational and Methodist ministers teaching their people, in the counties of Illinois, around Chicago, that "Masons never took off Morgan!" Denying their belief that two hundred and twenty-eight thousand votes were cast in 1832 against the Masonic lodge, ignoring the records of courts and legislatures, and striking out history by wholesale; and if such teaching in our pulpits is not "The prophetic abomination that maketh desolate, standing where it ought not," will some angel tell us what is?

We expect Mr. Capwell, president of the N. Y. State Association, here to hold meetings to-night and to-morrow, to organize a Livingston county American Prohibition club, and appoint delegates to the Chicago Convention, June 20th.

We expect letters to-night from Senator Pomeroy, Mr. Conant and others to fix the fate of the N. E. Convention; and as young Mr. Stoddard, State Agent, is to work in this region with Mr. Starry, if a gallery of gloom and history, such as suggested above is desired by the Cynosure readers, they can get up one. "Nothing hid but shall be known."

—It is announced that our good friend Henry Harrison of New York, with his family, will attend the Pan-Presbyterian council at Belfast this summer and visit Scotland, England and the Continent before their return.

—Secretary Stoddard, after filling appointments at Monmouth and Galesburg and arranging for future meetings in Kirkwood and Altona spent the Sabbath in Granville and expects to be in Chicago again during the present week.

—Friends ordering the pamphlet "Freemasonry and Free Government" are requested to mention how many they can use to advantage, as a guide to Bro. Phillips in filling the order. It is encouraging to note that the address is being rapidly circulated. The Chicago Convention should give us something new and good to take its place.

—The political conventions of this year in Chicago, and the great religious gatherings of this month and next are opportunities for reform work that the N. C. A. Board should not overlook. The nominating conventions will receive overtures in favor of prohibition, of woman suffrage, of tariff reform, land reform, etc. Why should not their attention be called, in a respectful and dignified way, backed by the influence of the greatest names in American statesmanship, to the danger impending from lodgery? At least a vigorous tract distribution should be kept up at every available opportunity.

—Shall the N. C. A. have a stand at the New Orleans World's Fair next December as was maintained in Philadelphia by Mr. Cook, then publisher of the Cynosure? The opportunities at the South call to us. Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist and Presbyterian church bodies there are condemning the lodge as they dare not at the North. Should they not have encouragement and assistance? If we can purchase a fine building in Washington and open a new publishing establishment there after eighteen months' work we should be able to support two or three good workers in the South.

—The Evangelical Trumpet (La Trompette Evangelique), the new French Protestant journal, has just made its appearance, under the management of Rev. P. A. Seguin of the French Evangelical Mission of this city, assisted by J. C. and J. Schœnberger, the brothers whose staunch adherence to principle in their business of painters has gained them a worthy esteem in this city. These brothers have used their spare time for a year or more in publishing two small papers, the Lighthouse and Christian Protestant. These they have given up so that their whole care may go to the new French paper, which will be issued twice a month in the French language, with a column in English which will be a summary of the rest. This little paper will form a strong auxiliary to the work of French evangelization in Chicago. The Schœnberger brothers print the paper gratuitously so that the subcriptions go almost entirely to support the mission. The price is but $1.00 per year outside the city. Subscriptions, etc., may be addressed to Rev. P. A. Seguin at No. 130 West Twelfth St., Chicago.

—We have been asked to print the encyclical letter of the pope in full. Our readers have a little over two-thirds of it; and although long it will repay a reading, always remembering that the letter uses the term church as applying only to Romanism. This, however, does not vitiate the argument which is on the whole a strong and just condemnation of the lodge. This document will have a wider circulation than any other Anti-masonic argument of late years, both in Protestant and Catholic countries. Since its translation in the New York Sun of May 6th it has appeared entire or in part in a number of journals, East and West, and few of prominence fail to give it editorial reviewing. Some, like the Baptist Weekly of New York, aver that the pope's opposition gives honor to the lodge. As if it were as impossible for the pope to speak in just condemnation of the lodge as for a Freemason to speak justly of the vices of Romanism. Puck puts to shame such hypocrisy in its striking cartoon "Two of a Kind." We shall print next week from the Pall Mall Gazette, London, an able article which shows Puck to be a philosopher.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has issued the following call to all who believe in Jesus Christ and pray in his name. We can earnestly second this request. In the politics of this nation God has been too persistently set aside, as if he had no part in the matter. He rules as truly in the affairs of men as ever, and without him we as Christians can do nothing.

TO ALL CHRISTIAN PEOPLE:—"Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Our nation is to-day a legal partner in the business of selling intoxicating liquors as a drink. This fact defines the greatest, most immediate, most vital issue in national politics. Government of the people cannot successfully coexist side by side with a traffic protected by law, whose result is to render the individual incapable of self-government. The homes of America are imperilled by the saloons whose patronage is constantly recruited from the fireside and the cradle. We therefore, mothers and sisters, wives and daughters, beseech all who believe in God to join with us in solemn, earnest and importunate prayer, that the hearts of the people may be so turned unto him upon whose shoulder the government shall be, that by some party such principles may be declared, and such candidates chosen, that Christian men can conscientiously cast their ballots for the same, being assured that they have thus struck a blow for the national prohibition of the traffic in strong drink.

We name Wednesday, May 28th, as this Day of Prayer, and urge all our local Unions to observe this day, enlisting all pastors and churches to co-operate so far as possible with us, and respectfully requesting pastors to preach on the subject of God in Government, on the Sunday preceding or following this day of prayer.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL.

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Last Saturday I witnessed the unveiling of the Marshall statue, which stands just at the foot of the steps on the west side of the Capitol. It is of bronze, on a beautiful marble pedestal, mottled with white panels, on which are represented scenes of classic lore. The statue sits in a chair in official robes and looks toward the west The day was very fine, and a large canopy filled with invited guests, and the whole grounds for a wide distance covered with people bespoke the interest that was felt. In front of the speakers' stand were Senator Edwards, Speaker Carlisle, Secretaries Lincoln and Chandler, Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, Attorney General Brewster, the historian Geo. Bancroft, and W. W. Corcoran of this city. On the stand were Senator Hoar and Senator Sherman who introduced Chief Justice Waite, and called on him to preside.

The address of the Chief Justice was mainly historical and was followed by the orator of the day, W. H. Rawles of Philadelphia. The address, though pronounced in a full, clear voice, could be heard by only a fraction of the vast multitude. Those who heard pronounced it most able, and it was frequently applauded. I should not omit to say that prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Armstrong, rector of the church of which Marshall was a member. The Marine Band gave excellent music.

Chief Justice John Marshall was born in Virginia in 1755, began to study law 1775, was an officer in the Revolutionary war and was present at the battle of Brandywine, Germantown and Monmouth; but resigned his command in 1781. He was admitted to practice in 1780 and his success was immediate and marked. In 1782 he was elected a member of the House of Delegates. In 1789 he was a member of the legislature from Henrico county. The next year he sat in the Virginia convention called to ratify the National Constitution. In 1789–91 he served again in the legislature from Richmond. In 1795 he defended Jay's treaty which had been bitterly attacked by the legislature. This year he declined to receive from Washington the office of Attorney General, but consented to go as Minister to France, 1797. In 1799, at the urgent solicitation of Washington, he was the Federalist candidate for Congress, and was elected by a small majority. In Congress he was a leader of the Federalist party, which was fast becoming unpopular. His own State resolved, if necessary, to resist by force, the "alien and sedition" laws. He ably defended President Adams, who, in accordance with the Jay treaty, had given up a murderer to the British authorities. Mr. Livingstone had introduced a resolution censuring the President, which measure was defeated by the able speech of Marshall. In 1800 he was appointed Secretary of War by President Adams, but before accepting, he was made Secretary of State. His instructions to Rufus King, minister to England, are among the ablest of state papers. In 1801 he was nominated and unanimously confirmed as Chief Justice of the United States, which office he held till his death in 1835.

His decisions raised him to a point of public respect and professional reputation that have never since been surpassed. Between the years 1804 and 1807 appeared his Life of Washington in five volumes. Justice Story in 1839 published "The writings of John Marshall on the Federal Constitution." "His judgments," says Story, "for power of thought, for beauty of illustration, variety of learning and elegant demonstration, are justly numbered among the highest reaches of the human mind." In person and manner he was not graceful, but his amiable character made him warm personal friends. I should not omit to mention that Marshall was, like Washington, in his youth lured into the Masonic lodge, and like Washington he speedily abandoned it as undeserving the attention of sensible men. In 1833, two years before the death of Marshall, it was claimed by the Masons, that he had said that "Freemasonry is a jewel of the utmost value, that the pure in heart and life can only appreciate it fully, and that in a free government it must, it will be sustained and protected." At 78 years of age he evidently felt that it was too late for him to engage in controversy, but he replied to letters of inquiry, that he had never used such language; that for forty years he had but once been in a lodge; and that in his long intercourse with Washington he had never heard nor read anything from him in favor of that institution.

GOOD MORALS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

During the past week the House of Representatives has been engaged in the important work of revising the laws of the District. To those who comfort themselves with the thought that the men whom we elect to Congress are purer and better than those of former years, it would be well to note this discussion. It will be found that in every instance the proposed legislation was to diminish, if not altogether remove the restraints upon vice and crime, and in most instances their recommendations prevailed.

Section 10 of the police regulations, which had reference to vagrants, drunkards and disorderly persons requiring their arrest, etc., was amended by striking out "persons of evil life and fame." This was doubtless intended to apply to prostitutes and the change grants them immunity. The penalty for these and other offences was changed from "not exceeding one year," to "not exceeding six months."

Section 11 was amended so as to make the requisite bond for good behaviour, "not to exceed $200," instead of $1,000.

Section 14 refers to lotteries and gambling houses in the District. This the committee proposed to strike out, saying that they "did not wish to have any law on the subject. Mr. Browne of Indiana spoke ably against striking out, and Mr. Belford of Colorado, said:

> I desire to ask my friend from Indiana [Mr. Browne] just one question. Would he prohibit a company of respectable gentlemen having a quiet game of poker in a private room? We do not want any of this Puritanical cant about this bill. Let us understand the substantial point. I have known some of the most respectable men of this nation that sat down at a private dinner party and played poker. They took their chances. And if they go and buy a lottery ticket have they not that same right? They may lose or they may win.

After further discussion the section was not stricken out.

Section 15 is in reference to the advertising of lotteries. It gave rise to a lengthy debate. I quote the Congressional Record, giving however only portions of Mr. Browne's able speech:

> Of the thirty-eight States of this Union twenty-seven have prohibited lotteries both by their Constitutions and by statutes. There are eight States that declare lottery enterprises and the sale of lottery tickets, etc., misdemeanors by statute, making thirty-five of the thirty-eight States of the Union that have either in the one way or the other declared lotteries and the sale of lottery tickets to be misdemeanors. Two States, the States of Delaware and Vermont, prohibit lotteries except as they may be authorized by a special act of the General Assembly.
> In the State of Louisiana it is provided by the Constitution that lotteries and gambling-houses shall be lawful until the year 1895. I believe that the Legislature of that State has by law authorized the licensing of gambling-houses and lottery establishments upon the payment of $10,000 per annum, provided that the business is run on the first floor. Of this kind of legislation Louisiana has a monopoly It is certain that there is to-day no State in the Union under whose statutes the lottery business is lawful except that State. That State allows the morals of its people to be debauched for $10,000 a year.
> It is the purpose of this section more particularly to protect the people of the District of Columbia from the Louisiana lottery, which is to-day, perhaps, almost the only institution of the kind that is engaged in such business, and it does so in defiance both of public opinion and of law. It has its drawings in the city of New Orleans periodically, perhaps monthly.
> It furnishes no capital for the prosecution of its business. The dupes who are permitted to draw back about 5 per cent. of their contributions furnish all the capital for this colossal establishment. For every $100,000 that its victims deposit in the exchanges of the concern they are permitted to take out about $5,000. It is a fact that the people of this country contribute to the net profits of that concern from one to two millions of dollars every year. This monster gambling establishment is reaping a harvest of over one and a half millions of dollars every year to be distributed in salaries to officers, for the payment of its agents, and the support of its lobbyists.
> The headquarters of this enterprise is here in the District of Columbia. A gentleman who knows, standing near the head of one of the Executive Departments, tells me that from his observations he believes the clerks in that Department alone contribute to this Louisiana lottery cheat not less than $10,000 every month. A gentleman who stands near the police of the District of Columbia, and who, through them, has investigated something of the manner in which the business is being transacted here, reports that during the last year there were at one time in the streets of this city not less than seventy men who were engaged in selling chances in this lottery, and who were gathering in from the poor, ignorant colored people and white people of the District harvests for this institution, and earning for each of themselves about $5 every day. For this illegal business, this business denounced as a crime by the Constitutions and statutes of all the States, these agents plying their business publicly upon the streets of this city were putting into their own pockets not less than $350 a day. They were taking that amount as their share of this infamous swindle.
> These mammoth iniquities must hold high carnival in this District no longer. The people must be protected from the sharpers who fleece them of their earnings for the benefit of respectable gamblers in lottery schemes.

Mr. Belford of Colorado who has spoken heretofore in favor of Sabbath desecration and who seems opposed to all restraints on the conduct of men, sought to defend the action of the committee in seeking to get rid of the law.

It is a matter of thanksgiving that the good sense of the House prevailed, and that the law was not repealed. It is to be hoped now that this law will be enforced as it manifestly has not been heretofore; but it is still more to be desired that the people of the land shall not send as legislators to this city, those who come as corrupters of public morals, and who seek to break down the barriers to prevalence of crime.

H. H. HINMAN.

Physical exercise in some systematic manner is a duty we owe not merely to our bodies, but to our whole nature. It will vitalize the blood, quicken the energies, give firmness to the nerves and lay a foundation upon which we may build a wholesome and successful life.

THE HOME.

MAY EVENING.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

The breath of Spring-time, at this twilight hour,
Comes through the gathering glooms,
And bears the stolen sweets of many a flower
Into my silent rooms.

Where hast thou wandered, gentle gale, to find
The perfumes thou dost bring?
By brooks, that through the wakening meadows wind,
Or brink of rushy spring?

Or woodside, where, in little companies,
The early wild-flowers rise?
Or sheltered lawn, where, 'mid encircling trees,
May's warmest sunshine lies?

Now sleeps the humming-bird, that in the sun
Wandered from bloom to bloom;
Now, too, the weary bee, his day's work done,
Rests in his waxen room.

Now every hovering insect to his place
Beneath the leaves hath flown;
And, through the long night-hours, the flowery race
Are left to thee alone.

O'er the pale blossoms of the sassafras,
And o'er the spice-bush spray,
Among the opening buds, thy breathings pass,
And come embalmed away.

Yet there is sadness in thy soft caress,
Wind of the blooming year!
The gentle presence, that was wont to bless
Thy coming, is not here.

Go, then; and yet I bid thee not repair,
Thy gathered sweets to shed,
Where pine and willow, in the evening air,
Sigh o'er the buried dead.

Pass on to homes where cheerful voices sound,
And cheerful looks are cast,
And where thou wakest, in thine airy round,
No sorrow of the past.

And whisper, everywhere, that earth renews
Her beautiful array,
Amid the darkness and the gathering dews,
For the return of day.

PAUL ON RETRIBUTION.

How is it that other men are accustomed to treat principles or facts which have crystallized in a system of general belief or of social order? They treat them chiefly by casual allusion. They put them to use in practical affairs, not pausing to prove or to defend them. In our jurisprudence, for instance, the principles most firmly rooted in civilized government find no statement in statute books. They exist unwritten in common law. They are recognized as authority by courts and juries. Men build empires upon them without once putting them into written speech. So, in ordinary life, usages and precedents which have the prestige of the common consent we do not constantly restate and vindicate. We take them for granted. We speak of them allusively. We put them to use as things which nobody assails because nobody doubts. Nobody asks for proof because nobody denies.

Thus it is that St. Paul handles the retributive teachings of the elder Scriptures. He treats them mainly by allusion here and there. He assumes them, hints at them, gives a glimpse of them and passes on; but never are they contradicted; never are they blinked or evaded. He applies them to the demands of his case in hand with the same calmness of assurance with which Christ proclaimed them in terrific symbols. No more here than there do we find apology or argument or reserve of truth. Never by a word or a silence or speech askance is the idea suggested of any possible misunderstanding of those symbols. Still less is any hint given of their retraction or displacement by later revelations, or their obsolescence through unfitness to later ages.

We find nothing, for example, in the apostle's theologic temper corresponding to that suspense of faith in which infirm believers search for some possible loophole of escape from the obvious meaning of our Lord's discourse. St. Paul is the personification of courage. What he believes he knows. His theology contains no half truths; his words suggest no lurking doubts underneath. As on all other themes, so on this of retributive decrees, his deliverances are those of a believer who has no misgivings. The words "know," "knowing" and their correlatives are favorites in his vocabulary. More than one hundred times they occur, and generally in such connections that their force is intensive. So it is that positive men put their case; and so it is that this most positive of men puts the fact of retribution. "Knowing the terrors of the Lord," he says what it is given him to say.

We run the eye at random over the pages most dense with the Pauline theology, and we find in broadcast those allusive fragments of speech which form the boldest utterances of truth because they are the words of a mind consolidated in its convictions and at ease from doubts. We catch them in gleams like these—viz.: "The Lord Jesus revealed in flaming fire." "Taking vengeance on them that know not God." "That all might be damned who believe not the truth." "Tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doeth evil." "Enemies of Christ, whose end is destruction." "The wrath of God revealed from heaven." "Fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation." "A fearful thing to fall into the hands of a living God." "God is a consuming fire."

Such is the method chiefly of the Pauline records in handling the fact of retribution. By allusion here, and partial statement there, and undoubted utterance everywhere, the apostle throws out retributive ideas as if they were a thing of course, and would carry their own authority. No more to him than to our Lord does it seem to occur that the appalling truth needs vindication or will shock a loyal conscience. He uses it without reserve or cautious speech, as a thing fixed and familiar in the beliefs of men. He uses it as men use the rainfalls and the tides.

For the benefit of the contrast, let us, for the moment, contrive to relax the positiveness of the Pauline theology in the glimpses it gives of retributive penalties. Put into it hints of the doubts and the half-beliefs by which modern faith is often enervated. How do such fragmentary Scriptures as these read? —viz: "If the Lord should be revealed in flaming fire." "Perhaps taking vengeance on them that know not God." "Peradventure that they might be damned who believe not." "Tribulation and anguish may come upon souls that do evil." "Enemies of Christ whose end possibly is destruction." "Vessels of wrath probably fitted for destruction." "If the wrath of God should be revealed from heaven." "Who knows but that God is a consuming fire?" "We conjecture that there remaineth fearful looking for of judgment." "Suppose that it should be a fearful thing to fall into the hands of God." "Suspecting the terrors of the Lord, we persuade men."

Is this the Pauline style of discourse? Has it the sound of apostolic suasion? Has it the ring of inspired speech? Who are the men who would be moved by it to fear the indignation of an offended God? Yet is it not a fair expression of the dubious and volatile faith with which many in our day are dallying with the stupendous verities of Biblical retribution?

Fragmentary allusion and practical assumption, however, are not all that the Pauline theology advances concerning retributive truth. We find two distinct affirmations which have great significance in the frame-work of the retributive sentiment, as it appears in the apostolic range of thought.

One is the positive declaration that life in this world without a knowledge of the Christian faith constitutes a full and complete probation. In the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, the chief premise, without which the argument means nothing, is the sufficiency of the light of nature to give to the heathen conscience a knowledge of God and therefore, an equitable moral trial. The whole force of that magnificent reasoning is invalid, except on the assumption that men, ignorant of the Christian salvation, have a "fair trial." Even under the moral obliquities of hereditary paganism, man, so long as the stars glisten and the rivers flow, has that above and around him which will prove to him the living God. If he sins he is without excuse. If incorrigible in sin his damnation is just. The indignation of God is righteously displayed in his destruction.

If the Pauline idea of retributive decrees had been purposely so developed and so set in the frame of its practical uses as to forestall the modern objection to their infliction on men who have not rejected Christ, it could not have achieved that purpose more explicitly or conclusively. That punishment cannot be justly inflicted upon sinners outside of a Christocentric system of probation certainly never entered the mind of the author of the Epistle to the Romans.

The other declaration, equally significant and to the same purpose, is that a knowledge of Christ aggravates the retributive destiny of those who reject him. That is to say, so far is it from being essential to the equity of moral trial, that men must be put into the Christian range of belief and opportunity; that the working of such privilege, if abused, is to augment both guilt and penalty already incurred. The Epistle to the Hebrews, whoever was its author, may be fairly taken as representative of the Pauline theology. Its argument turns in part on this pivot: "Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God?"

This, in its bearing on the point in hand, can mean but one thing. Christian birth and training do not create the probation to which man is subjected here. They intensify that probation. The rejection of the Christian offer of salvation does not create the doom of incorrigible guilt, nor is it essential to the justice of that doom. It aggravates both the guilt and the penalty. Two distinct systems of moral trial are here going on. One is superinduced upon the other. The light of nature illumines the one; the light of revelation illumines the other. Each is complete in its way. Trial under either is perfect in its kind. Guilt under either is perfect in its kind. Guilt under either is proportioned to its conditions. Punishment under either is graduated to guilt, and is therefore just.

Thus the Pauline conception of retributive decrees comes into exact line with the teachings of the elder Scriptures, and with the disclosures of our Lord, and with the remorseful menaces of the human conscience. Starting from different sources they all converge to one result—that retribution commensurate with guilt in degree and in duration is a law of the moral universe to which minds loyal to God and to themselves take no exception and ascribe no wrong.—Prof. Austin Phelps, in Independent.

BAALBEC.

The following graphic passage is from one of Dr. H. M. Field's letters in the Evangelist on the ruined city of Baalbec, forty-three miles north-west of Damascus:

"Everything is colossal. The area is larger than that of the temple at Jerusalem. We may begin with the walls, which are half a mile around, and of such height and depth as are rarely attained in the most tremendous fortress. When from within I climbed to the top, it made me giddy to look over the perilous edge to the depth below; and when from without the walls I looked up at them, they rose high in air. Some of the stones seem as if they must have been reared in place, not by Titans, but by the gods. There are nine stones thirty feet long and ten feet thick, which is larger than the foundation stone of the temple at Jerusalem, dating from the time of Solomon, or any blocks in the great pyramid. But even these are pigmies compared with the three giants of the western wall—sixty-two, sixty-three and a half, and sixty-four feet long!

"These are said to be the largest stones ever used in any construction. They weigh hundreds of tons, and instead of being merely hewn out of a quarry, which might have been on the site, and left to lie where they were before, they have been lifted nineteen feet from the ground, and there imbedded in the wall! Never was there such cyclopean architecture. How such enormous masses could be moved is a problem with modern engineers. Sir Charles Wilson, whom I met in Jerusalem, is at this moment in Baalbec. Standing in the grounds of the temple, he tells me that in the British Museum there is an ancient tablet which reveals the way in which such stones were moved. The mechanics were very simple. Rollers were put under them, and they were drawn up inclined planes by sheer human muscle—the united strength of great numbers of men. In the rude design on the tablet the whole scene is pictured to the eye. There are the battalions of men, hundreds to a single roller, with the taskmasters standing over them, lash in hand, which was freely applied to make them pull together, and the king sitting on high to give the signal for this putting forth of human strength en masse, as if an army were moving to battle. A battle it was in the waste of human life which it caused. These temples of Baalbec must have been a whole generation in building, and have consumed the population of a province, and the wealth of an empire."

WHAT CHRIST IS TO US.

We are condemned and killed by the law, but by Christ we are justified and restored to life. The law astonishes us and driveth us from God; but Christ reconcileth us to God and maketh for us an entrance, that we may boldly come to him. For he is the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. Now, if the sin of the world be taken away, then it is taken away from us also which do believe in him. If sin is taken away, then is the wrath of God, death and damnation taken away also. And in place of sin succeedeth righteousness; in place of wrath, reconciliation and grace; in place of death, life; in place of damnation, salvation. Let us learn to practice this distinction, not in words only, but in life, and in lively experience, and with an inward feeling. For where Christ is, must needs be joy of heart and peace of conscience; for Christ is our reconciliation, peace, life and salvation.—Luther on Galatians.

EGYPT AND THE SOUDAN.

The young people of the Cynosure should know something of the reason for the troubles in Egypt and in the country to the south of it along the upper waters of the Nile. England, France, Germany and Italy are all very much interested in the final settlement of the matter, the English Parliament is spending much time in debating what they shall do with Egypt, and the newspapers are publishing reports every day which everybody is eager to read. Mr. James Redpath, an old editor who has spent some time in Ireland speaking for the party that asks for the independency of that island, writes a short account of Egypt and the Soudan, which we copy in part:

"What is the Soudan? Where is it? Who is Chinese Gordon? Who is El Mahdi? What is all this Egyptian row about any how? And what have the English got to do with it?

If you take your map of Africa you will see that the northeast side of that geographical leg of mutton consists of the coast of the Red Sea, and that almost parallel with this coast winds and straggles the great river Nile. Now from the Nile to the Red Sea coast on the one side, and from the Nile to the Lybian Desert on the other, and from the delta around which the Nile flows into the Mediterranean Sea on the north to the dotted line marking the Tropic of Cancer on the south, and cutting off the Red Sea coast at about a third of its length, lies a country; that country is Egypt. Again, from the Tropic of Cancer southward along the Nile until the lake Victoria Nyanza is reached at the Equator itself, and from the Nile eastward to the Red Sea coast, stopping at the port of Massowah and just north of the mountain chains of Abyssinia and from this Nile westward to central Africa—these are the boundaries of another country; and that country is the Soudan.

Egypt, to distinguish it from the Soudan which is annexed to Egypt, is called Egypt Proper. For Egypt bears a relation to Soudan very similar to that which Great Britain does to Ireland—an analogy the closeness of which will be better seen as we go along.

Egypt is governed by a Khedive, or hereditary viceroy, who although the vassal of Turkey, is practically a despotic ruler.

The population of Egypt and the Soudan is about the same as that of Ireland. Leaving out the 1,000,000 Soudanese, the population of Egypt Proper is about 4,250,000, the great bulk of whom are Mohammedans.

But this population includes 88,000 foreigners, of whom 24,000 are Greeks, 24,000 Italians, 17,000 French, 6,500 Germans and Austrians and 6,000 English. Most of these foreigners are money lenders, holders of Egyptian bonds, officials of the Khedive's government and underhand procurers of slaves for Turkish harems.

The body of the Egyptian people are the fellaheen or peasants who live by agriculture. They are a meek and ground down race, kept in a state of chronic poverty by the exactions of the tax gatherer and the Pasha, and by the uncertainty of the Nile overflow.

Each province or district has a governor, or Mudir, and besides him there are Omdehs, or communals chiefs, and village shiekhs and sherrafs. These officials live by plundering and oppressing each other and the fellaheen, and while acknowledging a superior, and paying tribute to a central government, have practically power to do what they like in their localities.

The population of the Soudan consists of numerous tribes of Arabs, who lead a free, nomadic life on the desert, and are a bold and warlike race, ever on the watch for an opportunity to shake off the yoke of the Egyptian khedives.

The lot of the Egyptian fellaheen is a hard one. It is they who have to support out of the returns of their little holdings, the whole weight of an excessive horde of avaricious and unscrupulous officials and of the corrupt government which employs these officials, and it is they who have to pay the debts which this extravagant and corrupt government have contracted with European bondholders. In order to pay his outrageous taxes this famine and blood harassed fellah has to borrow at exhorbitant rates from the village usurer; and it is in the grip of this gombeenman lastly that the thrice enslaved fellaheen are now clutched.

Such, in brief, is the land of Egypt and its people. Now let us see how the present political trouble has come about.

The Soudan is to Egypt, as I have already said, almost what Ireland is to England, with a desert acting as a dividing line in place of St. George's Channel. Until the beginning of this century this desert zone was barrier enough to keep the countries separate. But Egypt had an ambitious Khedive in Mehemet Ali, who desirous of extending his authority and finding the provinces of Kordofan and Darfur and all the country away to the sources of the Nile inhabited by disunited tribes, annexed the Soudan. Since then the Soudan has remained a discontented appendage of Egypt.

Mehemet Ali, his successors and their agents and officers, made use of the Soudan chiefly for the purpose of kidnapping slaves, driving them in droves to the coast and then shipping them for sale in Cairo, Constantinople or Arabia. The ravages and misery wrought by these slave traders surpasses almost even what we read of the depredations of Warren Hastings in the territory of Oude.

The khedives favored this traffic until they found that the growing power of the slave dealers threatened their own authority. The great slave dealers were in the habit of taking the best and strongest of those whom they kidnapped and forming them into a body guard which they made use of in their raids. Thus gradually they became possessed of a sort of standing army greatly superior in every respect to the wretched fellah soldiers who represented the authority of the Khedive.

The Khedive Ismail Pasha being alarmed, resolved to crush these slave traders. He made an attempt to do so himself, but failing, he sent for Chinese Gordon and commissioned him as governor of the Soudan, with full powers to suppress the slave trade.

General Gordon, a distinguished officer of the English army, who had won the rare distinction for an English soldier of a reputation as a genuine philanthropist and friend of the oppressed, a man of heroic courage, of iron determination, of immense ability, and of an almost fanatical devotion to duty, entered on this mission with readiness. With his marvelous energy and address he succeeded in utterly breaking up the power of the slave dealers and putting an end to their traffic in the Soudan.

The people, delivered from this incubus, developed a new spirit—or rather the spirit which animated them before their country was annexed to Egypt. Gordon was worshipped as a hero, and he showed the Arab tribes how they could resist the incursions of the slave dealers.

But some of the officials whom Gordon dismissed went back to Cairo and began intriguing with the Egyptian government. The result was Gordon was recalled, and the Mudirs and Pashas and slave dealers went back to plunder and devastation again. But they found things changed in the Soudan. The slave dealers' army was gone, and the people freshly exasperated, only awaited the man and the opportunity to shake off the Egyptian yoke.

If in Mehemet Ali Egypt had an ambitious Khedive, in Ismail Pasha, who succeeded his immediate successor, she had a Khedive who was both ambitious and extravagant. He plunged the country into debt, obtaining loans at large interest from European bondholders. The people received no benefit from these loans, which went to build magnificent palaces and to stock harems for Ismail; nevertheless, in order to pay off the bondholders, who were mostly British, the already ruined fellaheen were taxed again. At length they had nothing to give, and when the present Khedive, Tewfik, succeeded Ismail, the country was on the verge of bankruptcy.

When the army, having had to go without pay for a long time began to grow mutinous, Arabi Pasha started his agitation. He promised the people and the army that if they helped him to eject the foreigners from Egypt he would scout the claims of the bondholders, and they would have to pay no more taxes. The Egyptians accordingly rose in revolt. But England, to protect the interests of the bondholders, resolved to put down the rebellion, and did so, as we all know.

Egypt's difficulty was the Soudan's opportunity. The result that Gordon foretold took place. All that was wanted for a rebellion in the Soudan was the opportunity and the man. The opportunity having arrived, the man has appeared in the person of the Arab chief, Mahomet Achmet, who is said to have proclaimed himself the "Mahdi."

"The Mahdi" is the prophesied deliverer of Islam who, the Mohammedans believe, is to reconquer the world for the Prophet. Mahomet Achmet may not have proclaimed himself quite the "Mahdi," as that would entail a great deal being expected of him; it is more probable that he has proclaimed himself only a precursor of the Mahdi—a proclamation that would serve its purpose just as well in appealing to the fanaticism of Islam.

Be that as it may, El Mahdi, as he is now generally called, since he summoned the people of the Soudan to revolt in the name of the Prophet, has achieved a series of the most remarkable successes. The first who opposed him, the Egyptian governor of Fashoda, he defeated, capturing the important towns of Obeid and Bara. Then the Egyptian army under English officers and commanded by General Hicks, that was sent against him, he completely annihilated. He laid siege to Khartoum and to the towns of Sinkat and Tokar. The celebrated Baker Pasha, in command of another Egyptian army, was sent to the relief of Sinkat; and Baker Pasha also fell before the Mahdi. The army of relief was routed, and Sinkat fell into the Mahdi's hands, whose garrison he cut to pieces.

Since England, by her war with Arabi, undertook to restore peace to the Khedive's dominion, she had a certain amount of responsibility in regard to the condition of the Soudan. In the dilemma, the English Cabinet sent for General Gordon. The view that Gordon urged was that the rebellion of El Mahdi should be recognized as legitimate. The English Cabinet may not have swallowed all of Gordon's scheme. But they, nevertheless, dispatched General Gordon to the Soudan, and his course of action justifies much expectation. Since he arrived at Khartoum, where the people received him with joy, he has recognized the Mahdi's rebellion as legitimate; and he has done much more—he has proclaimed the Mahdi Sultan of Kordofan! He has remitted half the taxes of the people, and he has summoned all the native tribes of the Soudan to meet him with a view to establishing an independent native government in Khartoum."

TEMPERANCE.

A SENSIBLE GOAT.

A thoughtless Welshman with a thirsty throat—
So goes the tale—possessed a favorite goat
Who followed him, when once to play the sot
He sought the tap-room and the foamy pot.
He gave her drink, when, by the cheerful blaze,
Strangely forgetting all her sober ways,
She'd reel'd about and roll'd upon the floor
As never goat had rolled about before.
The giggling topers so enjoyed the sight
That they would have the fun another night.
The Welshman took her, but the goat, alas!
The portal of the pothouse would not pass.
Her master uselessly tried every mode,
Though pats and punches freely were bestowed,
The landlord strove, and did his best, they say,
But all in vain, for Nanny won the day;
Cuffing and coaxing, both alike she bore,
Nor could they get her through the pothouse door.
The wondering Welshman, now no longer blind,
Ponder'd the thing a moment in his mind,
Then prudently adopted, in the end,
The wise example of his shaggy friend;
Forsook the pothouse, and reformed his plan,
And from that hour became a sober man.
Ye drunkards all, this prudent lesson follow,
Or own, in sense, a goat has beat you hollow.

THE GOVERNMENT WHISKY TAX.

Do you tell me that the Government of the United States cannot afford prohibition because of the large revenue the liquor traffic pays the Government? I answer that where it pays the Government $1 it steals $10 in the property destroyed, the criminal trials it makes necessary, the penitentiaries and the asylums and almshouses that are necessary to support its victims. The Government makes as much out of this revenue as you would as a merchant make if you sold a knife to a man for one dollar, and after having paid you the money he thrusts its blade through the heart of your child; or if selling a box of matches and he handed you the money, and then with the first match he struck he set fire to your dwelling.

There are 1,000,000 drunkards in the United States today; 60,000 of the people annually die drunkards; 100,000 men and women annually sent to prison through this iniquity; 200,000 children thrown on the charity of the world by alcoholism. Judge Allison says that fully four-fifths of the crime committed in this country is committed under the influence of strong drink. In Canada, out of 28,289 commitments to jail, 21,236 committed their crimes under the influence of strong drink. Dr. Harris, Inspector of Prisons in New York State, says that 85 per cent of all the crime is the result of intemperance. There are 30,000 maniacs and idiots in this country now as a result of intemperance. England pays $400,000 yearly for alcoholic insane paupers. Mrs. Comstock, the Quaker missionary, says that out of 115,000 prisoners 105,000 were incarcerated by their intemperance. It is estimated that 99-100 of the children not going to school in this country are the children of drunkards. The cost of and ruin by rum in this country is $1,200,000,000 annually. Ah, we hear a great deal about crooked whisky, by which reference is made to liquors that escape paying revenue to Government, but all whisky is crooked, from the fact that it makes a man's path crooked, his fortune crooked, his business crooked, his health crooked, his disposition crooked, his destiny crooked. Crooked whisky, crooked gin, crooked wine, crooked cognac, crooked schnapps, crooked intoxicants of all sorts. Talking and speech-making may restore here and there one, but prohibition, national prohibition, will stop the entire curse. In Edwards county, Ill., it was decided twenty-seven years ago that they would have no rum in the county, and in twenty-five years only one person was sent to the penitentiary, and he committed a crime while drunk from rum got in another county. The most of the time the jail has been empty. There are only two or three paupers in all the county. The tax is 32 per cent lower than in the neighboring counties, though their tax-rolls show more property than in any other county in the State of equal size. The court in that county sits three days in the year.

Good citizens of the United States, I do not know how you feel about it, but I am tired of paying taxes to fix up the work of these infernal dram-shops that are making criminals and paupers by the tens of thousands. Out with them! Out with them from the city! Out with them from the State! Out with them from the nation! But, you say, such a law of extirpation could not be executed if it were passed. Try it! It has been executed in different parts of Maine, in Massachusetts, in Rhode Island, in Maryland, in Colorado, in Iowa and in Kansas. Give us such a law of entire prohibition in these Eastern States, and if the authorities do not execute it we will do as the forty-niners did in California when they formed a vigilance committee who made quick work with the offenders. Give us such a law in Brooklyn, and if the authorities do not execute it I will some Sunday, standing in this pulpit, gather a battalion of strong men, and we will go out, and in the name of our homes and in the name of the Lord God Almighty, shut up every grog-shop in Brooklyn. But it will never be thoroughly accomplished until the nation awakes from its indifference to its magnificent opportunity.—Talmage.

Then such talk as that a woman must necessarily wear men's clothing, and go to war, and hold office, in short step quite outside of her womanhood if she should go so far as to say by what law she shall be governed, and assert her rights to herself and her children, is simply nonsensical.

If Paul meant women should be always silent how is she to reform anything? And as for her usurping any authority over man because she helps to make laws, is all folly to admit. Woman was first in transgression, last at the cross, first at the sepulchre, and the first one bidden by Christ himself to preach a risen Lord; and when Christ himself bids her thus speak how can she keep silent? Still she can keep silent and go to the polls: it does not follow that she should spend an undue amount of time in talking, smoking, chewing, spitting, swearing or fighting in order to get her vote into the ballot box.

It may be said the above pictures are overdrawn, but look around you and you will find such the rule and not the exception: and these wrongs demand speedy remedy, and women that have such husbands cannot "trust them" to vote for them, for she is not "trusted" whether "she deserves" it or not. When the time comes that women are free to govern as they are governed a great revolution will be wrought in the purity of society as well as in its happiness, and God will bless all who labor for this end with his presence and power. THE CHURCHES.

—A new United Presbyterian church has been organized in New Castle, Pa., with ninety-three members.

—Rev. Dr. S. Collins, president of the N. C. A. National Convention, is now supplying the Newark, N. J., United Presbyterian church, with great satisfaction to the people.

—The first Protestant missionaries to enter Corea are Rev. John Ross, D.D., and a United Presbyterian brother from China. Dr. Ross has mastered the Corean language and made a translation into it of the New Testament.

—The Revised Old Testament, it is said, will be completed in July, and published next autumn.

—All the Wesleyan and Methodist bodies in New Zealand have united in a single ecclesiastical body.

—The World's Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations will be held in Berlin in August next.

—Elder J. L. Barlow, for several years pastor of the Willimantic, Conn., church, resigned last month and is now unemployed. His address is still at Willimantic.

—A resolution to establish "evangelical missions" among the Catholics of this country, particularly the French and Italians in large cities, was adopted Tuesday by the Missions Committee of the Methodist General Conference, in session at Philadelphia.

—On Thursday evening last Farwell Hall in this city was well filled on the occasion of an address in French by Pere Hyacinthe of Paris, the reformed Romanist priest, on France and America. Several brief addresses were made by Chicago ministers, and a collection was taken for the benefit of the mission conducted by Hyacinthe in Paris.

—Bro. M. E. Dewey of Barnum, Minn., writes with full soul of the joy of personal religion and of a prayer meeting conducted at his house every Lord's day afternoon in which a number who are separated to Christ from the lodge join him with fervid devotion. Such prayer meetings are the hope of Christian reform.

—During revival meetings held in Rooks county, Kansas, by Free Methodist brethren, eight slaves of the tobacco habit were set free in Christ. There were some thirty-six conversions during the meetings.

—The Illinois State Sabbath-school convention was held in the Hall of Representatives, Springfield, last week, and was attended by a large delegation from this city. Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton spoke on Wednesday evening.

—The New York State Sunday-School Association will hold its annual meeting in Oswego, June 3–5. It is estimated that there are 600,000 children in the State who do not attend Sunday-school.

—Were the four Presbyterian denominations in the United States to consolidate, the membership of the church would be 926,905, with 8,444 ministers. The General Assembly of three of them will begin on May 15, and that of the United Presbyterian church on May 28, in St. Louis.

—The return of the Rev. Aaron Kinney to the pastorate of the Free Baptist church, Beaver river, Nova Scotia, has been signalized by an extensive revival. Upwards of seventy persons have been baptized, and the interest still keeps up. At one meeting as many as 120 persons rose to give their testimony to the power of the gospel, and to ask for the prayers of the church.

—In the Methodist General Conference Thursday four new bishops were elected, as follows: Rev. W. X. Ninde, Rev. J. M. Walden, Rev. William F. Mallalieu, and Rev. C. H. Fowler. Dr. Ninde is president of Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill.; Dr. Walden is a member of the Book Concern of Cincinnati; Dr. Mallalieu is a New Englander; and Dr. Fowler is well known as former pastor of Centenary Church in this city, and president of Northwestern University, an active Freemason who has been seeking election as bishop for years with a very worldly ambition.

—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church met Thursday morning in Saratoga. Fully 2,000 persons were in attendance. The opening sermon was delivered by the Syrian missionary, the Rev. Dr. H. H. Jessup. The following officers were elected: Moderator, the Rev. Dr. Hayes, Denver, Col.; Stated Clerk, the Rev. Dr. W. H. Roberts, Princeton, N. J.; Permanent Clerk, the Rev. Dr. W. E. Moore, Columbus, Ohio; Treasurer, the Rev. H. W. Torrance, New York.

—Rev. James H. Brookes, for twenty-five years pastor of the Washington Avenue Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, and editor of the Truth, sails for Europe for a vacation of several months. He is accompanied by his wife and daughter. In honor of his long service as pastor his parishioners have had made several bronze medallions, with the head of Dr. Brookes on one side and an appropriate inscription on the other.

—Rev. C. L. Preston of Rives Junction, Mich., has been engaged in revival work for four months since last October among the Wesleyan churches of Michigan, and rejoices in knowing that some eighty or ninety persons have found the Saviour through this instrumentality.

—Prof. Olson of Rock Island, Ill., is visiting the Swedish churches in Minnesota to raise funds for the new college and seminary buildings near that city. Prof. Olson gave the Swedish address at the N. C. A. National convention at Galesburg.

—The London Congregational Union is doing its utmost to respond to the "Bitter Cry of Outcast London." There are 250 churches in affiliation with the Union, which, with their mission-rooms and halls, provide accommodation for no less than 207,794 persons. A scheme has been formed for raising, in five years, £100,000 for extension work in the metropolis, toward which promises to the extent of £63,815 have already been received.

—The Rev. Howard Crosby, shortly after the evening service at his church on Sunday, April 27, was attacked by pneumonia, and for three days his recovery was doubtful. Professor J. O. Murray, D. D., of Princeton, who filled his pulpit Sunday, announced that Dr. Crosby was better. Dr. John Hall preached for him in the evening.

—May is crowded with important ecclesiastical assemblages. Including both those already held and those to come, the following list may be given: General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, in Philadelphia; the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant church, in Baltimore, May 16; the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal church, in Baltimore, May 5; the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion church, in New York, May 7; the General Synod of the Reformed (German) church, in Baltimore, May 7; The Southern Baptist Convention, in Baltimore, May 1; the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, in Saratoga, May 15; the Southern Presbyterian church Assembly, in Vicksburg, Miss., May 15; the Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly, in McKeesport, Pa., May 15; the United Presbyterian General Assembly, in St. Louis, May 28; the General Eldership of the Church of God, in Wooster, Ohio, on May 28. Next month the General Synod of the Reformed (Dutch) church meets in Grand Rapids, Mich. (June 4), and the Presbyterian Alliance holds its third General Council in Belfast, Ireland, beginning June 24.—N. Y. Witness.

ANOTHER BID FOR MASONIC MINISTERS.

The Niagara Journal of May 7, 1884, contains the following quotation as an item of county news:

"DONATION VISIT.—Messrs. Jason Collier, J. A. Driess, W. S. Pound, Henry Buddenhagen, M. G. Lampkins, R. B. Moore, Chauncey Weatherwax, Fred Walter and S. M. Barnes of this city went Thursday to Molyneux Corners on the south Ridge, as representatives of the different Masonic lodges of this city to attend the donation given last evening to the Rev. A. H. Marriott of that place, under the auspices of Ontario, Wilson, Niagara, Red Jacket and Lockport Masonic lodges. * * * The combined donations of the five lodges, amounting to $200, were presented to Mr. and Mrs. Marriott by Jason Collier of this city, in a very acceptable and appropriate speech."

Not a small temptation, this $200, to a preacher in a country parish, to join the lodge or do some dirty work for it where the morality of its character is called in question. Evidently the force of public sentiment is being felt on the Masonic ministers who have given their influence to favor the lodge, and also many young men in the ministry have thereby been kept out of its toils. Something must be done to hold the clergy. What more acceptable and potent argument to a man who has sworn away his allegiance to another than his Divine Master, than the money argument? What is better calculated to help a young minister who has small consecration to God decide the question of lodge membership? And then it must be published so that all the world may know what generous and religious institutions these Masonic lodges are. J. W. ALBERTY.

INSTRUCTIVE HISTORY.

ACTION OF THE CAYUGA BAPTIST ASSOCIATION OF THE STATE OF N. Y., SEPT. 16TH AND 17TH, 1829.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A week or two since I met with an old copy of the History of the Cayuga Baptist Association, published soon after the abduction and murder of Morgan. From it I copy some interesting facts. At the annual meeting of this Association held at Springport, N. Y., Sept. 16th and 17th, 1829, the historian says:

"For several years the connection of church members with this institution [Freemasonry] has been a subject of grief and cause of discipline with several churches as expressed in their letters to this body. But this year the excitement seemed to have risen to its height and prevailed among all classes in church and community. In community, made the basis of a new party in politics; in the church, a test of fellowship. The Association thus utters its views of Freemasonry:

'Inasmuch as the Masonic institution has been the subject of great altercation with our brethren and many churches have suffered material injury in consequence, it is the duty of our brethren who are connected with it to renounce the same, it being in our opinion utterly incompatible with the Gospel of Christ.'"

In their correspondence of the same year they say:

"We cannot forbear to hail with joy unspeakable the providence of God that has brought to light the principles and tendencies of the Masonic institution. We consider that a matter of this magnitude is deserving the attention of every one, and you will observe by our resolution on the subject, that we have no fellowship with it nor with those who maintain it."

At their next annual meeting the Association expressed in a still more decided manner their disapprobation of the lodge by passing the following vote:

"Resolved, That we cannot receive into our connection any church that holds fellowship with the institution of Freemasonry."

The compiler of this history remarks that the action of the Association probably did much in connection with other causes to remove the evil from our churches.

J. L. ANDRUS.

The "New Orthodoxy," as the tendency to overthrow the Scriptural teaching respecting the doom of the lost is called, was discussed last week in the Western Unitarian Conference meeting in this city. Dr. H. W. Thomas, the ex-Methodist, was present, and is thus reported:

He said he was no apologist for the Congregational creed; he considered it a compromised creed, not intended to represent individual opinions, but to hold the church together. It had two faces—one looking forward and one backward. He denied that the new orthodoxy was in any sense a compromise movement; it was a movement backwards to the teaching of Christ and the apostles; it was Christism rather than Paulism. Christ never indorsed the fall of man, though quoting from the second chapter of Genesis; and if there had been no fall what need was there for atonement? The new theology emphasizes the fatherhood of God, and that he loves all mankind and did not need to be bought over to love them by Christ. The true sacrifice is the suffering for sin that leads to penitence. Instead of getting man out of sin by a bankrupt act he has to suffer himself before he is forgiven. The new theology does not sentence all sinners to the same term of punishment; it considers punishment as love seeking to save, and only to be inflicted as long as necessary for discipline. "All hail," said he, "to Darwin and Herbert Spencer, and every one that has a truth; but we need more, enthusiasm and love of Jesus Christ, and humanity broad as the Son of God."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The Roman Catholics have yielded to the lodge pressure and have instituted an "Independent Order of Foresters" of their own. A new "court" of this order was organized last week in this city.

—The "High Tent" of the "Independent Order of Rechabites of North America" will meet in Utica, N. Y., on Tuesday, May 27. A letter received lately by the "High Chief Ruler," C. L. Hecox, of Ilion, N. Y., from the "High Chief Ruler" of the order in Great Britain said that he would be present. The Order of Rechabites was established at Salford, Manchester, England, in 1835; they have now a membership of 85,000 members, with an accumulated fund of $2,000,000. The order was established in this country in 1842.

—The State Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias met in Madison, Wis., last Tuesday, seventy delegates attending.

—The Odd fellows laid the corner-stone of their new hall in San Francisco Wednesday last. The ceremony was made the occasion of a grand demonstration, Governor Stoneman having proclaimed the day a legal holiday.

—A new lodge known as the National Union. The order seems to be popular among the clerks and book-keeper's of wholesale establishments. The druggists have an organization, the hardware men another and some of the employes of wholesale dry goods houses are getting up others. A State organization was fixed up last week.

—The eleventh annual session of the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Honor was opened yesterday afternoon at the Sherman House, last week Tuesday and continued through the week. Tuesday afternoon thirty-three men were admitted into the lodge and instructed in the degree of "old age." Mr. Wm. H. Barnes, of the San Francisco Weekly Call, and President of the Pacific Coast Press Association, was created a Past Grand Director. At Hershey Hall Tuesday evening the Supreme Lodge was welcomed by the local lodges. The exercises were opened with prayer by W. G. Holland, Supreme Chaplain, after which Mayor Harrison welcomed the delegates. On Thursday the salaries of the officers were fixed as follows: Supreme Dictator, $2,500; Supreme Reporter, $3,600; Supreme Treasurer, $3,600. The offices of the Treasurer and Reporter were changed from Louisville to St. Louis. The following officers were elected: Supreme Dictator, Gen. F. D. Sloat, New Haven, Conn.; Supreme Vice-Dictator, L. A. Gratz, Knoxville, Tenn.; Supreme Assistant Dictator, M. C. Crawford, Jonesboro, Ill.; Supreme Treasurer, J. W. Branch, St. Louis; Supreme Reporter, B. F. Nelson, Louisville, Ky.; Supreme Chaplain, Geo. W. Holland, Newberg, S. C.; Supreme Guide, E. J. Davenport, Minneapolis, Minn.; Supreme Guardian, P. C. Carleton, Statesville, N. C.; Supreme Sentinel, Lewis Wilson, Cincinnati, O.; Supreme Trustees, Geo. S. Woodman, Auburn, Me.; John F. Millburn, Louisville, Ky.; H. N. Carpenter, Nebraska. It is said that in this order there are now 36 grand lodges in as many States, one in the District of Columbia, and seven in the Territories. The total membership is over 130,000. During the eleven years of the order's existence it has paid out over $11,000,000 in death benefits, more than $3,000,000 being disbursed in the past year. The character of the representatives attending this meeting may be understood from the announcement that they would attend on Sunday Dr. H. W. Thomas's church, Hooley's Theater.

—The "Ancient Order of Hibernians" is a Romanist secret society which furnished the world the infamous Mollie Maguires of Pennsylvania. It has been blessed by Roman Catholic prelates, but never repudiated the Mollies. At a national meeting at Cleveland, O., last week, it was resolved "that the Ancient Order of Hibernians is an organization which respects that sound doctrine which teaches man that after his duty to God, his next is to his country; and it therefore proclaims unswerving fidelity to the free institutions of the United States of America, and tenders to the people of Ireland the assurance that her exiled children in this order in America are unchanged and unchangeable in their love for their motherland. That they sympathize, heart and soul, with Ireland's struggle for her national right to self-government, and to take her place among the nations of the earth free and independent. That we send words of godspeed to the loyal, courageous, and prudent leader of the Irish people, Charles Stewart Parnell, and pledge him and his gallant associates our earnest support. That we heartily indorse the declaration of principles adopted by the Irish National League of America at the Philadelphia convention; and, as Irishmen, declare it the duty of every Irishman in this country to join Parnell's auxiliaries in America, the Irish National League of America. That the Ancient Order of Hibernians of the United States, while personally allowing the utmost freedom of action to its members consistent with their duty to their God and their country, hereby declare that this organization is absolutely and entirely Roman Catholic in its inception and tendencies, owing spiritual allegiance alone to the church in which we were born, and for the maintenance and perpetuation of which our fathers bled and died; and we hereby declare, as representatives of the order in convention assembled, that we are not affiliated with or controlled by, directly or indirectly, any other society or organization of any kind, nature, or description, in this or any other country."

SUBSEQUENT EVENTS.

THE VAST EVILS THAT FOLLOW GREAT DISASTERS—A MINISTER'S MANNER OF MEETING THEM.

(Cincinnati Correspondence.)

Cincinnati may not deserve the reputation of being a "Festive City," but it certainly controls a monopoly of Festivals. First it was the Opera Festival, next the Dramatic and more latterly it has been the Flood and Riot Festivals. These latter Carnivals may not possess the attractive features that the two former were supposed to have, but they are none the less likely to prove powerful and more lasting in their results. I had a very interesting conversation bearing upon this subject, with the Rev. J. Pike Powers, the well-known Divine, who has charge of the Baptist church at Owenton, Ky., a few days since. I found that the Reverend Doctor was very well versed in matters pertaining to the welfare of the world as well as the church. In the course of our conversation he said:

"The effects of both the riots and the floods are such as to naturally cause keen regret. The former show, in a distressing degree, the extremes to which human nature can go when in its frenzied state, whether justifiable or unjustifiable. It takes a long while for a community to become reconciled to the quiet of every-day life after such a furore as we have had."

"But do you think that such an uprising is more to be regretted than the floods?"

"That is hard to say. There are very many things that follow as the result of a freshet that are greatly to be deplored. Principally among these may be mentioned the damp and unhealthy condition in which the country is left, by reason of the overflow of water. The drying up of the water by the sun causes miasma of a dreadful nature to be generated which sows the seeds of disease and death in the community. Indeed, this is true of the spring time in all regions, whether they are visited by freshets or not. There are millions of people in this country who are at this moment drawing in rank poison with every breath they take, and the wonder to me is that sickness is not more common than it is."

"Do you think disease is contracted by breathing air impregnated with fungus?"

"More certainly than in any other manner. I am positive most diseases are contracted in this way. The rank air poisons the blood and the mind becomes dull, the digestion poor, the muscles ache, the head throbs, the tongue grows white, the appetite departs and general debility sets in which is certain to result in death if not checked. I believe it is the part of the highest wisdom to fortify the system against the inroads of such insidious evils."

"But that is a difficult thing to do, is it not, Doctor?"

"I once thought so but have changed my mind since the experience I have had with my own family. I have found that by the use of what is certainly a most valuable preparation, the whole body is so toned up and invigorated that it can repel these malarial enemies of health. That preparation is Warner's Tippecanoe, and I believe in it most implicitly, for I have seen what wonderful things it could accomplish."

"Have you tried it thoroughly?"

"Yes. One of my sons had suffered severely from dyspepsia and mal-assimilation of food coupled with headache and dizziness. We tried various preparations without avail, and it was not until Tippecanoe was given that he began to improve. He was greatly reduced in flesh, had a lump in the stomach apparently as hard as a brickbat; his appetite was poor and he looked very badly. We were distressed about him. This remedy has, however, restored his appetite, corrected his stomach, relieved his headache, and now he is growing fat and can eat almost anything without distress. Mrs. Powers is enthusiastic upon this subject and so am I. You see, many so-called stomach preparations are composed so largely of alcohol that they create an appetite for strong drink and encourage vice. This preparation I have named is an exception, and I think it should be universally known."

And that is why the above interview is published.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

FARM AND GARDEN.

CELERY GROWING.

I think hilling at intervals all through the season to be an improvement for this reason: When the stalks are held together they shade each other, and almost the entire head will be crisp and fit for eating. Otherwise, if the stalks are allowed to sprawl about all summer, and hilled in in the fall, there are many of the outside stalks that will be tough and never bleach enough to become fit for use.

My method of celery culture is this: 1st. Send where you will be sure to get good seed.

2d. Prepare a seed-bed out of doors in a sheltered situation. You will get your plants early enough by so doing, for they grow much faster and are much stronger than when grown in a hot-bed.

3d. Sprinkle the bed often to keep it moist, and when the young plants are about three inches high transplant them into rows, putting them about three inches apart in the rows and the rows about one foot apart.

4th. When the plants have become stocky, have a trench dug about one foot deep, put into it equal parts of wood ashes and good rich dressing, and rich, black soil, and work all together with a hoe.

5th. Set the plants about five inches apart, and be sure to straighten out the roots and press the soil firmly about them.

6th. Sprinkle them enough to keep them fresh until they are firm in their places, and then give them all the water you have a mind to, the more the better.

8th. When they have made growth enough to cause the branches to lie over, hill up enough to hold the stalks erect. Continue the hilling process at intervals of two weeks, all summer, being careful to do it when the weather is dry, and in the afternoon when the dew is off. Be sure, when hilling, to hold the stalks together, to prevent the soil from getting into the heart of the plant.

9th. Such portion as you wish for early celery bank to the top by the first of September; for winter use bank to the top from the first to the middle of October.

I think by following these instructions almost any one can raise celery fit for a king, and when we get the varicties called White Plume and Chemin's introduced here, which need no banking, I think we can raise celery fit for the queen.—Mrs. C. H. Root, in Vick's Magazine.

GARDEN PESTS.

THE CABBAGE FLEA

is the first that I will name on the list. All persons that have attempted to grow early cabbage or turnip plants for early use, and sowed the seed in some warm sunny place, have found that as soon as the plants were up they would be covered with little hungry creatures that would soon destroy every plant in sight, if left alone in its work of destruction. The remedy is this: As soon as a plant is seen to break the ground, sift on to the plot sown, fine sulphur which can be procured at any of the stores. It will not injure the tenderest plant, and should be put on in the morning when the plants are wet with dew. A very little will drive the "varmints" away. You may have to repeat the sifting as often as twice ar thrice a week until the plants get some strength.

THE CABBAGE WORM

is one of the worst pests we have, and some resort to the slow and disagreeable task of picking them from the plant; some sprinkle red pepper on them and others black pepper.

The best way I have found is to get some quick growing variety like the Fottler's Drumhead or Jersey Wakefield and set in good soil and when the worms put in an appearance, take warm water with five table-spoonfuls of salt and two table-spoonfuls of saltpetre to a pailful of water, and when all dissolved sprinkle on the plants with the hand.

THE YELLOW CUCUMBER BUGS

can be destroyed by using saltpetre and water, three tablespoonfuls of saltpetre to a pail of water, wetting the ground around the hills every other night for a short time. The bugs go into the ground mostly at night and the saltpetre is destructive to the life of the creature. The same remedy is also good for the maggot that attacks squash vines as soon as they are out of the ground, by working in the roots. It should be applied as soon as the plant is out of the ground as you can not see what they are doing until the plant turns yellow and shows signs of dying. When I plant my cucumbers I always plant some squash or pumpkin seeds around the hill near the cucumber seeds and let both grow until the plants become large and the danger from the bugs is past, then pull out the squashes and let the cucumbers have the ground. The benefit of this is, the squash plant being so much more juicy than the cucumber, the bugs will feed upon them and allow the cucumbers to escape. —Seed-Time and Harvest.

HOW TO MAKE AND SET LIGHTNING RODS.

The extra charge of electricity in the passing cloud wants to get to the earth, and it will effect a passage if it is possible. The air resists it. If there is just enough of even a poor conductor to enable it to overcome the air's resistance, down it will go. 1st. If the partial conductor can not carry it all, it will rend a way, splitting trees, demolishing house timbers, numbing or destroying living bodies. 2d. It will choose the path that offers the least resistance. It will follow a long way round through copper or iron rather than take a short cut through any poorer conductor. 3d. If a sharp point is at the top of a roadway it will come down in a small stream; but if a large ball or blunt end is presented it will come down in a mass. 4th. It will seek the shortest possible route through the resisting air. 5th. If a rod of iron stands on one end of a roof and an electric cloud chances to pass near the other end, and there is some moisture or metal in the building, there may be on the whole a better roadway from the cloud to the earth, than to go through the long air space to reach the rod, and that part of the barn may get the charge. 6th. If in passing through a building the electricity has to cross an air space, near hay or straw, it may develop heat in the air and it will be quite likely to start a fire.

HOW TO SET LIGHTNING RODS.—There is a great deal of nonsense and humbuggery about lightning rods. All that is needed is to furnish the electricity with a better channel than it can find in a barn or house or other building. Run a round or square iron rod, three-quarters to one inch through, or a copper one, five-eighths inch in diameter, down in the earth where it is always moist and up on the outside of the building to a few feet above its highest point, and the electricity will always follow that rod. If the top of the rod terminates in one or two, or better three sharp points, kept bright by silvering or nickeling (not absolutely necessary), the electricity will come down so quickly that it will never be perceived. A galvanized iron rod (that is one coated with tin or zinc), will last longer, because it will not rust.—Orange Judd, in American Agriculturist.

SOME observant genius has calculated that in the United States there is one cow to every four people. It is believed the same ratio exists in fashionable society—there being a calf to every four young men.

"I'M going to board," was what the log remarked on entering the saw mill.

The lightning-rod men have a new dodge. They are as affable as ever, and if possible will "deceive the very elect." They agree to rod a building for a certain price, say $25, promising further that if the bill exceeds that figure they will forfeit $5. This certainly looks fair enough, and they are allowed to proceed. When the rod is up they foot up the bill and find it amounts to $40, $50, or any other conveniently good-sized price. "But hold on," says the purchaser, "you agreed to forfeit $5 if the bill was more than $25." "Certainly," says the man of electric parts, "and now you see I deduct $5 from the $50, leaving you just $45 to pay." And then the swindled party sees the game and planks down the cash, wondering why the fool-killer hasn't been around before.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on MaSONRY. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Baln. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Discussion on Secret Societies. Between Elder M. S Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen. $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the ChrisTIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association. 25c. each, per doz. $1.50.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2 00

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

IN BRIEF.

With over 18,000,000 bushels of grain in store in Chicago there still lie idle in the river vessels with a capacity of 700,000 bushels—a fact almost without precedent in the history of lake navigation in May.

The Bloomington, Ill., Leader, May 6, says a lady of that city has twice presented her husband with twins, once with triplets, and has just capped the climax by giving birth to four healthy children, which she is now nursing. The case is creating considerable interest particularly among the gentle sex, who generally concede that all previous records are smashed.

In the Senate gallery the other day a nice old lady asked the gentleman who sat beside her to point out Senator Butler of South Carolina. "I want to see the man who killed so many colored people at Hamburg," she said. The gentleman happened to be a Southern man, and with bitter irony he pointed out the venerable Senator Hoar of Massachusetts. The old lady looked seriously at him for a moment, and then remarked: "I might have known it; there's murder in every lineament of his face."

The death of a clown in a circus ring, with the audience innocently laughing at his dying struggles, is sufficiently shocking, but like most things has its parallel. Many years ago a famous English diver gave exhibitions. He used to climb a tall spar or flag pole, and dive off the top of it, and before taking the leap he was in the habit of giving a representation of hanging with a noosed rope. One day, however, the noose slipped round behind his ear, and he could not liberate himself. And so he strangled to death there at the top of the pole, the last sounds in his dying ear being the cheers of the crowds who were applauding the wonderful faithfulness of his acting.

A Philadelphian sent a postal card to his sister in Canada on which he had written 644 words. She answered with 714 words. Not to be outdone he crowded in 1,003, which brought an answer with 1,526 words, spelled out in full and written plain enough to be easily read by persons of ordinary sight. He thinks he will send her a new spring bonnet and call it square.

A gentleman met an uncertain acquaintance, who said: "I'm a little short, and should like to ask you a little conundrum in mental arithmetic." "Proceed," replied the gentleman. "Well," said the short man, "suppose you had $10 in your pocket, and I should ask you for $5, how much would remain?" "Ten dollars," was the prompt reply.

A little boy in one of the city German schools, while engaged in the delightful exercise of defining words, a few weeks ago, made a mistake which was not at all a mistake. He said: "A demagogue is a vessel that holds beer, wine, gin, whisky, or any other intoxicating liquor." He was probably thinking of demijohn, but he hit the truth just the same.

The clock on the Parliament Houses in London is the largest in the world. The four dials are each twenty-two feet in diameter, and at each half-minute the minute hand moves forward about seven inches. The clock runs eight days and a half; and the pendulum is nineteen feet long. The bell on which the hours are struck weighs fourteen tons (of 2,240 pounds), and the hammer more than five hundred pounds.

The largest oleander tree in Florida, or probably anywhere else, is on Mr. Packwood's place, at Spanish Town. It covers a space of ground thirty-six feet in diameter; from the ground to the tip of the topmost limb is twenty-five feet; at the surface of the ground the trunk is divided into twenty or twenty-five separate stems, the group being at least five feet through, and one single stem is, by actual measurement, fourteen inches thick.

Hunt upon your map the Straits of Magellan; look at the mountains hanging over; imagine the point of rock that leans the farthest out, and think of a barrel hung by a heavy chain swinging there. That is a postoffice! The postmaster doesn't stay up there to deliver the mails, and no postman unlocks it; in fact, it has no key. Yet it is a grand old postoffice. Ships coming along that way stop and fish out packages of precious letters tha have been dropped therein; see if the can find any that want to travel their way; and if so, they take them on; in their place they leave a package which wants to go in another direction, and some day a ship comes along, studies the direction of that package, says: "Ah, I can take that," and away she sails. And the barrel swings, doing its duty day by day without being watched, sending joy to many hearts.—Ex.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—Secretary-of State Frelinghuysen has issued a proclamation, by order of the President, restoring to the public domain 307,000 acres of land in New Mexico granted on certain conditions to the Jicailla and Apache Indians. The red men had refused to comply with the conditions on which the grant was made.

—The Pension bill as reported from the Appropriations Committee of the House reduces the amount of the unexpended balance to be appropriated for the coming year from $84,000,000 to $66,000,000, and strikes out the provision allowing pension agents 10 per cent on claims.

—Morgan, of Alabama, offered a resolution in the Senate directing the Finance Committee of that body to inquire into the causes of the bank failures in New York city. The resolution went over under the rule.

—A Washington dispatch announces the passage in the Senate of the bill loaning $1,000,000 to the New Orleans Exhibition. The bill had already passed the House.

—Thursday the United States Senate passed the House bill to aid the New Orleans Exposition by a loan of $1,000,000. It now goes to the President for his signature.

—Wednesday Mr. Logan, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably a bill to place General Grant on the retired list. Mr. Logan asked that the bill be put at once upon its passage. Unanimous consent was given, and the bill was at once read a third time, and passed without debate. The bill provides that "in recognition of the distinguished services rendered the United States, General U. S. Grant, late General of the army, be placed on the retired list, with the rank and full pay of General of the army." The annual pay will amount to about $19,000.

COUNTRY.

—Justice Harlan, of Kentucky, of the United States Supreme Court is in Chicago to hear cases in the U. S. District court. The hotels being all engaged by delegates for the nominating conventions, he ordered a room in the post-office building fitted up. Judge Harlan's was the single negative vote against the Civil Rights bill decision.

—The Exposition building in this city, which has been prepared for the Musical Festival next week and the National Conventions, has been arranged to seat about 9,500 people.

—Health Commissioner DeWolf produces statistics to show that Chicago has the lowest death-rate of any city in the world, being 19.55 per 1,000. This is reckoning the population at 580,000. Chicago has now over 600,000 inhabitants, and this will still further reduce the rate.

—Saturday afternoon, May 10th, the Southern Pennsylvania tunnel under the Alleghanies at Dexter's Gap, caved in, killing two workman instantly, and mortally wounding Superintendent White and three others.

—By collision between freight and gravel trains on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, near Connellsville, Pa., Wednesday, fourteen laborers were killed and twelve injured, some of the victims being roasted to death.

—A hurricane, accompanied by torrents of rain, prevailed Tuesday night in Jackson county, West Virginia. The rushing streams swept away fences, outhouses, and in some instances dwellings. At Frankland, Mrs. Collins and her two children were drowned.

—The officers of the New England Tobacco Grower's Association have inaugurated a movement to secure the repeal of all internal revenue taxes on tobacco. The growers and packers in the trade throughout the country are expected to unite in its favor.

—The special Grand Jury to investigate the riot reported at Cincinnati last week Monday, returned fifty-four indictments, including one against T. C. Campbell, the criminal lawyer, and another against the deputy sheriff for playing cards for money with members of the Berner jury.

—The funeral of Charles O'Conor, the celebrated lawyer, took place Friday from the Roman Catholic Cathedral at New York. Ex-Senator Conkling, William M. Evarts, Benjamin H. Bristow, Mgr. Capel, and the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix were among the hundreds of prominent men in attendance.

—Four boys, of 11 and 12 years, were found late Friday night encamped on a farm two miles west of Milwaukee, having started out armed to the teeth with pistols and knives to kill Indians and buffaloes, as they put it. Their parents missed them at supper time and search was instituted, the camp stormed, and the would-be-frontiersmen made prisoners by their fathers.

—The Papachoag Mill, near Worcester, Mass., burned to the ground Thursday night, causing a loss of $150,000. Several of the employes jumped from the windows, some being fatally hurt. It is feared that bodies will be found in the ruins.

—For use in case of necessity, $8,000,000 in legal tenders was shipped from Washington Saturday to the Assistant Treasurer at New York.

—At Water Valley, Miss., Saturday, some persons emptied a bucket of tar over a Mormon elder's head. In that region the Mormons are making many proselytes among the lower classes.

—A man named Boynton is digging for diamonds near Waukesha, Wisconsin, and is said to have found two in the gravel strata last week. Such crowds have been attracted to the spot that he has been compelled to build a high fence around the entire claim to keep them away.

—The Malagassy Government offers France £1,000,000 indemnity on condition that the latter renounce all claims to territory in Madagascar.

—The failure of the firm of Grant and Ward and of the Marine Bank in New York was followed last Wednesday by that of the Metropolitan National Bank, and half a dozen private firms, some of them of long standing and good credit. Money was so scarce that the rate of one per cent per day was offered in some cases. The banks held a meeting and agreed to stand by each other to prevent a panic. Loans were made to the Metropolitan so that it resumed business Thursday, but at the close of business the failure of Fisk and Hatch was announced. The prominence of this firm as dealers in government bonds almost brought on a panic, but prompt action on the part of the banks restored confidence and few failures were reported during the rest of the week. Reckless speculation in stocks is at the bottom of this crisis.

FOREIGN.

—Emperor William has accepted the resignation of Prince Bismarck from the Presidency of the Cabinet, and has appointed as his successor Boetlicher, Prussian Minister of State.

—Contributions for the relief of General Gordon continue to pour in from all sources. The people, who idolize Gordon, are tired of waiting for government action and are anxious to contribute money to some one in the hope that some means may be found when the sum becomes large enough to put it to practical use. The money comes from all classes of the people, and much of it is sent anonymously, so that it will be impossible to return it, even if no practical plan for employing it according to the desires of the givers can be devised.

—Osman Digna has been raiding tribes in Egypt friendly to the English, killing men and carrying off women and cattle. The despoiled Arabs can raise 6,000 men, and will go on the war path.

—Baker Pasha, for twenty years an exile from England, arrived in London last week and was loudly cheered by the people for his gallant work in Egypt. He was wounded at Tokar March 1st. Col. Baker's offence, which insured his banishment, was assaulting a young woman on a railway train.

—George Anderson, an advanced Liberal member of the British Commons, has given notice that he would shortly make a motion to condemn the existence of the House of Lords.

Joseph Cook spoke Sabbath morning and evening in Dr. Goodwin's pulpit, First Congregational church, Chicago. The man and his themes made the day a notable one for the church and audience. He struck the Mormon abominatiou a resounding blow in the forenoon, and in the evening he spoke on "Christ and New Creeds; or Sound and Unsound Congregationalism," from the text, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free. If the Son therefore shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." He commended Congregationalism for its great educational work in colleges and theological seminaries, and for giving to mankind such names as Edwards, Finney and Moody. But the "new departure" will rob the denomination of its glory, while the new creed will untwist the strong rope of a true Gospel in which is its power to drag men from the wreck of human life to Christ the rock. Men may practice the new creed and die unrepentant, and it will not do to cut loose from a creed that answers the question What must I do to be saved. Mr. Cook stands by his Tremont Temple speech and will not be driven from Congregationalism by attack and vituperation of papers that falsely stand for the churches of that name.

The most thrilling incident of the Republican convention of 1880 was when the resolution presented by Conkling for the purpose of binding the delegates to support the nomination of the majority and ostracising any who would not, was about to be carried through fear of offending that powerful leader, and was withstood by a single man, Alexander Campbell, of West Virginia who had the moral courage to stand up and nobly protest in the name of truth and honor against such a gag-rule. That mauly speech should have forever shamed such coercive policy out of American politics. The Republicans have abandoned it. In New York city under Gen. Arthur's management it was next to impossible for a Republican to vote unless he belonged to some party, club, or association. Now the "Independents" are welcome in nominating conventions. But it is left to the Lever of this city known as the Prohibition party organ, to re-assert this odious rule. It affirms that no temperance man from Kansas or Iowa who is not pledged to the Prohibition-Home-Protection party can have a seat in the Pittsburgh convention—not even a "Prohibition reform party man as such." Only delegates "who come representing constituencies pledged to vote the ticket nominated by that convention" will the Lever tolerate. "The one question which the convention will ask before admitting the delegate will be this: 'Will your constituents put an electoral ticket into the field and support the nominees of this convention heartily?'" This reads as if the Good Templar, grip-and-password end of the Lever has the most weight on it, and that the shibboleths of the lodge will be more acceptable than the best temperance record. The Lever is attempting to raise a temperance vote with the short arm on the wrong side of the fulcrum.

The report of specie movements must always be taken into consideration in a time of financial stress. Thus a factor in the New York trouble is in the $41,807,055 exported since January 1st, against $6,121,810 for the same period last year. This means large purchases of foreign luxuries which some of our stock gamblers must now forego for a time. The New York panic is quiet, but many fear it is uot over. Some of the best railway stocks are falling still, and the losses have been very heavy. The losses of General Grant's firm are put down at $14,500,000. Russel Sage loses $6,000,000; John C. Euo, $5,000,000; Seney, $2,000,000, etc., etc. These figures may be regarded as partly fictitious for they are in the language of the stock market. Several of the manipulators, as Ward of General Grant's firm, Fish of the Marine Bank and Eno are under arrest. Their conviction would be something new in the history of Wall Street gambling; but it is not impossible that there is conscience enough left there to cast out the victims of reckless speculation. It is at least a lesson to thousands who have been guilty of stock gambling that a reckoning day will come at last to the shrewdest.

Here and there appear promises that the good sense of people is not altogether carried away by the rage for races and ball games on the Sabbath, sparring matches and prize-fights. Judge Handly of Lackawana county, Pa., has ordered indictmeuts to be prepared against every body who witnessed a fight near Scranton a few days ago. As the penalty for every looker-on is $500 fine and a year's imprisonment and a large number of well-reputed people were in the crowd the determination of the judge has produced a wholesome sensation. The city authorities of Columbus and Indianapolis have also been loudly called upon to proceed against base-ball players for Sabbath desecration. The agitation in Chicago over the Suuday racing continues. Hesing, once political leader of the Germans, who went down in disgrace under the "whisky ring" prosecutions, is out with a reply to Dr. Kittredge, but his raving against a Puritanical Sabbath has little effect outside the saloons and infidel clubs. Few, however, believe that the city authorities will ever interfere to preveut the crime against law and the good order of Chicago.

The celebrated English advocate of Romanism whose errand of making wealthy proselytes was more successful in England than with us, fiud that to be a fisher of money-bags instead of men may bring a Romish prelate into trouble uow as well as in the time of Wolsey. The Lutheran Standard remarks upon the latest developments: "As was expected the slick Monsignor Capel, the great Romish perverter, who is at present 'honoring' America with his presence and has succeeded in drawing considerable attention to himself, turns out to have a record that is anything but honorable. When he arrived in America, Dr. Fulton, of Brooklyu, the sterling foe of Romanism, who was acquainted with the ups and downs of Capel's checkered career, warned against this adventurer. Dr. Nevin, who has for many years been rector of the American chapel in Rome, and has had sufficient opportunities to get some inside views of the church of errors whose head is in that city, fully confirms the charges of Dr. Fulton. He says that Capel's trip to America is wholly owing to the fact that he had to leave Europe in order to avoid exposure of a most damaging kind. Neither in Rome in the Vatican, nor in London in the arch-episcopal palace, do they want to have anything to do with him. During his last visit to Rome he was not permitted to preach or to read mass. When a number of English Roman Catholics asked Cardinal Manning concerning the reason of this, he answered that Capel's reputation was of such a character that no respectable family would have anything to do with him. This 'religious snob,' as the Century correctly dubbed him, has probably seen the end of his usefulness in America. Those who petted and courted him when he first arrived, are now heartily sorry for their folly."

CHURCHES AND NATIONS: THEIR BACKSLIDINGS AND OPPORTUNITIES.

BY REV. GEORGE B. CHEEVER. D.D.

[By the kindness of Rev. H. T. Cheever of Worcester, we are permitted to print the following and another paper to come from the recent private correspondence of his brother, Rev. Dr. George B. Cheever of Englewood, N. J. Such notes and criticisms are of enhanced value because of their perfect freedom and naturalness, as the unstudied mental overflow of an hour of familiar pen-and-ink communion from one whose age, experience and scholarship give weight and dignity to all his written words.]

With what touches and stings of deserved satire ought I to note the loose philosophy and speculative theology, rolling in such waves of accepted and endorsed Rationalism clear across the Atlantic? And what can be said or thought as to the caving in of the integrity of the old South Church in Boston? Or who could have supposed such a change possible after the occupancy of that pulpit with such fervent faithfulness to Christ and his Word as marked the ministry of Dr. Wisner? I preached by his invitation, one of my earliest sermons in his pulpit, nearly or quite fifty years ago, on the text, Be sure your sin will find you out. Old Doctor Beecher was then preaching in the full power of his commanding genius and eloquence, helping to turn back the tide of Unitarian defection from the orthodox faith; and blessed outpourings of the Spirit atteuded his preaching.

Jeremiah Evarts was then at his post as one of God's foremost gap-men, laboring in Christ's name to keep our couutry aud government from the dreadful crime into which we were plunging, and did plunge over head and ears in the violation of all the most sacred treaties with the Georgia Indians under which any government or people on earth ever bound themselves to honesty, justice and benevoleuce. I remember him, seated in his cozy little study, correcting some of the proof-sheets of his masterly Defence of our Christian obligations, and of the Indian titles to their landed heritage from God, of which we were so recklessly robbing them. As he wrote and conversed on the subject, he wept, overcome as he was by his manly scnse of grief and mortification at the wrong we were perpetrating. The people of Boston ought ere this to have erected a monument in their city as a tribute of gratitude and admiration of his ardor in behalf of our national justice and integrity, and of the rights of the Indiau tribes so dishonestly sacrificed.

Since his day what stupendous events and demonstrations have been crowded into a quarter of a century! And what an amazing deliverance of our nation from absolute destruction through the proposed and guaranteed perpetuity of slavery! No wonder was it that after nearly a ceutury of such slave-holding disgrace and injustice, we should have been left to the worship of a Constitutiou from the letter of which God and his claims were exorcised, notwithstanding the introductory appeals to the Almighty for the justice of our cause in the Declaration of Independence. Then notwithstanding our confessed dependence upon the Divine goodness for our liberty achieved (remember Dr. Franklin's public proposal for prayer in the Continental Congress) it was easy to maintain a conscientious obligation to the worship of the Dagon of slavery instead of God, and to defer the expulsion of that demon, until God himself put the alternative before us. Let the slaves go free or your Union to perdition. Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. If Baal be God, serve him, and die. But if the Lord be God, and his Word your Constitution, say so, and learn to live by every Word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God! Live honestly and justly, and not by robbery of the poor and needy, and not by adulteration of God's gifts, oleomargerine instead of "the butter of kine, the milk of sheep, the kidneys of wheat and the pure blood of the grape." Instead of which men left to their own counsels choose to perish by manufactured poisons, swine's flesh, trichinæ and delirium tremens: the pure blood of the grape turned into drunkenness and sensuality, and the best gifts of God for man's discipline and self-restraint in the grateful use thereof without abuse, being made the surest agents of perdition.

What a blessed thing it is that all the learning a man or a nation really needs is confined to one book, the Book of God! And what a grace and privilege for a man to be the man of only one book as Jesus Christ was; or for a nation to be in the same exclusive discipline as for a season the Hebrew nation was, and to try out that experiment to the full in the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. It seems to me that the British nation and government are most wantonly wasting the grandest offer of the possibility of a universal empire of freedom and truth ever given to any people on earth. What an experiment of glory in the Oriental world they are throwing away! What gifts of genius, what treasures of science, what materials and means for sudden inter-communication, what masses of living forces, courage, character, power, beyond any conception of previous ages, under generals with the banner of faith in Christ and obedience to his gospel of love, unrolled in the sight of hundreds of millions of the followers of the False Prophet! And God by his providence pushing on and pressing the one foremost professedly Christian nation in the world to a palpable necessity of openly declaring Christ and the supremacy of his kingdom, and the free proclamation of his Word, as the one law and condition of peace, prosperity and freedom; or, in its continued violation, the certainty of a hell on earth and in eternity.

O what a gift of God to a nation, a government, a church, the love of the truth as it is in Jesus, to make his love universal, his name glorious; to fulfill the grand Messianic Psalms from the 72d and 81st to the 102d. But now almost the whole successive history from Paul to our times, with its vast lessons both of warnings and encouragement in being dephlogisticated of its spiritual certainties, and rendered nearly worthless by an anti-Scriptural, rationalistic criticism, anti-supernatural, anti-spiritual, rushing over the earth like the back setting of earthquake waves, carrying with them into the open gulfs the remains of desolated cities, destroyed in their own worldliness and unbelief, their memorials perishing with them.

What shall we say to these things when we read concerning a long line of human generations that God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned who believed not the truth but had pleasure in an unrighteousness? Is God unrighteous that taketh vengeance? God forbid, for then how shall God judge the world? And if he judge not the world and recompense not the righteous and the wicked, what is to become of his government and kingdom? And what must be the consequence of such falsifications of the life, lessons, sufferings, death, resurrection, and enthronement of the Divine Redeemer, demonstrating to the whole universe of God the infinite value of the soul, the infinite terror of its perdition, the infinite love of the Son of God to dying sinners? How forever "beyond compare" that wondrous love!

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"I am going to hear the Ruggles street church quartette," was remarked one beautiful Easter Sunday by a member of a certain little country sanctuary where they had no quartette, or indeed any special attraction for novelty-seeking worshipers. As the congregation was unusually thin, it is but fair to presume that numbers of others if they did not "go to hear the Ruggles street church quartette" went to hear or see something else among the many Easter day attractions advertised in the city dailies. How much their thoughts while thus gratifying their æsthetic tastes with beautiful flowers and exquisite music lingered about the scenes of the resurrection; how many new resolves they made to live henceforth no more to themselves, but to him "who was dead and is alive forevermore," are questions between their own souls and God. But it is at least one unhappy result of this modern tendency to swing Romeward that so many Puritan churches should be made, though only for one day in the year, a stage for theatrical displays as antagonistic to the spirit of a pure Gospel, as they are in reality subversive of those very truths which that day is intended especially to commemorate. The early Christians of the Apostolic age knew a more excellent way. To them every Lord's day was an Easter Sunday whose first beams as they dawned over imperial Rome, or vine-clad Smyrna, or the blue waters of the Ægean Sea spoke of that empty tomb in the garden of Joseph, and bore to their souls the glad message of the waiting angels,—"He is not here; he is risen."

But to go back to the remark at the head of this article, and the thoughts to which it gave rise. What has bewitched so large a part of the Protestant church into drawing this fine distinction between the different parts of worship?—into delegating its service of song to the careless, the worldly, the irreligious, while demanding that the spoken word should fall only from lips consecrated by altar fire? Where are we told that prayer is more sacred than praise?—that one who speaks a word in the ears of Infinite Majesty must put his shoes from off his feet and tread softly for he is on holy ground, but can be as vain and trifling, and worldly-minded as he chooses, provided he only sings it instead? Quartettes and fashionable choirs!—what does it all amount to in plain English but simply hiring the devil to worship for us? No doubt he would be very glad to do the praying and preaching too. And why would it be any worse to hire a skillful elocutionist—possibly a play-actor—to read prayers with graceful and appropriate inflections, than to hire a professional vocalist possibly an opera singer—to do us the same service—in another line?

Yet why must the church "go down to Egypt for help" in her singing, any more than in her preaching and her praying? Her paths have ever blossomed with song from the majestic hymns of the early church to the grand chorals of Luther, and the sweet spiritual strains of the Wesleys. Her seasons of greatest power have always been the times when congregational singing was the rule and not the exception; when the laborer and the artisan sweetened toil with the "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" learned in the sanctuary; when song was service, ministration, worship;—as the period of her greatest declension has just as invariably been when music ceased to be a vital, living agency to touch and inspire and convert, and was mummified into a splendid soulless idol. Have we never noticed with what peculiar tenderness and sweetness the communion hymn always rises in the air? or how full of music are revival hymns when the voices of a whole congregation join in? how all asperities and harshness of individual tones are smoothed and softened into an Indian summer of harmony? Then why the need of thus burning strange incense before the Lord?

When will our Protestant Zion shake off the dust of her captivity and put on her beautiful garments, and no longer hire uncircumcised and unclean lips to do her praising for her? When the Spirit of the Lord has purged her from all union with the world and its false worships; when she drops the subtle fleshly wisdom they have taught her of seeking to attract rather than convert; then and not till then will she recover her old long lost heritage of song, and Jerusalem be once more "a praise in the earth."

A DEFENSE.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

For several days the writer has been brooding, angry, like a chained mastiff, who sees his master insulted, his property stolen, and the iron will not snap nor the staple give way.

Now wherefore?

Last Saturday a friend handed me the Evening Journal, calling my attention to a short editorial on our convention of June 20th containing two statements—that the American party was exclusively composed of men who had in their heads only room for one idea, and that the platform consisted of "opposition to secret societies." I was angry, and my friend was angry. That a party political paper should belittle its enemies and misstate their principles was indeed no new thing, but is not common to utter deliberate and barefaced falsehood. If the men composing the American party have in their heads only room for one idea, it is surely a comprehensive one, embracing all that enlightened Christian patriotism sees necessary to save and bless the nation, and if our platform consists of only one plank, "opposition to secret societies," that must surely be understood to mean opposition to all the hidden ways of the devil.

My friend asked me if I would not reply to this bivalve lie, in a short article for the Tribune, and I said Yes. A short time after this I took up the Tribune and glancing through its columns found a lengthy editorial on the Pope's letter against the Freemasons. With much interest I perused it, and when I had finished the article laid it down with a sort of shiver of disgust. Write against Freemasonry for the Tribune, I thought! I might as well write an article to the devil against sin.

After belaboring the old man of Rome for his misstatements and inconsistencies, for which there was good cause, (For who can doubt that if the Masons would bow to the Confessional and bring their corn to the Roman mill, all would be well with his Holiness? Arguments from such a source can have no weight with any intelligent Protestant mind, to whom the quarrel of the Roman church and the lodge is as snarling of two ravening wolves over a carcass)—after thus belaboring, we say, the old man of Rome, the Tribune proceeded to one of the most fulsome laudations of the lodge that I have seen for many a day; making this statement, that whatever the Freemasons had been in the past, they were now a moral and benevolent organization, combining the social advantages of the club with the higher privileges of a benevolent society, and scouting the idea as absurd that they interfered with the administration of law, politics, or any of the common rights of men. It was certainly wise in the Tribune to premise its laudation with, "whatever they might have been," for in that glance backward there certainly was much to be seen. Conspiracies in Europe that shook thrones and destroyed the old, but built not up a nobler new. In this country a murdered Morgan, and the whole power of the law defied when it was sought to bring the murderers to justice; equiping the Border Ruffians for their bloody work in Kansas; making more strong the slave-power, and fanning, as with a bellows from the bottomless pit, the flames of disloyalty till the whole nation was wrapped in the mighty conflagration of civil war—truly it was well in the Tribune to say "whatever they may have been."

But what are they to-day? and wherein have they reformed? These are questions which the Tribune should surely have answered. Do they claim to have reformed? Do they ever admit that they have ever erred? Certainly not to my knowledge. To-day five hundred thousand is truly a goodly army, when we consider that every man of this vast host like the soldiers of Alexander must, according to the Tribune's showing, be noble as a senator. What is this mighty power doing? What missions have this "quasi-religious organization" founded? What charitable institutions do they sustain? According to the Tribune the land is groaning under the weight of vast monopolies that rob the people. What trumpet blast has the lodge ever sounded against them? Our State legislatures have become so corrupt, this our highest national legislative body, chosen by them, has been fitly and forcibly named by this same Tribune, "The American House of Lords," and against this great evil the Masonic fraternity has been like an old cur, dumb and toothless. So imperfect has become the administration of law that every year, criminals the most ferocious, are turned loose like wild beasts to prey upon society, the whole press of the country confesses this, and everybody knows it. Yet what has this mighty army done to uphold justice, and protect society? From the days of Morgan down through the case of Helen Slade in our own Illinois, to that horrible wife murderer of Michigan, yet so recent, "through ways that have been dark and slippery with blood," has not the whole history of Masonry been a conspiracy against civil government and the equal rights of man?

Does not the whole multitude of the uninitiated in every land where this precious "quasi-religious society" has an existence, believe, from bitter experience and constant observation that it does interfere with civil government and the rights of man, almost as universally as they believe in civil government itself? While over the whole land as if upheaved by the eruptions of an infernal crater, rolls the tidal wave of intemperance, sweeping health, reputations, hopes, happiness, bodies and souls, into that vast whirlpool that like hell and the grave is never full But the craft still goes from labor to refreshment, and Albert Pike swings around his illuminating circle encumbered with hampers of proof brandy. Where is the reformation? In changing a few unimportant words; saying Jachin and Boaz instead of Boaz and Jachin, in order that they may say that Freemasonry has not been revealed, and hug the delusion that they don't lie? This and such like contemptible quibbles! Thus far has their reformations gone and no farther. As well reform a Bengal tiger by cutting off half an inch from the end of his tail, while claws, teeth, and tiger heart remain unaltered.

Can anything that is essentially bad be reformed? Could the degenerate human heart be reformed? or was it necessary to introduce a new creation? Has the Roman church been reformed, or does it still remain the same unalterable foe of progress—with such power as it has,—burning Bibles in Spain with the same cruel spirit of persecution as when it passed a sentence of death upon a whole nation, condemning three millions of people for their love of God's Word and the exercise of their own judgments? Was slavery made anything but a curse by all the patching and reforming it received from 1820 to 1860? Has this monster vice of intemperance, by all the high license and moral restriction with which good but mistaken men have sought to surround it, been made anything but a trap-door to perdition? And shall this power that walks in darkness, that says to the preacher, You shall not speak; to the judge, Thou shalt not do justice; and to the citizen, Thou shalt respect my laws when they conflict with those of the state,—shall this vile, abominable thing that is called the lodge, proud as Lucifer, hypocritical as a Pharisee, false as Judas, and cruel as Phillip the II. be reformed? No, never. It is written, "Every plant that my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." This is its death sentence sure to be executed in time.

Carlyle in his French Revolution says that this one thing the people held to, that a lie was unbelievable and Masonry with its horrible and blasphemous oaths; its old wives fables, of Jubelo, Jubela, and Jubolum; its equal fraternity; its ladder of thirty rounds, the topmost round farthest from heaven; its passing as the handmaid of religion, and its continuous and wicked persecution of those who oppose it, is so stupendous a lie that no man with his eyes open can believe it.

Let every Christian to whom God has given light on the subject labor to deliver God's church from her present bondage. Let all true citizens who see our nation's danger from the dark plottings of this "invisible empire," rally for the mighty work of deliverance before effort becomes too late, and from Maine to California send such a delegation to Chicago that the old serpent shall see the seed of the woman are not all asleep, and that the rod is already lifted that shall bruise his head, should he lift it ever so threateningly, or hide it with a thousand wiles.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—Throw down the altar of Baal.

MY BRETHREN:—Once upon a time there was a people who, just like ourselves, had forgotten the source of all the blessings of freedom and independence that had been derived to them through a God-given religion, and foolishly went to work, just as we have done, to set up lodges (which are very ancient) for the worship of Baal. Under this worpshi everybody did pretty much as he pleased, committing the full equivalents of lynching, back-pay grabbing, Ku-Kluxing, Mormonizing, Credit Mobiiler swindling, court-house mobbing, dynamiting, false-coining, post-office swindling, wife shooting, divorcing, bankrupting, pistoling, pension-getting, jobbing, murdering, robbing, etc. No one was held to account for rebellion, for stealing railroads, for robbing, for breaches of trust, for slugging, for bankruptcy or for anything of the kind; but doubtless they who committed such deeds were looked up to, just as they are with us, as the leaders of society. For, my friends, we know that under lodge-worship Jews, wild Indians, Arabs, deacons, bishops, rum-sellers, whore-masters, horse jockeys, thieves, "good men," gamblers, pirates, etc., etc., all meet "on the same level and part upon the square."

But finally it began to steal through the benighted, hoodwinked minds of those people, that the great evils which they were suffering might possibly be owing to the strange lodge-worship which had been introduced among them. Yet they were very slow to believe it. It took signs, and wonders, and miracles to prove to their stultified intellects that they must "throw down the altar of Baal."

My friends, we all know that President Lincoln was just as popular as ever Gideon was in his day; but with this difference, while both were equally determined not to be kings, the one, viz., Lincoln, left everything to the people to do, while the other, Gideon, left everything to the Lord;—to that Lord in whose name (and not in the name of the people) he had thrown down the altar of Baal. Lincoln gave all the glory to the people, while Gideon gave it all to God;—to the God that had brought the people out of Egypt.

Yet alas! in one sad, unfortunate respect the lives of these popular heroes were only in too full accord. Both were probably overcome by a wicked people, and could not help doing the evil which they did. Lincoln's administration, in his latter days, and in the very extreme of foolishness and perversity, proceeded to re-establish lodge-worship, by charter, at the very seat of government, just as Gideon set up in his city an Ephod, the equivalent of a Grand Army post, which caused the people to go whoring after it, and which became a snare to him and his whole house.

My brethren, are you fully aware that the Constitution which was established under the worship of that God who had brought us out from European bondage, prohibits Congress from enacting any law effecting a religious establishment, and yet, nevertheless, under the popular reign of Lincoln, Congress, by a joint resolution, has established the Masonic religion, or Baal-worship, at the capital of the country? And this religion, the most detestable of all religions, since its practices are secret, and it sanctions intimidation and murder, binds men's consciences by horrid oaths which may destroy the force of those oaths that are administered by the officers of the law, and on which justice depends!

My friends, if besotted with party spirit, which is the worst and most God-defying besottedness that I know of, you still persist in voting for a party that does this, then to what shall I liken you but to a people who, maddened with an insane rage for horse-racing, go out of their city to become lost in that sport, while their city takes fire and burns to ashes, the bells all ringing the alarm in vain?

SO MOTE IT BE!

MAN'S WISDOM INSTEAD OF SCRIPTURE.

[New York Witness.]

The sun is just going down, and hark! from the village below, from the top of one of the houses, I hear a voice which I never fail to recognize—it is the muezzin's call to prayer. To the devout Moslem the roof of a house is as good as the minaret of a mosque. It had a strange, weird effect, heard amid the silence of these mountains. And who shall say that the offering was not as sincere as that which ascends from Christian lands? Who am I to judge the Moslem's prayer? Who can say that in these daily prostrations there is not much of the true spirit of worship, and that the prayers are not heard by Him who is the God and Father of all mankind.—Rev. Dr. Field, in Evangelist.

It is not surprising to find Buddha or Socrates sharing equally with Christ the credit of improving mankind in the opinion of atheists, skeptics, infidels, and free-thinkers; nor to find Christ surpassed by a later prophet in the creeds of Mohammedans or Mormons. Neither are we astonished to find Unitarians offering worship exclusively to the All-Father, or Freemasons carefully shutting out the Son of God from the lodge religion, with which they are so satisfied; nor to find Romanists offering ten prayers to the Virgin for one in the name of Jesus. But it does surprise us to see the editor of the good old evangelical New York Evangelist finding Mohammedan prayers a probable substitute for prayers in the name of Christ. Does the accomplished writer quoted above mean that the Lord's statement, "No man cometh to the Father but by Me," needs to be supplemented by adding that the Mohammedans have another way? Let us beware of weakening in the very least that Scripture, which says, "The only Mediator between God and man, is the Man Christ Jesus;" or that other Scripture, "There is no other name given under Heaven by which we must be saved." The great trouble with the church of Christ now is that many men in the pulpit or editorial chair teach their own speculations and opinions instead of the distinct statements of Scripture.

In these remarks we do not mean to judge those who never heard of Christ, and who, having no law, are a law unto themselves; but prayer to false gods, however sincere, can never be compared with prayer to the true God. And that can only be acceptably offered in the way appointed by God himself, namely, through the Divine Mediator.

WHERE THE POPE JOINS ISSUE WITH FREEMASONRY.

[From Pall Mall Gazette, London.]

The principle of Freemasonry as a system intended to bring men of all creeds on a common platform must be the same everywhere, and that principle is theism. The Masonry Society which dispenses with a belief in the Great Architect of the Universe, whom all alike recognize—"Jehovah, Jove, and Lord"—as being no longer an essential qualification of membership, ceases ipso facto to be a true Masonic body, and forfeits its rights to the name of Freemason and its claims on the brotherhood of Masonry throughout the world. Many continental lodges have done this, either secretly or openly. English Masonry holds no communion with the Grand Orient of France. At the ceremony of initiation in an English lodge the candidate is informed, previous to his taking the oath of obligation, that he will not be required to do or swear anything contrary to his duty as a citizen, his loyalty to his sovereign, or to the tenets of his religion, be that religion what it may. I do not repeat the words textually, but this is honestly their sense, though the plainest declaration may be open to misconstruction. Now when religious duty is brought in it must involve the profession of a religion in some form, and therefore would include the agnostic, to whom all religions are equally true or equally false, and exclude the infidel and atheist. If the essential conditions of the oath were the same everywhere no atheist could honestly and honorably be a Freemason. The Catholic church declares infallibly that there is only one Truth, one Revelation, of which she is the divinely appointed guardian for the benefit of the whole human race. She teaches that those who have never heard of her, that those who have been baptized but brought up to hate her, if they are in good faith and act up to what they honestly believe to be God's will, those in fact, "who, having not the law, are a law unto themselves," belong to the anima ecclesiæ, but not of course to the visible corpus ecclesiæ. This is comprehensible enough. But she will not, she cannot without being false to her divine mission, tolerate error within her own communion. Here is the essential difference; here is where the Catholic church and Freemasonry join issue. The former says: "To belong to me you must profess one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Freemasonry says: "To belong to me you must profess any number of Lords, any kind of belief, and be duly and regularly initiated." The church preaches one creed alone: Freemasonry indifference to all creeds. The church requires a belief in one Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Freemasonry says: "We do not care what or whom you believe in—Christ, Mahommed, Buddha, Mumbo, Jumbo—no matter as long as you hold that there is some supernatural supreme authority, whom for convenience sake we will call the Great Architect of the Universe."

Certainly it is a grand idea, this Masonic one, of embracing all peoples of all tongues, of all beliefs, of all nations under heaven. With us in England it is a vast benefit society, its meetings are associated with convivi ality and benevolent sentiments. So harmless was it generally considered years ago that in O'Connell's time a petition, signed by the Liberator himself and many influential Catholic ecclesiastics and laymen, was ready for presentation to the Pope, begging his Holiness to exempt British Freemasonry from the ban of the church on all secret societies in the same way that it is now exempted by the act of Parliament which deals with Fenianism and kindred associations. But even here, with the Prince of Wales as its Grand Master, Freemasonry is only tolerated, and were individual lodges to misuse their freedom of action they would be first admonished and if recalcitrant suppressed, and this in the interests of loyalty, law and order. No Catholic can honestly belong to a secret society. A lax Catholic might say to himself that English Freemasonry is not a secret society—that is, not the sort of secret society condemned by the church. But until the church excepts this part of Freemasonry by name, the part is included in the whole, and the whole is under the church's anathema. At a Masonic banquet where the forms of Masonry are strictly observed, the chaplain should not mention the name of our Lord when he says grace. To do so would be to offend against the very essence of the Masonic theory. The chaplain, be he Rabbi, Buddhist, or Anglican clergyman, must only return thanks for the "refreshment" to which they have adjourned after their "labor" to the Great Architect of the Universe. It is intelligible, therefore, that a Christian would not feel himself at home in the society of a brotherhood where the mention of the name of Christ is not permitted except as on an equality with Mahommed or Buddha, or as a moral teacher like Socrates or Plato.

A Christian who worshipped in the catacombs and who was ready to suffer martyrdom for this name would not have been contented to hear his Lord spoken of as ranking with the pagan gods, whom he considered demons, or ranked with the most virtuous of pagan philosophers. Of such a society such a Christian would not voluntarily become a member. On certain conditions British Freemasonry might be temporarily exempted by a Pope. But those conditions would strike at the essence of Freemasonry. To what is called "Christian Freemasonry," with its travesty of the solemn of all Christian rites (at least if the description in Carlisle's book be correct), it is impossible to imagine any Christian of any denomination belonging. The last Grand Ecclesiastical Grand Master of English Freemasons is said to have been Cardinal Wolsey; so if Leo XIII wished to make an exception in favor of the Masonic Brotherhood in the United Kingdom he has only to go back to the time of Henry VIII for his precedent, and commission His Eminence Cardinal Manning to open negotiations with his Royal Highness the Grand Master with a view to opening lodges of Catholic Masons, recognized by the church, equally with any other "guilds," to which category of genuine "trade unions" Masons, as working and not merely theoretical Masons, properly belong.

THE POPE AGAINST FREEMASONRY.

We publish this morning a translation of the full text of the papal encyclical against Freemasonry.

The pope assails that secret order, it will be seen, as an essentially unchristian organization, and as a nursery of materialism and of hostility to the church. He treats it as an enemy with which religion can make no terms, and against which the church must war with all the weapons at its command.

Freemasonry, says Pope Leo, aims at the ruin of "the throne, the altar, and the public welfare." "It seeks to overthrow all the religious and social order introduced by Christianity," he says further, "and to build up a new order based on the laws of naturalism." And with Freemasonry he includes all similar secret organizations.

Accordingly, he warns Catholics against such orders, and exhorts bishops and priests to do whatever may be in their power to uproot them and their principles. Some of the individual members of these societies may be blameless, so far as responsibility for the general tone and acts of the orders are concerned, but he urges all such to fly from the contaminating influences about them.

Indeed, the pope charges against Freemasonry that it has bred and fostered the worst social ills and the most deadly religious heresy and infidelity from which the modern world suffers.—N. Y. Sun.

LETTER FROM GREECE.

Andros, Greece, Via Syra, Apr., 24, 1884.

Dear Bro. Kellogg:—We were very much surprised to hear of the death of our dear brother Louis Blanchard. We had heard of his recovery and were so glad and the news of his death came so suddenly to us that we did not know what to say. We send our hearty sympathy to the family and friends of our dear brother. We feel very sorry that Wheaton College lost such a hero of the Christian faith. But we do not know the plans of that great God who knows the end from the beginning and who never does anything wrong in this world to any one.

We promised to write something about our future work. We cannot have any day school, so our work for the present will be to preach as much as we can to the people in our home, in their houses and in any place we are. We do not know if we shall see the day when there will be a church in this island, but what if we sow and another reap, for all who sow do not reap. We do see a change in many things here. The people have given up many superstitions. Also they have begun to see the terrible effects of drunkenness. About three months ago at a panygerie some of the men began to fight and a man was mortally wounded and died after much suffering, leaving a large family of children without any mother. Eighteen men are on trial for his life and all have to go to Syra and be tried and most of them will have to go to prison for many years and some of them for life.

The women especially see the truth of what we say, that "drunkenness is the mother of all evil." As we have said before, these people think that they are orthodox; but when we analyze their religion we find that it is only a form that they have become used to. They have got in the habit of going to church and for this reason they go. They heard from their forefathers that they should not eat meat four times during the year, making 135 days in all and for the rest of the year they must not eat meat on Wednesdays and Fridays. If anybody eats meat during the fast days, it is looked upon as a greater sin than to steal. So you see how many things we have to fight against and take away from their heads before we can put the truth in.

One of the priests, our near neighbor, refused before Easter to give permission to several of our neighbors to take the Lord's Supper. One because he took a false oath and another because he had quarreled with his brother and would not make up with him. This is a new thing and it is encouraging. He has heard us talk about the American churches and how they treat their members.

I have in view to visit the towns and schools in this island and I will try to sell some Bibles. In many places they have heard about me; but they have not seen me yet, so I want to make them a visit. Four colporteurs have visited this island since we came here and the Baptist missionary, Rev. D. Z. Sakellarios expects to visit us again and we hope to have him preach. Perhaps some will come to hear him, whereas they would not come to hear me. Yours in Christ,

A. D. Zaraphonithes.

LETTER FROM DR. NATHAN BROWN, YOKOHAMA, JAPAN.

[In reply to a request for contributions for the Cynosure, Dr. Brown pleads the impossibility of undertaking more work than now on his hands and heart; but from the tone of cordial sympathy in which he writes we are encouraged to hope that he may, when more at leisure, write for our columns.—Ed.]

There is no paper that I read with more interest than the Cynosure on all subjects connected with its special mission—one of the most important as I conceive that has occupied attention in our land during the present century. When I was at home I considered it next in magnitude to that of slavery—and did what I could to expose it. The Cynosure makes all those fearful revelations fresh, and shows that if not by deeds as glaring, yet it is in its workings just as baleful and demoralizing as it was at the time of the Morgan murder.

I heartily rejoice to hear that you are to have your headquarters at Washington—and that you begin under such favorable auspices—and hope that if not in 1884, yet in 1888 your candidates may be elected. Your Vice Presidential candidate, John A. Conant, was well known to me in my youthful days—a more thoroughly honest, consistent, uncompromisingly faithful advocate of truth and right I have never seen.

I send you a short paper from the records of a late missionary conference, from which you will see something of the difficulties of our work. May the Lord bless and prosper yourself and the cause you serve.

Yours very sincerely,

Nathan Brown.

Reform News.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Wenona, Ill., May 16th.

After leaving Monmouth on the 14th inst. I called at Altona, where I found a few interested, but too busy either in church work, politics, farming or merchandizing to give attention to any matter of less absorbing interest. Our friend Donald McIntosh lives three miles in the country and my time was too limited to give him a call. Rev. Abrahamson expressed sympathy for the anti-lodge cause and tendered the use of his fine audience room for lectures, when the time shall be more propitious. J. F. Hubbell, Esq., also favors lectures, but hesitates about leaving the Republican party, with which he has been long and actively connected. Of course he does not read the Cynosure or he would have decided this question long ago. I failed to get his subscription, either for the Cynosure or American, but am not without hope in his case. He was sorry to learn that Col. C. E. Carr, of Galesburg, had been caught on the I. O. O. F. hook, as he entertained for him a warm friendship. In these regrets I shared fully, for it is sad indeed to find a man of ability and especially a personal friend who has bartered his manhood and freedom for senseless secrets and an unholy influence, over the coffin and skeleton of the I. O. O. F. farce of initiation.

LOSTANT.

April 17.—At Kewanee a companion of other days, whom I had not met for more than thirty years, came on the train. Hearing Hon. H. G. Little of Grinnell, Iowa, with whom I was conversing, mention my name, he made himself known and we were soon reviewing old times and recalling old friends. He had gone far down in the degrees and held offices and performed services low down in the "Secret Empire." He had been a soldier during the war, and sheriff and commissioner in his county at different times, and was in a position to give "important tidings from the Grand Master." Having at one time been a "brother" in the same lodge with my two brothers-in-law and not aware of my views, he was quite ready to converse on the beauties and benefits of Masonry. As the conversation progressed I related an incident given me by a mutual acquaintance, which confirmed some claims he had made for the helpfulness of Masonry when a brother is in a tight place.

While in the service, Daniel Wilber was in charge of a supply train of army stores. Going through a narrow mountain pass the train was attacked by a band of rebels. Wilber's men were defending themselves, and several had been killed on both sides. The robbers got possession and were plundering the wagons when the captain of the band rode up to Wilber, demanded his purse and wanted to know what he meant by killing his men. Mr. Wilber surrendered his purse, and when the captain opened it he found a Masonic pin. Turning to his prisoner he said, "Is that your pin?" Receiving an affirmative answer he returned the pocketbook, saying, "I would advise you to wear that where it can be seen;" and calling off his men, very soon disappeared in the mountains, leaving Mr. Wilber and his company to bury the dead, gather up their train and proceed on their journey.

My friend listened with interest and remarked, "His Masonry saved his life and was a good thing for him." He further said that had he met a brother in battle and received from him the sign he would not have killed him, and gave it as his opinion that Masonry saved many valuable lives during the war. I then presented the other side and asked about the duty of Mr. Wilber in case the rebel captain had been in distress and had given the sign and if this system of secret signs and solemn obligations was not interfering with our civil courts and protecting criminals, etc. By this time he evidently had grave suspicions that I was not loyal or favorable to the secret system, and changed to subjects more congenial. We parted at Mendota, friends I trust, although he had failed to convince me that Masonry was "a beautiful system of morality," and my efforts to induce him to abandon it had probably been no more effective.

At Tonica arrangements were made for Uncle John Morrison to attend the Chicago convention, and after enjoying the hospitality of his home over night this excellent and zealous brother in Christ took me to Mr. Geo. Hopkins' residence near Granville, where having arranged for services on Sabbath and on Monday evening with the Congregational church, we returned to Tonica in time for me to catch a train to Wenona.

Peter and Mrs. Howe I found in delicate health, but cheerful, hopeful and "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might." His sons and the few at Winona who have enlisted are carrying on the war. After consultation it was agreed that Bro. Dunham attend the June convention, and perhaps others. There I saw also indication that meetings may be held there at some future time.

MT. PALATINE.

Lostant will furnish two delegates to the annual meeting, and is ready for lectures as soon as times are propitious. Elder Osgood has done a grand work in Lostant and lived to see the results. He took a bold stand against the lodge and incurred the displeasure and received the censure of the Baptist church. The church has retraced its action and restored the brother to its fellowship. The old gentleman took an extended Western trip, scattering anti-secrecy literature wherever he went. He was an interested spectator at the G. A. R. gathering at Denver, and also of the K. T's conclave in San Francisco. He is hale and hearty and now with me at Bro. Morrison's, en route to Granville.

GRANVILLE.

May 19th.—Mr. George Hopkins welcomed us to his home and entertained us with generous hospitality. A kind of informal family gathering was in progress in which three generations were represented and three "royal jewels" set in infant caskets were the center of attention. All present were friends of Wheaton College and some had been members of the institution. The advent of these youthful members in the line of a distinguished family of reformers was considered an encouraging omen of prosperity and enlargement in the intellectual home and spiritual birthplace of so many who are already doing sterling work in the field of conflict.

Rev. Wm. Tracy is deservedly popular among all classes of good people, but especially successful in interesting the young and enlisting them in Christian work. In speaking of his pulpit efforts a brother said: "Every sermon is a gem and he always stops when it is finished." He has given less thought to the subject of secret societies in the past than he is likely to do in the future, as he is to receive the Cynosure for the year to come. In occupying his pulpit Sabbath morning and evening he gave me full liberty to speak the whole truth without let or hinderance. I hope the columns of the Cynosure will be enriched and its usefulness increased by occasional communications from the pen of this gifted brother, who is not hampered by the presence of secretists in the church of which he is pastor. Pres. J. Blanchard and Bro. Hinman are greatly esteemed here for "their works' sake."

WENONA.

May 20th.—Last evening I was encouraged by the presence of a fair audience at Granville which gave strict attention to the "things spoken," and I trust good results will follow.

Bro. Joel Hopkins was too ill to see any but his physician, relatives or old friends, and I therefore failed to meet him as I had hoped to do, and to more thoroughly identify him in our work. Bros. Fisher and Skeel showed me great kindness; and, giving me good cheer and placing in my hand his own and the contributions of others, Bro. S. brought me on my may as far as "Uncle Johns," who, as he is want, took up the role of the helpful and passed me along the line to other posts of duty.

I scarce dare look forward to our approaching Convention, where so many difficulties and obstructions hedge the way, but looking up I am reassured and inspired with courage. The friends of the Christian Association, the American party, the Cynosure and the American are many and their prayers and cries to God are unceasing, and I know what shall be in the end, but the way is shrouded in mist. There is marked progress everywhere perceptible outside of the rings, cliques and lodges that rule in lesser or larger circles, and a decided "unity of spirit" among our working members. But "even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body" from "the fear of man that bringeth a snare," and from the love and rule of old parties that are not delivered from the body of this death," wherein the patriotism and Christian civilization of our country is "unequally yoked together" in the treason and pagan religion of the lodge system.

We are told that the Government vaults are filled to repletion and we know who has the key to this store, and the power of money in a political campaign is great. The masters have laid their wires and appointed their underlings for the fray. The children of reforms are multiplying with dangerous rapidity and "fanatics" are already a power in the land. The political "midwives" have the command, "slay every man child born" to any party that seeks the dissolution of the "spoils system by which we have our wealth," and while there is "sighing and crying by reason of oppression, the people hesitate to enter upon an "exodus" lest Pharaoh's host overtake them or they be consumed in the wilderness before reaching the "Promised land." There are multitudes of voters who believe in the principles and platform of the American party, who like the children of Israel in Egypt are thoroughly convinced that the old parties are wickedly ambitious, criminally guilty and hopelessly corrupt, who nevertheless stand halting over expedienees and fearful of consequenees, when the only safe or even sensible thing to do is to obey God and "come out from among them and be separate." Can a worse than Pharaoh be exalted to place or power? I do not mean the present incumbent at the White House, who is as his successor must be, if elected, under party rule, the plastic agent of the managers, but the PARTY itself, under which has developed a system of intimidation, election frauds and gigantic swindles unparalleled in any twenty years of our nation's history. Under such circumstances a change can hardly be thought a "dangerous experiment."

STREATOR.

While at the Wenona depot Bro. Roylston "picked me up" and took me to his home. While seated at his hospitable board I learned from Mrs. R. of their recent bereavement. Too impatient for the ripe fruits of a matured life the Reaper eame and plucked the sweet "Forget-me-not" in such "an hour as they thought not," to return their choicest treasure to "him who gave it." But since "death is not an eternal sleep" there was a gleam of sunlight in the fast falling tears reflected from the rainbow of promise spanning the tomb of "him who is the resurrection and the life," as she told the touching story of her darling's "farewell."

"We who believe" can wait the trumpet's call to a happy reunion, but what anguish must the infidel suffer when "without hope and without God" he looks into the grave of an only child and feels that all his labor and care has been bestowed to furnish a repast for loathsome worms that mock his tears and wait for his coming to the sacrifice prepared in stench and fumes expiring only with their corruption.

The sturdy reformers of the enterprising town of Streator will furnish their full quota at the Junc Convention, and Bro. Gardner, who is "Holding the Fort" at home, will do something in the line of missionary effort to enlist others. J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE MICHIGAN AGENT.

On Saturday and Sabbath, April. 19th and 20th, I attended the M. E. Quarterly services on Augusta charge Harmonia appointment, Rev. N. M. Steele, pastor in charge. From here I announced a lecture for Tuesday evening, April 22d.

At the time appointed I presented myself and found a smaller company than on Sabbath evening. Perhaps the Masons smelt a mammoth mouse, although I did not announce a lecture against Freemasonry. I am told the lodge in Augusta has disbanded. Is that so? What has become of that wonderful array of converts which Barlow and Rathbun made to the lodge by their lectures in this vicinity a few years ago? Masonic converts made under such circumstances are not very good at paying lodge dues it seems. Proselytes made thus are tenfold more Anti-masonic when the time comes for them to speak than they otherwise would be. We shall hear from these ere long all over this country. What a setting out these deaeons and preachers will get who lied to get them in! God pity the Mason who dares deny these expositions: better a great deal do as a Knight Templar did in Battle Creek. He said concerning Bro. Starry's work of raising a candidate to the third degree: "He did well under the circumstances. I don't see how he could work that degree on so small a platform. He gave it correet, but what is it going to accomplish?" etc.

Bro. Steele, who has been a Mason but now considers it wrong, and whose father is chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Mich., stood by me nobly. He considers that Masonry in the M. E. church is fast losing its caste. Amen, say men and angels.

On Monday, May 5, I was taken to the home of Bro. Parker, west of Okemos, where I remained for the night. Some three miles distant at the Island school-house I met a good audience, who seemed intensely interested in thc lecture, which lasted over an hour and a half. Here I sold no stock, and, in fact, have not for some time, owing to the hard times and increasing indifference of the people. Sold one exposition of Masonry and received some slight donation to our treasury. On Tuesday, May 6, took train at Okemos and arrived at Williamstown, where I was met by Bro. Rice of Locke, in which plaee I was announced to speak in the evening. I found Bro. Ross confined by sickness as before stated. In the evening met a small audience and brought before them the subjeet of political Christianity. The continued rain accounted for the meagre attendance. The farmers seemed somewhat discouraged over their prospects, and no financial aid was received. Announeed for another lecture on the following evening and found a better turnout and more interest manifest in the cause. Received a very little donation to the treasury, and for the first time presented the American Party club blank for signatures, preparatory to political organization and earnest work, and obtained nine names. Some members of the craft were present, and winced perceptibly under the truth. A grey-headed Prohibitionist got wrought up to boiling heat in fear that our movement would hinder the movement of the Prohibitionists, and was heard to remark that if he could have a chance "he could show that the demands of the Prohibition Party were as much higher than the American Party as the new moon was higber than his barn." We should be pleased to hear from this brother.

On the following day I went with Bro. J. C. Martin to Wheatfield to preach on the occasion of his quarterly meeting. With him and his excellent companion I spent some precious time while in Locke, as with other friends of other days. Here I found myself unwittingly exposed to that disagreeable disease ealled mumps. I am rather expecting to be obliged to lay off from active work for awhile on this aecount, but may not. Returned from Wheatfield in time to preach at Loeke again on Sunday evening, and on the following evening I lectured at the F. M. church uorth of this. This church is not yet completed, and will be an ornament to the community, and, we trust, an honor to God when finished, Here I met with a warm reception from Bro. Bartlett, pastor in charge, who voted this spring for the first time in a number of years, having found and endorsed the principles of the American Party. Twenty-five votes were cast in the town for the American Party. We had a good meeting.

On the following day, through the rain, Bro. Rice conveyed me to Webberville where I took train for Brighton. I stopped over one train at Howell and ealled on Brethren Loomis and Wilcox, but reeeived no financial aid. Arrived at Brighton I was met by Bro. Joel Martin, who had arranged that three leetures should be delivered on his charge. The first was in a Baptist church five miles from the village. Here I met a very small company. Owing to the season and the shortness of the evenings we cannot expect very full attendance. At this place I took the first subscription to the Washington paper. Bro. Devereaux of South Lyon is the man. We hope the list will rapidly increase in Michigan. Received here a slight donation, and sold one book, "In the Coils." On the following evening I spoke in the Wesleyan ehurch at Brighton to a small audienee. Colleetion, eighty-five cents. On the next evening I spoke at thc valley appointment, and sold some books, took two subscriptions to Washington American, and received small amouut for treasury.

Shall desist from making further lecture appointments at present. Will still canvass for the eause, and attend quarterly meetings whenever requested, and will lecture when and where brethren deem it advisable.

H. A. DAY.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

Much ought to be said and more done, and there ought to be a great many here to say and do right things at the annual meeting of the N. C. A., June 19th, prox. The friend who does not know that this is a most important period in the reform work, has read the Cynosure and studied the situation to little purpose. The year has been unparalleled in tokens of divine favor, and the most skeptieal canuot doubt that God is calling upon his people to go forward and posscss the land. It is only a question of time, and your prescnee at this annual gathering may hasten the victory more than you know.

The Mayor of Cincinnati, who shows some respect for the Sabbath, declined to allow the Sullivan slugging match to take place on that day. By way of showing himself to the public, the great slugger acted as pitcher for a base ball club on Sunday to an admiring crowd of 2,500 young men. The Mayor likewise ordered the public dances at the Belleview and Lookout Houses stopped on Sunday, and says he will not longer permit them.—Inter Ocean.

—The Mollie Maguire disgrace in Pennsylvania is about to be aggravated by the formation of new "brotherhoods" to perpetuate their demagoguery and to eontinue their inhuman butcheries of innocent and honest laborers. If there are enough law-abiding and order-respecting people in Pennsylvania to wipe out and forever hereafter keep out that sort of black listed outlawry, they ought to rise up and do it without delay.—Conneautville Independent.

—The Methodist Episcopal Church South is providing a centenary medal as well as the church North. It has on one side a profile of Bishop Asbury, and around the edge tbe words, "Organization of American Methodism, 1784." On the other side is the profile of Bishop Pierce, with the words "Centenary Medal: Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1884."

CORRESPONDENCE.

"DECORATION" DAY.

NEW WILMINGTON, Pa., May 10, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your issue of May 8, under the heading of "Pith and Point," are some things which, though not personally interested, I cannot but regard as very unjust, to some at least, of our country's noble defenders. There are no doubt hundreds of impostors on the pension list, and it would be out of the ordinary course if such were not the case.

Nor would it be a matter of wonder if, even in our glorious American party, some are found "who have come in privily to spy out our liberty from the "cable-tow" of the lodge. But would it be just to class the whole party with "tbe unjust" on that account? So neither is it just, as in the paragraph referred to, so indiscriminately to join the whole list of pensioners with Freemasons, politicians and dupes, as the only ones who desire to keep up this "graveyard show." It is well the writer of that signed himself a "Looker on," for had he been a "Looker in," and smelled the smoke, heard the din and roar, and felt the painful effect of broken shell and piercing, poisoned ball of the slave-holding army, or experienced even a little of the filthy, living death of Andersonville, and returned home with loss of health and limb, he could not have written that cold, heartless sentence. JOSEPH M'KELVEY.

NOTE.—"Looker On," in the brief letter referred to, made use of terms which are too sweeping and general; yet this may be said of him: that he was a brave soldier in the war who was not afraid of his principles in any company, and who now sees in decoration day an affair which was got up chiefly by politicians to carry the sympathy of the people against the Democratic party, and it has been used by politicians ever since, until of late it has fallen into the hands of the secret orders who use it as they do the funerals of prominent men in civil life or the laying of corner-stones of buildings that belong to all the people and not to a secret junto. Thus in this city the Grand Army, whose oath, which is anything but American, appears on another page, is always in the lead. This year the United Order of Workmen takes occasion to make a general display on Decoration day.

For what, indeed, are the graves decorated? Is it because all who lie in them were pure, noble and patriotic men and enlisted not for bounties, or honors or fame, but from simple and sincere love of country? Evidently not; then some graves would be without a garland. Is it because all died for their country? Plainly not, for those who died rashly or wiekedly attempting to overthrow it have their floral tribute as well as the Uuion soldier. Even the rebel soldiers who died in Camp Douglas near this city, scveral thousand in number, are to be remembered with the rest this week. We are shut up, therefore, to the conclusion that the decoration is for any one who died in the war, no matter on what side he was fighting, or for what purpose. Now if we arc to follow this custom, which comes to us from heatben Greecc and Rome, not from Christianity, should our offering not be to mcn whose lives havc plainly been given in defense of truth and patriotism and not vainly and without discrimination?

CIVICS AND POLITICS.

When Freemason Edmunds proposed in the U. S. Senate to place a bankrupt upon the retired list of the army with the pay of twenty thousand dollars a year, he doubtless well represented the Masonic polities of bis State, but certainly not the character of its civil institutions. Bankrupts in Vermont have to render an account to the law for bursting up banks; and we know of one broken bank there, not a greater disaster than that of the Marine bank, whose chief manager has been sent to prison.

Twenty thousand dollars a year, too, is altogether foreign to Vermont institutions. There are scores of farmers in Vermont who altogether do not receive that sum for their year's labor. Nay, there are not a few entire farms in the State of which it would take ten of them to bring twenty thousand dollars. That sum of money would pay the Governor, the whole Supreme Bench, and several other of the officers of the State besides. The idea of equality before the law in Vermont does not admit of such an immense inequality of salaries, and especially for such purposes.

At bottom the civic institutions of Vermont are economic, moderate and equal in their bearings upon men, discriminate in their justice and free from favor, partiality or affection, and are in no respect represented by this extravagant political measure proposed by Senator Edmunds. It runs counter to the whole genius of Vermont institutions to bestow upon any one the aristocratic sinecure of twenty thousand dollars a year, much less upon a bankrupt.

Under the Masonic tactics of the Republican party, and with the consent of Vermont delegates, Vermont's good name has been made use of for such fraudulent party purposes since the beginning of the war. Poor, economic, industrious Vermont, many of whose respectable farmers go clothed worse than former slaves, has been made to endorse and give credit to the most extravagant and the most useless expenditures. The civil institutions of Vermont, and her true republican character have had little or no representation in Congress since the beginning of the war. Her delegates have never asserted the character of the State or claimed the credit that is due to it. Instead of this, they have followed the mere ordinary dirty channels of lodge politics.

The country will be again duped and disastrously deceived if it accepts a Presidential candidate from among Vermont delegates, under the impression that it is receiving a representative of Vermont institutions. If the country accepts Senator Edmund's proposal for a twenty thousand dollar benefice to Gen. Grant, it ought, for consistency sake, to accept the General for President. Or is there, perhaps, "an arrangement" made to the contrary?

ANTI-MASON.

PITH AND POINT.

AN OLD SOLDIER'S TRIALS.

I have much knowledge in the line of secret societies, having been and now am a member of three societies, and understanding well the works of Masonry to the high degree of what Thomas Paine called the degree of the Holy Ghost, also the degrees of Odd-fellowship and the G. A. R. If you would fully appreciate the cruelties of my order just visit the Soldier's Home and see the poor, old, worn-out men forced to work out-doors until they faint in their tracks, while the young and strong drive them around like dogs, and put on style. The poor old creatures cannot tell why this is so, and you see no stripes of authority on any, but those who are attached to one or the other of the secret orders; and praying men that hope for heaven will lie to screen them, for they receive favors in return. Such a one can get in the guard-house and be released the same day, while the rest for a less crime are imprisoned for from 10 to 60 days or have to labor on the dump. O the cruelties of man to usurp authority! How they compass all means and plot all devices to hold their neighbor in servitude, even to crush their reputation and cry them down to force them into abject slavery. I would say more were it lawful for me so to do, but I will with you pray that God will so purify the hearts of men that they may all know him from the least to the greatest; and my heart is with you in the spirit of reform, to cast out the infernal demon from the hearts of men.——

———, National Soldier's Home, Milwaukee, Wis.

WE STAND FOR AN ALL-CONQUERING NAME.

I hate secretism as much as any of you, but I see no necessity of attacking it mainly in the name and by the authority of a "National Christian Association," or through the medium of politics. It seems to me it might be blown to the devil where it came from simply in the name of liberty and common sense. How any intelligent boy old enough to keep out of the fire can allow himself to be humbugged and made a slave of by such ....is more than I can account for; yet I know it is done. They soap him with lies and flatter him with promises till they get him in their power, and then actually scare him into taking a pirate's oath.—H. SPAFFORD, Fond du Lac, Wis.

We attack the lodge in one name alone, the almighty name of Jesus Christ. The N. C. A. and political action is only a way of working together, as the blow of a sledge is worth more to break a stone than fifty taps with a tack hammer. Friend S. feels the power of a strong conviction. What we try to do—and he must help us—is to bring all men to the same common-sense view of the lodge.

A CHEERING VOICE FROM THE SOUTH.

I continue to labor as best I can in the interest of the reform, and I feel that my labor is not entirely lost, but have much encouragement that it is being blessed for much good. The light is spreading and the truth is being accepted in many places. I also feel, trust and pray that we will have a great outburst in opposition to secret orders in the churches. When this time arrives, it will be a great day dawn for the reformation. When the Bride, the Lamb's wife, shall give her testimony against the great iniquity of these abominations, then it is to be hoped that ministers with lamb-skin aprons (wolves in sheep's clothing) will cease to try to intimidate honest-minded men who dare have honest convictions.—JESSE WARD, Partridge, Alabama.

LODGE-BOUND PREACHERS UNDER BAN.

I noticed the name of Rufus Day in the Cynosure of April 24th. We lived neighbors at Limerick, Jefferson county, N. Y. He is a consistent Anti-mason, a wealthy farmer, and a zealous Methodist. When a Masonic minister was sent to that circuit he would not attend church or pay. So a Masonic minister has not been sent on that circuit for ten years. He controls the matter. Just so here in Albion; no Masonic ministers come here to preach.—A. C. MOFFATT, Albion, Iowa.

A WORKING ANTI-MASON.

In my work in 1883 and to the present time I have distributed 2,379 tracts and 386 books and pamphlets at my own expense. This literature should be scattered all over the world. May God send more laborers into the field to battle against this foe that is shutting the mouths of so many men, some fearing their obligations, and others that they will make some enemies. Let these know that they will have no reward from the Lord, for we are commanded to reprove and rebuke sin in all its forms. At the Angola fair last October I gave tract No. 44 to a saloon-keeper. He said Mr. Moody had better join them. I gave tract No. 5 to a grocery clerk. He said that Finney was a perjured man and ought to be killed, he was not fit to live.—E. SUTTON, Angola, Ind.

IS CHRISTIAN UNION POSSIBLE?

This question has of late years made progress in such organizations as The Evangelical Alliance and of the union ecclesiastically of bodies akin to each other and apart on account of past differences. The Methodists in Canada are now one body. The churches in our own country, divided by slavery and war, are becoming one for the whole United States. And now we congratulate the Standard of this city, and the Christian Standard of Cincinnati, on their courteous approaches to each other on behalf of union of these two great bodies of this country—the Baptists and the Disciples. Standing where we do we can see no good reason for their "division" into two bodies, and we shall rejoice when Christendom shall arrive at unity in the one faith, the one Lord, and the one baptism for the one body of believers the world over. Then indeed we may hope for our Lord's prayer, John 17, to be answered by the rapid conversion of the world.

LESSON X.—June 8, 1884.—Justification by Faith. Romans 3: 19–31.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Rom. 5: 1.

THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.—Coleridge calls the Epistle to the Romans "the profoundest book in existence." Chrysostom had it read to him twice a week. Luther, in his famous preface says, "This Epistle is the chief book of the New Testament, the purest Gospel. It deserves not only to be known word for word by every Christian, but to be the subject of his meditation day by day, the daily bread of his soul. The more time one spends on it the more precious it becomes and the better it appears." Melancthon, in order to make it perfectly his own, copied it twice with his own hand. The Reformation was undoubtedly the work of the Epistle to the Romans, as well as of that to the Galatians.—Godet. Paul's reason for writing to the Romans at this time was his intention of speedily visiting them on his way from Jerusalem to Spain. He desired, before his personal intercourse with them should begin, to give them a proof of the affectionate interest which he felt for them, although they "had not seen his face in the flesh." The Epistle was sent to Rome by Phœbe, a Christian lady of Cenchrea, the seaport of Corinth, about to sail to Rome upon some private business.—Conybeare and Howson.

"Now we know." The purpose of this verse is to show that the Jew, being a sinner, is in danger of the judgment. For the Jews openly claimed exemption from final condemnation, even for wicked Israelites. But the law, far from giving to the Jew impunity for his sin, speaks in all that it says especially to him as its subject, in order that he first (and so all the world) may be put to silence, and brought under God's judgment.—Cook.

"For by the law is the knowledge of sin." The law produces the recognition of sin in its true nature and consequences. It leads to the conviction of its exceeding turpitude and desert of punishment. When the law has produced this result, it has prepared us for the reception of the Gospel.—Hodge. Law has only this enlightening faculty; it holds the mirror up to guilt, but it cannot remove it.—Sanday. For holy people or those desiring to be holy, the law is a guide showing the way in which they ought to go. But by this very work it shows the sinner how far he is away from perfect righteousness.—Peloubet.

"By faith of Jesus Christ," i. e., by faith which has Christ for its object, "faith in Christ." Faith in Christ, thus presented as the sole condition of righteousness, is not regarded by St. Paul as a restriction of God's grace, but as the means of participation by which alone it can be thrown open to all mankind. Faith has itself a universal fitness for man; it grows out of his original relation to God, and is, under all circumstances, the rightful disposition of the creature towards his Creator. In man unfallen it was the trustful, loving sense of dependence upon God's goodness; in fallen man it unites the deep feeling of unworthiness with the conviction that mercy rejoices against judgment; and thus in both states gives God the glory.—Cook.

"Redemption." The word here denotes that deliverance from sin, and from the evil consequences of sin, which has been effected by the offering of Jesus Christ as a propitiation (ver. 25).—Barnes. It redeems (1) from sin, (2) from its penalties (Tit. 2: 14; Heb. 9: 15; Eph. 1: 7), (3) from death (Rom. 8: 23), (4) from the present evil state into a state of glory and blessing (Luke 21: 28; Eph. 4: 30).—Cook.

"To be a propitiation." The Greek word properly means "that which renders propitious." Here, "that which renders God propitious." In some way which is not explained at all in this passage, and imperfectly explained elsewhere, the death of Christ did act so as to render God "propitious" towards men. There is a remarkable use of the same Greek word in the Septuagint version of the Old Testament to express the mercy-seat, i. e., the lid or covering of the ark, which was sprinkled by the high priest with the blood of the victim on the Day of Atonement. Some have thought that there is a reference to this here. Christ is the mercy-seat of the New Covenant.—Sanday.

"That he might be just, and the justifier." It is for the good of a state that punishment be impartially inflicted. A king who fails to do this is unfaithful to his trust, and is an enemy to his people, for he encourages crime. May we not conceive that it would have been unkind to the universe as a whole, for God to save sinners from the consequences of their own sins without giving the most tremendous proof of the deadliness of sin? Is not the righteousness of God, which made the death of Christ necessary for our salvation, a form of that love which is the essence of his character? If so, God's love to his creatures forbade him to forgive sin except through the sacrifice of Christ. To delay punishment, and still more to pardon the guilty, is unjust, and therefore unkind. But what would otherwise be unjust, and therefore impossible, God has made just by the death of Christ.—Beet.

"It is excluded." It may mean all boasting is prevented, or all ground of boasting is excluded. Paul means to say that the result of the Gospel plan of salvation is to prevent all self-approbation, self-gratulation, and exaltation on the part of the sinner.—Hodge.

"Seeing it is one God." If there is to be any distinction between Jew and Gentile, this can only be upon the assumption either that there are more gods than one by whom they will be justified, or that they will be justified by some different law, in some different way. But neither of these is the case. Therefore it follows that there is no distinction.—Sanday.

"Yea, we establish the law." Grace, as it is manifested in the Gospel, is the most splendid homage, the most solemn consecration, which the law can receive. This grace is of a peculiar character. It is not the soft indulgence and the easy indifference of a feeble father, who, tired of his own severity, shuts his eyes to the faults of a guilty child. It is not the weakness of a timid government, which, unable to repress disorder, lets the laws sleep, and goes to sleep along with them. It is a holy goodness; it is a love without feebleness, which pardons guilt, and executes justice at the same time. Thus, in the work of which we speak, condemnation appears in the pardon, and pardon in the condemnation. The same act proclaims the compassion of God and the inflexibility of his justice. The cross, the triumph of grace, is the triumph of law.—Alexander Vinet.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE BIBLE PLAN OF SALVATION AND THE LODGE PLAN.

1. No one can be justified by works without faith. Vs. 20 22. The doctrine of justification by faith should have been no new one to the Jews, "being witnessed by the law and the prophets." We see by Heb. 11, that it was well understood by the ancient patriarchs; and in Rom. 4: 3, we are told that before circumcision was established or, indeed, any part of the ceremonial law, Abraham's faith in a coming Redeemer was counted to him for righteousness. But in the lapse of centuries the Jews let this great cardinal doctrine slip away from them and substituted in its stead the false doctrine taught by their rabbis, of justification by works. The Christian church centuries later committed the same deadly mistake. Ignorant priests taught the people that they could win heaven by masses and penances and pilgrimages; so Luther and the early reformers were obliged to make this grand doctrine of justification by faith the burden of their preaching and writing. We must not suppose that in our own times there is no danger of its being obscured or lost sight of. In almost all our churches we find persons who are Masons, or belong to some secret order, and though they may not know it, it is nevertheless true that all such persons practically deny justification by faith, as will be shown in the next topic.

2. The difference between lodge righteousness and God's righteousness. Vs. 22–25. God promises salvation to "all that believe" (v. 22). He justifies freely (v. 24). The lodge promises it only to able-bodied white males who can pay for it. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God; but Masonic books tell us that simply keeping the laws and obligations of Masonry will "free a man from sin," or what amounts to the same thing, "give him entrance into the Grand Lodge above." They never tell us, however, what can be done with "the sins that are past" (v. 25). Even if keeping Masonic obligations could make a man sinless, we see it would not be a complete salvation, for as he cannot enter the lodge till twenty-one, the sins of his childhood and youth must remain unatoned and unforgiven. The Gospel alone offers a perfect redemption for past guilt.

3. Works are boastful, faith is humble. V. 27. We shall always find that every system of religious belief which exalts works and gives them a soul-saving power is proportionately boastful. The Jews boasted of Abraham, papal Rome boasts her infallibility, and anti-Christ is characterized "as speaking great things." So the lodge boasts of its charity, morality, and many other virtues; but the true spirit of the Gospel excludes boasting. If all have sinned and are all alike debtors to the same free grace there is no room for self-righteousness. But man-made religions always foster pride because they are based on a system of human merit. This is one of the many ways in which we can try the spirit of the lodge and prove that it is not of God.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Why can no one be justified by works? Ps. 143: 2; Prov. 7: 20. Does the doctrine of justification by faith exclude works? Matt. 5: 16. What strong motives does it bring to bear upon holy living? Col. 1: 10; 3: 12; Eph. 4: 1; 5: 1, 2.

OBITUARY.

STEPHEN CRANSTON, SEN., was born on Providence Plantation near Providence, R. I., October 1st, 1793, and lived there until he was twenty-one years old, when he came to the far Western State of Ohio in 1815 with his father, John Cranston, sister, Phœbe Ann, and four younger brothers, John, Ephraim, Christopher and Edwards; settling on Darby Plains, on a tract of land between Irwin and Milford Center, in Union county, intending to make it their permanent home. But through some defect in title the land was exchanged after a few years for another tract near Woodstock, in Champaign county, where his father located his sons around him on adjoining farms. With their native energy developed through delving amidst rocks and stones in the East, they contended bravely with all the difficulties of new country life; clearing, draining and cultivating until they made the wilderness to "blossom as the rose."

Stephen Cranston married Esther Hammond, July 25, 1819, and after about thirty-two years spent here in raising his family of two daughters and seven sons, Phœbe Ann, George Andrew, John Douglas, Melissa, James, Julius, Stephen, Jun., Edwin and William Rollin, three children having died in infancy, he purchased lands near Newton, in Union county, thinking to settle his sons on adjoining farms. But they not liking the locality in the woods he relinquished his farm on the plains to his second son, John Douglas, and with the others came in his sixtieth year to clear up and improve another farm, one mile southwest of Newton. George A., James, Stephen, Jr., Edwin and William R. remained near him for a while, making improvements on the land he divided among them. Phœbe A. Benton lived and died near him. In the course of time George A. and Julius found other homes in Illinois; Melissa Gideon moved to Missouri; James to York Center, Union county; Edwin to Kenton, Hardin county; and William R. died in the Union army; while Stephen, Jr., remained near him and filially assisted him in his declining years. Others sought opportunities to show their devotion to an aged father.

The labors of thirty-two years here have made these farms picturesque and valuable. Long has he enjoyed his home; and his life has been characterized by both physical and mental strength devoted to the eradication of evil and the development of good.

He was early known among the anti-slavery workers and many a fugitive from bondage has by him been helped onward to freedom. Secret societies having been regarded by him as a great evil, he has warned others against them and earnestly endeavored to expose their wrongs and evil tendencies. Temperance has long had an advocate in him; and he rejoiced in the privilege of casting his vote for prohibition last fall, even after he had passed his ninetieth birthday.

At the age of twenty-two years he made a profession of the Christian religion, and has delighted in exhortation. In all his deep trials and varied changes in life he has poured forth his spirit in supplication and thanksgiving; and in his daily family devotions with most child-like simplicity has he communed with his Heavenly Father.

For more than three months past I have been with my aged uncle in his feebleness, and have noted with admiration the strong elements of his character, crowned with a beautiful spirit. His long and exemplary life came to a close here, at one o'clock A. M., May 10th, 1884, at the age of ninety years, seven months and nine days. He leaves the companion of his wedded life, eighty-two years of age, with whom he has shared his joys and sorrows for almost sixty-five years; six sons with their wives; one daughter; and another, who from her early childhood has filled the place of daughter devotedly; twenty two grand children; four great-grand-children; with numerous other relatives and friends, who will lovingly cherish his memory.

On the 11th of May his funeral services were conducted by Elder Josiah Knight, assisted by four other ministers of different denominations; and the words selected as appropriate, from 2 Timothy 4: 6, 7, 8: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

JOSEPHINE P. CRANSTON.

The N. Y. Examiner, May 15th, contains notice of the death of ELDER HENRY B. EWELL, in the 79th year of his age and the forty-seventh of his active ministry. He was a zealous reformer and faithful advocate of what he believed. He was associated with Elder David Bernard, John G. Stearns and the host of godly men who broke the power of the lodge and for a time rescued the Baptist church from its unholy rule. When I visited Pavilion, N. Y., two years ago he received me cordially and invited me to occupy his pulpit without restrictions. He pointed out the house where the lodge met and where Elder Bernard made his ever memorable renunciation. He took a lively interest in the work of the N. C. A., and although age and infirmities prevented him from attending our annual or occasional gatherings of late, yet his prayers were with us, and whenever the question of fellowshiping members of secret societies came up in ministerial meetings or associations where he was present he invariably spoke strongly against the whole system, as anti-Christian and only evil. It is devoutly to be hoped that his successor at Pavilion may prove as faithful and fearless in rebuking this vile system as Elder Ewell did when the Masons murdered Morgan, and that both church and pastor may bear a strong, brave testimony against it. J. P. STODDARD.

REV. CALEB M. PRESTON died of heart disease at his residence in Waldron, Hillsdale county, Mich., on the morning of December 9th, 1883, in the sixty- seventh year of his age.

He was born at Linchburg, Va., Nov. 22, 1817. He was the seventh in a family of sixteen children. At the age of seven years he removed with his parents to Columbiana county, Ohio. His parents left Virginia principally on account of slavery; hence it is not strange that the family afterwards became active and influential in the anti-slavery movement. Stalwart principle and unflinching devotion to truth and moral reform, largely as a maternal inheritance, has been a leading characteristic of the family. However, during the childhood of the subject of this sketch the parents, though decidedly moral and noble, holding religious preferences for the Quakers, were not Christians. In 1841, at the age of twenty-four, he became deeply convicted of sin and sensible of his need of a Saviour. Turning away from the mild and moderate customs and teachings of the Friends, he walked sixteen miles to attend a Methodist camp-meeting on purpose to get saved, went to the altar at the first invitation after he arrived, and was wonderfully blessed. He was baptized, and joined the Methodist Episcopal church the next day.

His connection with reform movements was active and his work earnest and thorough. During the anti-slavery and war excitement, while cowardice and compromise characterized the actions of many, in the region where he lived, truth and liberty had one unflinching advocate. He rejoiced in the day of triumph, then turned again his efforts and prayers towards other great reforms, steadfastly believing that the God who brought success to the one would also to others. Espousing the cause of anti-secrecy early in life he ever after looked upon the lodge abomination with absolute intolerance, and considered that as one of the most fruitful causes of political evil and religious degeneracy. For his opposition to secret societies he lost property, and the destruction of the life of the family was attempted, but he stood firm and rejoiced in God through it all. His opposition to intemperance was not simply to that in the use of alcoholic drinks, but he believed tobacco and liquor were twin evils and on account of the universality of its use, the ruin caused by the former to be well nigh equal to that of the latter. Can we say more of his religious life than that those who knew him best had most confidence in his piety? But few have experienced more of the deep things of God than he. Sister De Pew said of him: "Heaven and earth seem to meet when he prays, as with few others." He enjoyed the blessing of entire sanctification as a distinct experience for about twenty-five years, and was well known as an able teacher and defender of this doctrine. His theological opinions were carefully formed and his discrimination such that few errors passed his notice without criticism and often were publicly corrected. He was a wise counsellor, kind husband and loving father. His solicitude for his children knew no bounds; desiring, most of all, to see them saved, fitted for, and occupying positions of Christian usefulness.—C. L. Preston, in Wesleyan.

MARRIED.—Mr. J. L. Stratton of Kalamazoo, Mich., business partner of Mr. Hudson, and brother of Prof. L. N. Stratton of Wheaton, was married at Lacon, Ill., May 13th inst., to Miss Calista L. Thompson. The congratulations of a large circle of friends are heartily given Bro. Stratton in this new relation.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1884.

The Cynosure takes pleasure in announcing that there is prepared for next week a fine portrait of Gen. A. W. Riley of Rochester, N. Y., who assisted in the late county convention with his name, influence and a speech. The portrait will be accompanied by a biographical sketch. The readers of the present number will find it of unusual interest and value. The pens of such writers as the author of "Holden with Cords," Dr. George B. Cheever, Alexander Thomson, General Phelps, Dr. Nathan Brown of Japan, Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes and others, are enough to enrich any paper. The editors will endeavor not to fail in making the Cynosure invaluable to all its readers.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WYOMING, Co., N. Y., May 19, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have been whirled through this part of the great State of New York so rapidly that I scarcely remember what I have written. In York both pastors, Allen and McDonald, Reformed, and United Presbyterian, welcomed me to their pulpits, and took clear, strong ground against the lodge. A committee or club was formed and Chicago delegates appointed. The old people in those two congregations all know about Morgan and regard the lodges as responsible for it; and the clear, sound instruction which they get from their pulpits and papers, make the people look on the American party as a necessity, sure to come, though many will wish to vote the Republican ticket "this once," to keep out the Democrats.

Young Mr. Stoddard and myself went up on Saturday to Arcade, where I spoke four times, twice Saturday and twice on Sabbath. It is the home of brethren Lyman and Waldo, whose long lives have been devoted to reform. Gerrit Smith, Myron Holley and Alvan Stewart were once familiar names in Arcade. The lodge has effected a lodgment there, but there is a substratum of sense, piety and patriotism in those valleys which gave us good attendance and profound attention. The Baptist pastor, Olmsted, is a Mason, yet he and the Congregationalist, Mr. Kaye, a non-Mason who invited me to preach for him, attended our meetings in Keystone Hall, and Rev. Mr. Kaye opened one with prayer. Several Masons attended, and one, a worshiper of familiar spirits, asked several questions, which I answered; and, in turn, asked him if he was stripped, hoodwinked, etc., when he was initiated. He hesitated, and I added, "Say No if you were not stripped. That will reveal no secret. But if you refuse to answer, you will reveal your stripping by your silence."

He seemed embarrassed and the crowd laughed heartily at the ridiculous figure he made. His lodge was not proud of him.

In Arcade, as in all this region, there are numbers whose parents shared in the horror and disgust excited by the Morgan murder and the wholesale perjury which screened his murderers. We saw a grandson of the sheriff of Genesee county, who imprisoned Morgan in the Canandaigua jail; but who became a decided Anti-mason after he had been horrified by the latter's fate. Mrs. Waldo, the lady where I was entertained, was but a child when the tragedy opened here which shook the United States; but her knowledge is accurate, and her convictions intense. Her joy at the revival of the discussion is equally so. Her sons have united with the lodge. "Leverett," said she to one of them, "Leverett, if you ever die in this vicinity no Masonic heathenism shall disgrace your corpse. I will sooner have your coffin sent to your grave in a wheelbarrow, and by moonlight, or in the early evening." The good sense, piety and decision of this lady procured us a good attendance of women at our meetings, and Mr. Stoddard is opening a wide door for Mr. Starry next fall.

BATAVIA, N. Y., May 20th.—Enroute to this place I fell in with Mr. ——— of Leroy, a member of the Presbyterian church there, who was eight years old when this region was turned upside down by the murder of Morgan. He was often in the jail at Canandaigua while Cheesbro, Lawson and Sawyer were confined there. He says, "Our (Leroy) lodge is in a low condition. I have been long in business there, and no temperance man ever belonged to it." He said: "We have all loved the Republican party, but I have done with it forever. I would like to see them nominate Blaine, who made the statesmanlike proposition, to run our State and county governments on the liquor-tax and so distill our laws through whisky! I am Prohibition and shall vote the Prohibition ticket. So will thousands of us. And the Republicans could not more effectually help us to break that party down, than by nominating Blaine. We shall never go back to that party which we once loved."

In company with our State Agent, W. B. Stoddard, I have now visited Batavia, Albion, Holley, Rochester, Canandaigua, York, Dale, Warsaw, Arcade, and Seneca Falls; and have given some sketches of our labors. It is impossible not to observe a great revolution going forward against the secret lodge system. Freemasons have lost all their hauteur. I have spoken in three popular churches in three weeks past, and have been well received. We have not met a Republican or Democrat who is proud of his party or its principles; and prayer and perseverance are just as certain to overthrow the lodge, as slavery fell before the same forces. How can a system live whose friends have not one word to say in its behalf?

J. B.

JOSEPH COOK ON MORMONISM.

The great Boston lecturer, just back from Utah, spoke last Sabbath morning in Chicago on the disloyalty of Mormondom. His powerful arraignment of polygamy and its accessories is in substance given below, but no report can approach the effect of the address itself sent home with the eloquence, the profound earnestness and the convincing force of Mr. Cook's logic. The experience of mankind is, that crime can never be suppressed by toleration, and Mormonism is a crime; and it must be suppressed within twenty or twenty-five years or it will never be. Between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada thunderbolts of danger are forming. Mormonism is at heart as rebellious as secession, and must be dealt as we would with secession after our bitter experience of it. The sentiment that would allow the claim of religion to be set over against the crime cannot stand. The plea of Mrs. Jackson in the Century that Mormon women believe implicitly in the divine sanction of polygamy and so submit to its filthy touch, Mr. Cook has evidence to contradict. It is compulsion for them, and for young men also, to-day as in the time when the Danites and Brigham Young flourished.

We could wish that Mr. Cook had studied the lodge relations of the Mormon church, and estimated the effect of the Endowment House initiation and its Masonic oath, by which the United States courts have been blocked in every effort at prosecution. It is not possible that this bond of life and death which cements the whole system can long continue to escape the attention of thoughtful men, and the statesman who understands the fearful nature of these oaths and their effect upon the convictions of men will be best fitted to frame measures that shall break the bond and eradicate the evil. But we must give a brief report of Mr. Cook's address, which is from the Times of Monday:

"The whole length and breadth of the American union I regard as my native heath. Utah belongs to me and to you as much as to the false prophets who have set up a government of their own in opposition to that of the United States. A man's patriotism is not sufficient to incite him to action until he feels and sees that there is a strain upon his country. This latter-day swindle has not the protection of the shield of state laws, I attended an indignation meeting at Salt Lake City, where one of the speakers is a federal judge and another a general of the civil war; I held a conference with some thirty representative gentiles concerning the best remedies for polygamy, for I believed that we should take lessons from those who have studied the subject on the field. I went to Utah with fifty written questions to ask on the subject of Mormonism, and at the meeting which I attended I found answers to some of them by taking careful notes of what was said by those who had learned from personal observation and experience. Wherever I have traveled—in China, India, and Japan and some years ago in Utah—I have taken the liberty as a New Englander, to carry with me a list of questions.

Five years ago, when I went to Utah, I was in company with five hundred tourists. I was also accompanied by my wife, and it was through her that I gained certain knowledge which I might not have heard from another source. Her acquaintance and conversation with a score of ladies put her in possession of facts which no man could hear from a woman other than his wife. I cannot tell you what they were. If I should dare to do so you would drive me from yonder door in disgrace; but you may read between the lines, and your imagination will not exaggerate the horrible truth. I have taken great pains to enter the Mormon homes, and I may be criticised for things that I say after receiving their hospitality. But I accepted no courtesies from them, and I have a short and sharp excuse to give for not accepting them. They are criminals, and ought to be in jail. You meet a man who is introduced to you as a Mormon elder. He has six wives. He is not only a criminal but a filthy criminal, and he expects to be introduced to your wife. He has a vitiated look, an emasculated voice that renders him loathsome to decent people. You are brought again and again into contact with that thin, emasculated voice, and you hear it even in the pulpit of the tabernacle.

The churches and schools that have been established among the Mormons are doing a good work, but are they likely to be rapid enough in the regeneration of Utah to crush polygamy before the Territory is admitted into the Union? No. Legal measures must be taken and that before the Territory becomes a State, with power to enact its own laws. At Fort Douglas are stationed United States troops, with guns trained on the tabernacle: but it is not generally known that the laws intended to placate the Southern States apply to Utah as well, and it requires thirty days to call out the troops. In case of a riot or other disturbance those guns could not be fired until an enormous roll of red tape was unwound from their muzzles. My reverence for the churches and schools in Utah is immense, and I admire the noble courage of the teachers who actually endanger their lives in the work. The schools and churches are carried into Utah with dangers quite as great as they are carried into the foreign missionary fields. They will not for many generations bring Utah into a proper condition to be admitted into the Union. If, before that time, Utah should successfully employ some political trick to be brought into the family of States, her first act would be to sweep away all these churches and schools. There must be a change in the Constitution prohibiting polygamy everywhere, and that soon.

CYRUS H. MCCORMICK who died on the 13th inst. at his home in this city was one of the most remarkable men of Chicago, as well as one of her wealthiest citizens. Born on a Virginia farm, his practical and inventive talent produced a hand-cradle and hillside plow, and when a reaping machine invented by his father proved a failure, he took it up and made it work, getting out a patent in 1834, and putting the machine on sale six years later. In 1848 he began to manufacture on his own account, and continually improved his machine. He came to Chicago in 1847, and has been the leading manufacturer of reapers and mowers ever since, the sales for some years ranging from forty to fifty thousand. His great wealth he has used liberally in aiding and establishing colleges and theological seminaries and other benefactions. He was a pronounced Presbyterian, and when the Interior was wavering between life and death he took it up and carried through its critical period. Last year when Dr. Gray, the editor, had opened his columns to a discussion of the lodge, Secretary Stoddard and the office editor of the Cynosure called at Mr. McCormick's office to say an encouraging word for the Interior's course and to learn the views of a man of influence, intelligence, and wide experience, upon the lodge question. Mr. McCormick was absent from the city, but his son, a young man of noble bearing and winning frankness, spoke for him. Misapprehending the question of his father's relation to secret societies, he replied with some surprise and a touch of indignation, "He has nothing to do with them, sir." But learning that his visitors were also adverse to these societies, he said that he presumed the course of Mr. Gray was entirely approved by his father, and that between the two there existed an entire harmony of views respecting the conduct of the paper. As to the secret orders they seemed incompatible with Christianity, and he did not see how a man professing to love and obey Christ could be connected with them. Such was the substance of the conversation which continued several minutes with much cordiality. The opinion is a valuable addition to the uniform testimony of intelligent and successful Christian men of business against the secret lodge.

THE BEREA EVANGELIST.—John G. Fee and Elder J. F. Browne of Berea and Bro. H. H. Hinman of Wheaton have undertaken a new journalistic venture—a monthly paper with the above title. The special work of the Evangelist, we should presume from the well known views of the brethren conducting it, is the promotion of Christian unity among those who love and follow our Lord Jesus Christ in whatever denomination. Unlike some who labor for this union, they are not church destroyers, but will endeavor to hold the Gospel mirror before the evils of sectarianism, and in this good work they deserve the prayers and help of all who desire that Christ's prayer for the oneness of his people may be answered. The Evangelist will also maintain the truth against the secret lodges, the spirit of caste, intemperance, Mormonism, etc. It will be also a local organ for the churches of Christ in Kentucky, already organized on the undenominational basis. It endeavors to occupy a legitimate field of Christian effort and may it be sustained and prosper.

—President J. Blanchard went from Dale to Saratoga New York, last week to present again our reform to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church now in session; but being laid aside by sickness for several days we fear he will not be able to accomplish his purpose before he must return to fill engagements in Ohio.

—It is arranged that E. D. Bailey, editor of the American, Washington, D. C., will speak at the Alumni meeting, Wheaton College Commencement. The Alumni Association meets June 18th. The address on the Commencement day following will be given by Rev. Dr. F. H. Noble of Chicago, while the address before the Society of Inquiry on Sabbath evening will be by Rev. E. B. Graham of Omaha, author of "In the Coils."

—Bro. H. H. Hinman, who has been engaged in and about Washington for several months, returned to his home in Wheaton last week, spending Saturday in this office. Bro. H. is in good health, and will remain here until after the annual meeting, June 19th, and the National political convention next day.

—Thousands of our readers will read with joy the few words from Dr. Nathan Brown of Yokohama, Japan, formerly editor of the American Baptist of New York city, in which capacity he did yeoman service for the anti-lodge reform. He has been engaged for some years in Japan by the Baptist Missionary Society in the translation of the Bible and in the publication house connected with the mission. He has received the Cynosure in Japan, and, as he writes, takes still a deep interest in the reform. With all the Cynosure readers we shall hope that Dr. Brown may yet be able to write occasionally for our columns. He sends a copy of a paper read by him at the Osaka conference last year, which we hope to present our readers shortly.

—We are pleased to note that the Christian Worker of this city prints an article from Cynthia Derbyshire of Ypsilanti, Mich., on "Christians in the Lodge." The writer is sister of friend E. Z. Derbyshire who visited the Cynosure office last week on his way to Kansas to purchase land. He left a good round $100 contribution for reform work, and that is far from being the first contribution from him of a similar amount.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

CALL FOR NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The National Convention of the American Party will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20, 1884, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, to revise the platform of the party, and transact such other business as may be brought forward.

Each State will be entitled to as many delegates as there are Congressional Districts in the State, and two delegates at large. These delegates may be chosen in such manner as each State shall determine, and they shall be furnished with credentials signed by the chairman of the State Committee, or by the member of the National Committee for that State.

Persons friendly to the cause, who are not delegates, or who are elected to represent organizations friendly to the party, will be admitted to all the privileges of the Convention except that of voting, and this privilege may be extended to them by the Convention provided the delegation of the State from which they come is not otherwise full. Signed— F. W. CAPWELL,

President.

E. D. BAILEY, Eastern Secretary.
J. P. STODDARD, Western Secretary.

IOWA WILL BE HERE.

CLARENCE, Iowa, May 19th.

The Central Committee of the American party of Iowa met at Cedar Rapids on the 15th inst., and appointed delegates for all the districts except the third, which will be filled as directed by the Committee. I will publish names of delegates as soon as the list is perfected. Hope there will a general rally at Chicago, and especially from Iowa, on the 20th of June next. Remember, friends, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and that we have a secret foe to fight that never sleeps. J. M. KENT, Ch'm'n Central Committee.

SO WILL MICHIGAN.

Every person in this State who is interested in the success of the American party should try to show their faith by their works. And we ask you our brethren and sisters, to help us in organizing our forces and pushing the campaign. It is proposed to organize American clubs wherever there are two or more that will work for the cause. We have printed blanks with the platform on one side and plan of organization and space for signatures on the other. All who will use these in securing names and organizing clubs will be furnished with them upon application to the undersigned, or to Rev. H. A. Day, General Agent of the State Association. Now let us begin at once to enroll ourselves for conflict. Much can be done with a little effort. We succeeded in polling twenty-five votes in this town without a single lecture at the spring election.

We are exceedingly anxious that every one who is in sympathy with our platform should help us in our work.

W. H. ROSS,

Ch'm'n State Central Com., Williamstown, Mich.

WAITING ON THE OLD PARTIES.

Friends in many instances hesitate about committing themselves to work and vote for the nominees of the American party. Some who wholly endorse every plank in the platform are waiting for future developments in the Prohibition and Republican parties, hoping to maintain their consistency as radical reformers and still vote with the majority. Their ardent desire is that the Republican convention to meet in June should put a temperance plank in its national platform and nominate a clean man for President who is not allied with any of the secret lodges. In case the Republicans fail to meet their wishes, they still have hope of relief in the Prohibition Home Protection party. If the nominee of that party is a straight man with a clean record they wish to be in a position to give him their hearty, unconditional support. Some have been looking for communications from the nominees of the American party, setting forth their views more fully and giving an opportunity to become acquainted with the men for whom they are asked to vote. Confused by the glare of headlights on the incoming political trains, they propose to wait and take an invoice of the baggage when it has received the official stamp in national convention.

It must be conceded that a reasonable amount of deliberation is commendable, but when carried beyond reason it becomes a weakness. So far as the Democratic party is concerned, the dominant question is acquisition of power, while the chief concern of the Republican party is the retention and increase of what power it already possesses. Other issues will receive attention from both parties, but neither will risk a direct stand on any question, however vital, likely to diminish its voting forces.

Neither party can claim pre-eminence over the other as a party of principle, though there is undoubtedly a larger percentage of intelligence and integrity in the one than in the other. But this has no perceptible influence in the final outcome. The popular will is so cramped, hedged around and perverted by men who make party politics a profession that the leaders, once in office, pay very little regard to the character or wishes of those who voted to place them there, and to expect radical reforms from corrupt partisan politicians simply because good men vote for them—as a choice between two evils—is to contradict both history and reason. Men or parties controlled by policy will never scruple to sacrifice the principles of their constituents or their own convictions, if they have any, when personal ambition or party interests call for a compromise, and I simply state a truth generally accepted when I assert that the real principle and platform of the Democratic and Republican parties are expressed in two words—VICTORY and SPOILS. No matter who may be the nominees or what their personal character or preferences, they must accept this platform and carry it out, or means will be found to make vacant their places to be filled by the suppliant tools of party leaders.

What has been will be the policy of the two old parties on the temperance and all other questions that require a sacrifice of votes in the advocacy of righteousness and justice, and no official enunciation or silence in convention can make it more certain than it is to-day, and no one need to wait for the meeting of conventions to decide intelligently whether he ought to vote with either of the old parties. The Prohibition Home Protection party occupies a more hopeful attitude toward moral issues than the Greenback party. It seeks a national revolution and is based upon a radical reformation of the whole people. It is sound and sensible on the liquor question, which is second in importance to no other issue now before the nation, but this party is so mixed up with secret society leaders and organizations as to make the propriety of an anti-secretist voting with it exceedingly questionable. To my mind the Prohibition party is in much the same condition of many churches that I know, a large majority of their membership is free from and actually opposed to all secret combinations, and yet the few who hold lodge membership and church membership at the same time manage, by the aid of their "mystic brethren," to control the majority. A very large percentage of the Home Protection party is honest for prohibition, but the "Secret Empire" has a hook in that party's nose by which it will control its movements or lead it to defeat.

Until you are ready to accept as leaders the sworn confederates of brewers, distillers and liquor-sellers who meet as brothers in their secret lodges, you are not safe in voting or giving your influence with any party that does not demand separation from every department in the "Secret Empire" as a condition to holding any civil office.

The American party is as radical on prohibition as the Home Protection party, and insists that the lodge shall not defeat the efforts of the temperance people by the agency of secret emissaries. It furnishes every man who is a radical reformer an opportunity to cast his ballot for prohibition where it will not be exposed to perversion through the oath-bound confederates of the whisky interests, who are traitors to the lodge or enemies of temperance working under disguise. Therefore give your allegiance to the American party at once and work and pray and vote for its success. J. P. STODDARD.

THE FIRST PLANK

WASHINGTON, Iowa, May 13, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your last issue the announcement was made of the National Convention to be held in Chicago in June, for the purpose of nominating a National ticket and also for the purpose of making such amendments to the present platform as the Convention may deem best. We write this communication urging it upon the Convention to change, in part, the first plank in the platform. Where it reads, "God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government," have it read, instead, God, the Creator and Preserver of the Universe, is the author of civil government. Our reasons for this change are: There are many Christian people, Methodists and Presbyterians, who are radical Anti-masons, warm-hearted workers in the cause, who cannot conscientiously support this plank from the fact that these words, "God of the Christian Scriptures," in the connection here used, is equivalent to saying that God in Christ, as Mediator, is the author of civil government; that civil government is therefore an institution of which Christ, as Mediator, is the ruler. This is a theological dogma they do not believe. They believe only that Christ as God essentially, the Creator, is the ruler of civil government. Now, as government is a civil institution, separate and distinct from the church, let us not bring in any religious dogma into our platform that will interfere with the concurrence of any Christian voter. We need all the help we can get in this cause, and so let us have our platform prepared, if possible, so that all interested, honest, thinking people can unite. In the cause of the American reform, AN EARNEST FRIEND.

NOTE.—The term, "God of the Christian Scriptures," was adopted doubtless simply to designate without mistake what deity is meant. The American party does not wish to exalt in the nation any "Grand Architect of the Universe" or other idea that is "called god and worshiped" by men who reject Christ. The form of words was not considered material, but if the objection stated seems good there will be no trouble in correcting it.

THE HOME.

NOT BY LOVE ALONE.

Oh, not in the manna of love alone
Do we find our daily bread;
By the burdens we bear, and the sorrows we share,
Our spirits are nourished and fed.

The wild rose opens its tear-wet leaves
After the summer rain,
And the flowers of the heart drop their petals apart,
After the night of pain.

We do not buy with the gold of love
The richest jewels we wear,
We dig for them deep when the world is asleep,
And receive them in answer to prayer.

The roses we scatter among the thorns
The fragrance of blessing leave,
And our spirits live, by what we give,
And not by what we receive.

The laurels' green and imperial wreath
After the willow is worn,
And with glory unstained, the crown is gained
After the cross is borne.

Oh, not in the manna of love alone
Do we find our daily bread;
By the sweetness born of the blinding storm
Our spirits are nourished and fed.

THE TWO BRANDS.

If you will allow me I will tell you what happened to me the first morning after we (Fanny and I) were married and began to keep house. We were not blessed with a great deal of this world's goods, and had no servants. I rose early to make the fire, and raking open the ashes, found just one brand alive.

"It won't burn alone," thought I, and I broke it in two, laid the parts together to produce a blaze, and soon there was a glowing fire. "Just so it will be with wife and me about religion," thought I. Wife was a whole-hearted Christian, a member of the church, but timid and retiring. I once thought I hada hope, but I never professed Christ, and the hope I once cherished was about dead. I didn't know whether I was a Christian or not. I couldn't eat my breakfast for thinking, and wife said:—

"What ails you, Richard? Isn't the breakfast cooked to suit you?"

"The cooking is all right," said I, "but I'll tell you what isn't. We didn't have family prayers last night or this morning. Now, if I never get into the kingdom, I don't want to keep you out of the highest seat you can have. I found out this morning, kindling the fire, that one brand would not burn alone. So bring out the Bible, laid away so choice in the parlor, and keep it right here on the shelf. I'll read it aloud, morning and evening, and kneel down and hear you pray for yourself and me."

Wife came and put her arm around me and tried to coax me to do the praying, saying she was afraid she couldn't. I would not and so she did, and we were both in tears before she got through. I could not stand out against those prayers. The Spirit kept knocking, knocking at my heart's door and I had to open it. When we knelt together I began at last to pray for myself, first silently and then aloud. Then I went to the prayer-meeting and asked Christians to pray for me; then I prayed for myself there, and soon after I confessed Christ before men by uniting with the church.

Wife and I have been trying ever since to serve God together. I don't see how I ever could have got on alone, and wife says she is sure she couldn't.

I have thanked God ever since for sending his Spirit to set me thinking about the brands that morning when I made the fire.—R. N., in Christian at Work.

THE FEVERISH HAND.

It was a Monday morning and a rainy one at that. "Mother" was busy from the moment she sprang out of bed at the first sound of the rising bell. Others besides children get out of bed "on the wrong side," as this mother can testify. She began by thinking over all that lay before her. It made her "feel like flying!" Bridget would be cross, as it was rainy, there was a chance of company for lunch, so the parlor must be tidied, as well as dining room swept, dishes washed, lamps trimmed, beds made and children started for school. Her hands grew hot as she buttered bread for luncheons, waited on those who had to start early, and tried to pacify the little ones and Bridget.

"My dear, you're feverish," said her husband, as he held her busy hands a moment. "Let the work go and rest yourself—you'll find it pays."

"Just like a man!" thought the mother. "Why, I haven't time even for my prayers!" But the little woman had resolved that she would read a few verses before ten o'clock each day; so, standing by her bureau, she opened to the eighth chapter of Matthew and read these words: "And He touched her hand and the fever left her: and she arose and ministered unto them."

It seemed to that busy wife as if Jesus himself stood ready to heal her—to take the fever out of her hands that she might minister wisely to her dear ones. The beds could wait till later in the day—the parlor might be a little disordered—she must feel his touch! She knelt and he whispered: "My strength (not yours, child) is sufficient. . . . As thy days so shall thy strength be. . . . My yoke is easy (this yoke you have been galled by is the world's yoke, the yoke of public opinion or housewifely ambition), take my yoke upon you and learn of me. . . Ye shall find rest."

The day was no brighter, the work had still to be done; but the fever had left her, and all day she sang, "This God is our God, my Lord and my God."

It is true that, when the friends came to lunch, there had not been time to arrange the parlor, and no fancy dishes had been prepared for the table, but the hostess' heart was filled with love for them as members, with her, of Christ, and they went away hungering for such a realization of him as they saw she had.

"Ah," said her husband, when he held her hands once more, "I see you took my advice, dear; the fever is quite gone."

The wife hesitated—could she tell her secret? Was it not almost too sacred? Yet—it was the secret of the Lord (not hers) and would glorify him. Later on, when the two sat together, she told him who had cured her fever, and said, quietly, "I see that there is a more important ministry than the house-keeping, though I don't mean to neglect that."

"Let us ask the Lord to keep hold of our hands," said her husband. "Mine grow feverish in eager money-making, as yours in too eager house-keeping."

This is no fancy sketch. Dear mothers, busy, anxious house-keepers, let us go again and again to him, that he may touch our hands lest they be feverish and so we cannot minister, in the highest sense, to those about us.—Congregationalist.

RULES FOR THE WAY OF FAITH.

A few simple rules, suggested to me by a leaflet that lies on my table, will, I think, be found helpful to some of my readers who may be spiritually bewildered. They must be followed in a spirit of utter dependence upon the Lord, who alone gives the increase in any of the soul's exercises.

I. Express in definite words your faith in Christ as your Saviour; and acknowledge definitely that you believe he has reconciled you to God, according to 2 Cor. 5: 19.

II. Definitely acknowledge God as your Father, and yourself as his redeemed and forgiven child, according to Gal. 3: 26.

III. Surrender yourself to be all the Lord's, body, soul and spirit; and count the question settled, no matter what the seemings may be, according to Rom. 12: 1.

IV. Definitely promise to obey God in everything where his will is made known.

V. Express in definite words your faith that he takes possession of that which you thus abandon to him, and that he begins at once to work in you to will and to do of his good pleasure, according to Phil. 2: 13.

VI. Consider yourself from henceforth as the garden, and the Lord as the Gardener, and definitely express your contentment with all the Divine Gardener's ways of dealing with you, whatever they may be. John 15: 1–5.

VII. Ask definitely for the Holy Spirit, according to Luke 11: 9–13, and then express in definite words your faith that what you have asked for is given, and that you have the petition you desired of him, according to 1 John 5: 14, 15.

VIII. Hold steadfastly here, with a forcible, courageous faith, keeping a conscience void of offence toward God and man, and walking steadily on in the path of obedience. Heb. 3: 6, 14.

IX. Pay no attention to your feelings as a test of your relations with God, but simply attend to the state of your will and of your faith.

X. Commit your especially besetting sins to the Lord, and definitely trust him to give you the victory, according to 1 John 5: 4, 5.

XI. Never, under any circumstances, give way for one single moment to doubt or discouragement. Remember that all discouragement is from the devil, and refuse to admit it.

XII. When questions as to duty arise, wait quietly until God makes his will plain.

XIII. Never go by impressions alone, but test every suggestion of duty by the harmony of all God's voices, through the voice of the Spirit in your heart, through the teaching of Scripture, through your own higher judgment, and through providential circumstances.

XIV. Never indulge in any self-reflective acts, either of congratulation over your successes, or of despair over your failures. At each moment commit the past to God, and forget it, according to Phil. 3:13.

XV. Cultivate the habit of expressing your faith in definite words, and repeat often, "I am all the Lord's and he is working in me now to will and to do of his good pleasure."

XVI. Reckon always with a simple and unwavering faith on the actual presence of God in every moment and condition of life, according to Matt. 28: 20.

XVII. If you fail in any of these particulars, simply begin again and do it over.

Follow these simple rules, then, faithfully and unwaveringly, dear, bewildered soul, and thou wilt assuredly find thyself brought out into the clear light of faith, with a plain path for thy feet to walk in.—H. W. S., in Times of Refreshing.

It is generally thought that there is nothing easier than to give good advice. It is so abundant and cheap, it is said, because it costs nothing. Now this may be applicable to much of the trite counsel and most of the well worn maxims that live upon the lips, but do not come from the heart; it may be true concerning such exhortations as we have been in the habit of hearing from one generation and passing on to the next, without much reference to their applicability; but it is not true of anything which honestly bears the name of good advice. That is not plentiful or easy to give.

Books are at last the best companions; they instruct us in silence without any display of superiority, and they attend the pace of each man's capacity, without reproaching him for his want of comprehension.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SPEAK GENTLY.

Speak gently! it is better far
To rule by love than fear;
Speak gently! let not harsh words mar
The good we might do here.

Speak gently! love doth whisper low
The vows that true hearts bind;
And gently Friendship's accents flow—
Affection's voice is kind.

Speak gently to the little child!
Its love be sure to gain;
Teach it in accents soft and mild;
It may not long remain.

Speak gently to the young! for they
Will have enough to bear;
Pass through this life as best they may,
'Tis full of anxious care.

Speak gently to the aged one!
Grieve not the care-worn heart!
The sands of life are nearly run;
Let such in peace depart.

Speak gently, kindly to the poor!
Let no harsh tone be heard!
They have enough they must endure,
Without an unkind word.

Speak gently to the erring! know
They must have toil'd in vain;
Perchance unkindness made them so—
O win them back again!

Speak gently! He who gave his life
To bend man's stubborn will,
When elements were in fierce strife,
Said to them, "Peace, be still!"

Speak gently! 'tis a little thing
Dropp'd in the heart's deep well;
The good, the joy which it may bring Eternity shall tell!

"FOLLOW COPY."

Printers have a rule that every compositor must follow the copy in printing any book or paper.

A short time since a lad in a printing office received from his master a list of Scripture questions and answers to be set up and printed. In the progress of the work the lad turned aside and asked the foreman if he should "follow copy;" that is, set up just as it is written. "Certainly," said the foreman; "why not?" "Because the copy is not like the Bible, and it professes to be the language of the book." "How do you know it is not like the Bible?" "Sir, I learned some of these verses at a Sunday-school ten years ago, and I know that two of them are not like the Bible." "Well, then, do not 'follow copy,' but set them up as they are in the Bible." The lad got the Bible and made it "the copy"—his guide and pattern.

"Follow copy," children, wherever you find it according to the Bible, but do not stir a step when you find it differs. Through all your life make the Bible your one copy. Look to your words, your actions, your doctrines and your practices; see that all are according to the Bible, and you will be right. Take nothing for your rule, either in religion or in daily life, but what is like that great unerring and divinely written copy.—Children's Messenger.

WHAT RELIGION DID FOR A LITTLE GIRL.

Religion helps children to study better and do more faithful work. A little girl of twelve was telling, in a simple way, the evidence that she was a Christian. "I did not like to study, but to play. I was idle at school and often missed my lessons. Now, I try to learn every lesson well to please God. I was mischievous at school when the teachers were not looking at me, making fun for the children to laugh at. Now, I wish to please God by behaving well and keeping the school laws. I was selfish at home; didn't like to run errands, and was sulky when mother called me from play to help her in work. Now it is a real joy to me to help mother in any way, and show that I love her."

Such a religion is essential to the best interests and moral growth of youth, and will make life cheerful.

THE ONLY CURE.

If you were seriously burnt and many remedies were brought to you, only one of which could certainly cure you, the others might do you some good, which remedy would you prefer?

The one that would certainly cure me.

Would you not try the others?

No, sir; try the one that cures certain.

There is but one cure for sin; in 1 John 1: 7, it is written, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." That only can cure the wounds sin has made. There are a great many remedies men talk about, such as infant sprinkling, which they call baptism; and then confirmation and penance, and other things. And we fear some think if they make a profession of religion and are baptized, even buried in the water, and join the church, that will cure them. But none of these reach the part where the disease is. The blood of Jesus alone, and faith in that, can do it.

A little girl giving her experience for membership, said: "I was converted the day the bee stung my mother." When asked what she meant by that, she replied, "When the bee stung my mother I cried and ran away, afraid he would sting me. She called me back and said, 'Don't be afraid, he can't sting you now, he has left his sting in my hand.' Then she told me that sin could not sting me either, if I believed in Jesus, for sin had left its sting in Jesus. I believed it, and ever since then I have felt I had a new heart."—Kind Words.

THE LITTLE SLAVE-MAKERS.

We told, in a recent number, of our young friend Karl's desire to see a battle between the red and the black ants. Aunt Kate yielded to his wish, and on a warm, sunshiny morning went to the spot where he had found the red ants' hill. It differed but slightly in appearance from that of the black ants, who lived, as she found, about ten feet from the reds. How to make warfare between these neighbors was a matter of serious consideration, but that Karl might learn the habits of these earnest toilers, she was willing to make an effort to arouse their warlike feeling.

First, Karl crumbled sugar at the opening of the red ants' nest, which had a hole on the side, about which were tiny bits of straw and fine points that screened the hole from view.

As if to see from whose hand this manna had fallen, two large red ants ventured forth. They tasted the sugar and found that it was good. They went back to the hill, spread the news, and hordes of red ants came out of the hole and busied themselves carrying home this spoil unexpected.

How to bring the black ants into the camp of the reds was the question, but Karl accidentally decided it. He made a line of sugar from one nest to the other, and thereby enticed the blacks to come forth to share the food. The reds attacked the skirmishers who came first from the black lines to spy out the land. Guerilla warfare ensued, each red fighting with a black, till, as was invariably the result, the red ants were in the end victorious. If the red ant conquered quickly he left his victim and went to the help of a fellow soldier who seemed to have more than a match in his antagonist. The battle raged all day and all night, and thousands of ants took part in it. Aunt Kate took home with her at sunset a number of the fighters, both black and red, and, observing them under a glass, she found that these soldiers did not weary of the contest until every black ant had been destroyed.

In the morning Karl was up bright and early to visit the battle-ground. The fight still continued, and, when Aunt Kate went to the field later in the day, the scene of carnage was distressing. The black warriors had been overcome, and the red soldiers were in possession of the black ants' fortress. Guards of red soldiers stood before the red ant-hill and also before the late home of the blacks. Lines of red ants were passing in and out of the hill of the blacks, carrying in their mouths little black balls. Aunt Kate did not know what these were, so she put them under the magnifying glass and soon discovered that the black ants held in their mouths pupæ or unhatched ants of their own kind. To protect these from the touch of the intruders, the nurses doubled themselves up about them, just as little kittens roll themselves up in a soft ball when any one tries to seize hold of them. Each red invader carried home a stranger ant, larvæ or pupæ, or small grey and little black ants, and all work seemed to cease until this capture of children to be brought up as slaves was ended. Then the organization of the captured forces ensued. Karl put leaves, wet with sugared water, near the red ants' nest, and also honey to tempt them. The black and red ants, with the young in charge, came out of the hill and sucked the sweets and fed their babies, and no soldier on duty attempted to prevent the passage of these nurses. These care-taking servants bring their charges out when the sun is warm and give them its benefits, and hastily carry them back to the nest if the weather is threatening. The large black ants were set to work enlarging the entrances to the hill and repairing the outside which had been marred in the fray. Red soldiers superintended the work of these black captives, and red ants worked by the side of the newly made slaves. Aunt Kate saw blacks transferred by the ants in command from one point to the other, as increased force might seem necessary, and no attempt to resist authority was made by these prisoners. The soldier in command simply touched the black slave with his antennæ, and at once he followed his captor wherever he led the way. The reds carried their wounded into the home, but left the most of their dead on the battle-ground. And attempts were observed on the part of the honey-pouched ants to nourish the disabled soldiers, and, while the wounded were tenderly carried into the hill, the dead soldiers were afterward brought out by their comrades. Doubtless these were the soldiers who had died from their wounds.

Aunt Kate's sympathies were, of course, with the black ants, who had been so completely overthrown by the reds, and she found that, after a day or two, many stragglers returned to the old home to find it deserted and their children in possession of their foes. But even then these sufferers patiently went to work again to put in order their sacked dwelling-place; and Karl said he hoped that in the next fight they would whip their enemies and release all their captive relations and friends.—The American Reformer.

TEMPERANCE.

HIGH LICENSE OR PROHIBITION?

No man advocates high license as a final panacea for the evils of intemperance. It is at best a make-shift devised to tide over the difficulties created by the present agitation. The liquor trade, to a large extent, is ready to accept it as the alternative of prohibition. They hope to evade it or in time to break it down. Meanwhile public sentiment is rising, as the waters of the Ohio last month rose when the snows melted on the slopes of the Alleghenies. To waste time in devising and executing half-way measures at such a time is not statesmanship. Wise and fearless minds always reach down toward fundamental principles and forward toward the final and decisive settlement of great questions. On this ground prohibition is advocated. No true friend of Temperance should be arrested in his course for one moment by the offer of the millions of dollars of revenue which this measure will pour into the public treasury. Like the golden apples thrown in the path of Atalanta, this bait is but a bribe to allure them from their course! It is gratifying to know that not a single prominent worker in the Temperance ranks has been seduced from consistent effort for prohibitory legislation by the proposal. Judge Noah Davis, of the Supreme Court of New York, has often been heard of late, in strong and clear denunciation of the liquor traffic as the chief fountain of pauperism and crime. He spoke on last Tuesday evening in New York at a great meeting called to advocate the passage of the high license bill, but his speech brought far more of comfort and help to the advocates of prohibition. He favors high license as a measure of restriction, because he deems total suppression for the present impossible. But he longs for and expects to see the day when no man shall be licensed to deal in the means of degradation and death. We append to this article a brief portion of his address:

"If a man can't do all the good he would like to do, he should do all the good he can. So I stand here in favor of this project of high license, but if I have a hope I desire to see realized it is that I shall live to see the day when no man, under the sanction of law, shall put a drop of intoxicating liquor to his neighbor's lips. [Applause.] That hour is coming. I read in the newspapers that the prophet of the Soudan sends before him the simple message: 'I am coming; be ready.' I hear in the air and on every hand the same message to the Temperance people of this country. I heard it last fall in Ohio when 320,000 people of that prudent child of the West marched to the ballot-box and voted for prohibition in the Constitution! I heard it in Kansas and Iowa, as it is now being heard in Maine, and despite all prediction and argument and criticism, I say it is coming with speedy steps everywhere, for it is borne on the hearts and best morality of fifty millions of people.

"God's and man's law prohibits murder, yet scarcely a week passes but some murder horrible and horrifying is committed. Shall we abolish the prohibition of murder on the plea that prohibition doesn't prohibit? We prohibit burglary and larceny, yet every day those crimes are committed, not only by men who pick your pocket, but by men who have taken solemn oaths to obey the law, and yet steal and plunder the taxes in the public treasury. Shall we, therefore, abolish our prohibition of larceny? No; we will maintain the law as far as possible and struggle to raise the public standard of morality so that all living agencies of hell shall be closed absolutely, and we will enforce it so far as human skill can. I wish to denounce nobody. But I would speak gingerly of liquor dealers only as I would of other men who commit like offences. My twenty-nine years' experience as judge have taught me that, of all the causes of sin and misery, of sorrow and woe, of pauperism and wretchedness, intoxicating liquor stands forth the unapproachable chief. Within the last three days a poor weeping mother came to me to ask my help in getting her son pardoned out of the State Prison. I told him that if he would give me the name of the man who sold him the rum which led to his crime I would remit a large part of his sentence, and would impose the severest penalty the law would permit upon the poisoner who served him with the rum. Shall I be mealy-mouthed when I speak of such men? While I live I will denounce the rascality that sells liquor to men, women and children, with as much violence as God gives me power to utter. And my mouth shall never be closed against the evil that my position shows to be the chief source of all the evil that drags my fellow-men down and opens the gates of hell upon them."—Christian Statesman.

THE TEMPERANCE REVIVAL

In this city under Francis Murphy continues with unabated interest. Some of the churches of the West Side are filled night after night, and thousands have signed the pledge. Among the converts and the most remarkable of them is W. W. O'Brien, a well known criminal lawyer, whose wit and eloquence joined with unscrupulous methods have gained him much success. Dissipation had taken strong hold upon him, and only a few days ago he was seen drunk in the streets. He has been persuaded to sign the pledge and begin a new life. To a Tribune reporter Mr. O'Brien speaks thus of his pledge:

"No man other than Francis Murphy could ever have persuaded me to take the step I have in this matter. His mission is certainly a glorious one, and cannot but be successful, for the reason that he is a good man with a sympathizing heart that is ever yearning to better the condition and relieve the misery of his fallen fellow man. In his speeches he appeals to the humanity of his hearers, and begs them to extend the hand of fellowship to the fallen drunkard, and by kind and Christian forbearance to patiently labor with him until they have at last started him well on the road to reform. Mr. Murphy abuses nobody, not even the saloon-keeper; but with irresistible pathos and eloquence appeals to the unfortunate to have hope, to take courage, trust in God, and manfully strike out with a determination to reform, trusting to the grace of God to enable them to persevere in their good determination. I am merely on trial. Let me prove my sincerity in the cause by fighting against my weakness and resisting temptation. Then, if I am successful, it will be time for me to raise my voice in public. With the help of God I will persevere."

A HEROIC CURE.—A negro who had for many years led a wicked life was converted by a sermon which he chanced to hear, and tried to undo in his age the evil he had done in his youth and manhood. He had been obscene and profane, but he became gentle and respectful. He had been very drunken, but he became a total abstainer, and a strong advocate of temperance. When asked if the appetite for drink, so long nourished, did not trouble him, he replied that it did grievously, but that he had been enabled to resist it. One time it came so strong that he felt unable to contend with it if he went out, and he remained in bed for two days, till the fit passed away. What do reformed men think of this cure for a return of their temptation?—N. Y. Witness.

A youth of seventeen died in Montreal last week, after eating some ground cocoa-nut, with all the symptoms of poisoning, one of which was continuous vomiting. It was found on examination by physicians, that excessive tobacco chewing had so weakened his system and injured his stomach that he could not stand what would in ordinary cases only have caused a slight illness. A companion who had also eaten the ground cocoa-nut was ill with similar symptoms, but much less severe, and next day he was well.—Inter Ocean.

The devil takes another loop in the cord which binds India to his car. The British Government permits the establishment of beet-stills where a cheap liquor is made, and drunkenness is frightfully increased. Missionaries and the good people of the country expostulate; but the officials close their ears, because the revenue is greatly increased. A missionary of the Woman's Union Missionary Society, writing to the Missionary Link, says: "How it has stirred me to the very depths to have a lady come home and say she could not have Sunday school because the children were drunk!"—Review and Herald.

THE CHURCHES.

—Pastor James Brand of the First church, Oberlin, has arranged to have Pres. J. Blanchard preach for him next Sabbath, June 1st.

—An encouraging revival is in progress among the Free Methodist brethren of Platteville, Wisconsin, where the denomination has an academy.

—Thirty churches and ten thousand communicants have been added to the Presbytcrian Synod of New Jersey in the past ten years.

—During the twenty years just closed $2,500,000 have passed through the treasury of the Church Extension Committee of the Methodist church, which has aided in the erection of 4,500 houses of worship, worth to-day $8,000,000, with 1,000,000 sittings.

—The former Quaker preacher Mrs. Sarah F. Smiley, has been licensed by Bishop Doane of Albany, to read and explain the Scriptures, "in such parishes as she is invited to teach in by the rectors."

—The Roman Catholics were about to purchase the Third Presbyterian Church of Jersey City, under a mortgage of $35,000, when a Mr. Mackenzie paid the indebtedness upon the conditions, first, that it should hereafter be known as the Scotch Church of Jersey City; second, that indebtedness for current expenses should never be a lien upon the property; and, third, that no instrumental music should be used in worship.

—The evangelical ministers of Cincinnati, Ohio, met some time ago. to consider the religious condition of the city, and a vote was passed instructing the Executive Committee to correspond with Mr. Moody, and invite him to spend at least three months in Cincinnati, in continuous evangelizing work next fall and winter. He has written a very cordial letter in reply to their invitation, in which he says: "If the health of my son, now somewhat impaired, and a source of anxiety to me, should permit me to plan for my winter's work as I am now inclined to I will come to you."

—There are in Chicago, says a correspondent of the Congregationalist, 40,000 Bohemians. In Cleveland there are 20,000 more. Most of them are Roman Catholics, generally in humble circumstances, industrious, frugal and intensely clannish, with a pretty active sense of independence. But it is added they are not a particularly religious people, and in order to begin evangelistic work among them Rev. Edwin A. Adams, for ten years a missionary of the American Board in Bohemia, has been invited to Chicago to look over the field, with a view to undertaking a mission enterprise. The Congregational ministers have taken up the matter in earnest and several thousand dollars have been raised to sustain the mission.

—The Rev. J. H. Ballagh writes April 7th to the Christian Intelligencer, from Yokohama, Japan, that at the meeting of the Eastern Chiu Kuwai, then just held in Tokio, an increase of about 100 members was reported since the autumn meeting. He adds: "We had large audiences yesterday at both native and foreign services, an interesting prayer-meeting last evening and indications anew of fresh measures of grace. The news from Saikio, of the Doshisa School, is very encouraging. Thirty conversions are reported and only ten unconverted pupils left in the school (of about 100); a great deepening of piety and the work extending to churches in Osaka and Kobe. Similar good tidings reach us by telegraph from Sendai, 200 to 300 miles north of Tokio. We are having interesting morning meetings for prayer in the schools and churches at Yokohama, held simultaneously."

—The news of the admission into the English church of Pandita Ramabai, the learned Brahman woman now studying in England, has created a great stir among her Hindu friends at home.

—A Mr. J. F. Hartley has been giving some figures illustrative of Sunday-school progress in the Sunday-school Chronicle. According to this well informed writer there are in Great Britain and Ireland 674,704 Sunday-school teachers and of scholars (not including Roman Catholic schools, regarding which it is stated information could not easily be obtained), there are over 6,000,000. In the United States, which is held to represent 50,000,- of people, it is estimated that there are about 1,000,000 of teachers and nearly 7,000,000 of scholars. The calculation is that in the United Kingdom the proportion of teachers to scholars is about one in nine, and that in America it is about one in seven.

—The Synod of Japan comprises three presbyteries, thirty-one churches, twenty-one ordained native ministers, fourteen licensed preachers, seventeen theological students, sixteen helpers unlicensed, four Bible-women, 117 young men in colleges, 2.449 church-members, 1,177 Sunday-school scholars, and a great many children in the boarding and day-schools.

—In the Presbyterian General Assembly at Saratoga last week the Rev. Dr. James A. P. McGaw submitted the report of the standing committee on temperance. Resolutions were adopted against intemperance and the liquor traffic; recommend that all synods and presbyteries appoint the committee on temperance; that the Presbyterian committee arrange for the holding of a temperance institute; that ministers be urged to preach on temperance; that laws for the suppression of the traffic in liquor should be enforced; commending the action of four States in legislating for lectures to scholars about the dangers of alcohol; that the Assembly gratefully recognizes the power of the press, both religious and secular, in moulding public opinion and stimulating to right action on this subject, and recommends increased use of this agency in meeting local issues and in dissemination of facts and principles which are suited to advance the cause.

—Dr. Nevius has made an estimate that there are, or were, in round numbers about 300,000 idol temples in China; and at the rate of ten idols to each temple, there would be 3,000,000 idols. These temples he estimates to have cost at least $1,000,000,000! And the money which is spent annually by this people in worship and in the repairs of these buildings, as well as the building of new ones, is simply beyond conception. In Soochow one of the largest temples has recently been overhauled and repaired, at an expense, it is said, of $70,000—largely given by one man, who thereby is supposed to get great merit.

—A note to us from a well known missionary in Japan says that missionaries feel that they are on the verge of great events in Japan. 1. The public recognition of Christianity as equal in the eyes of the law with other religions. 2. The opening of the country to further and fuller intercourse. 3. The public movement to Christianity of a large element who are convinced of its excellence, but are held back while Christianity is under a ban. These are important considerations, and should encourage Christians everywhere to renewed activity.—Independent.

—The following note from the Bloomington, Ill., Leader, reminds the reader of a similar secession of lodge-lovers from a United Brethren church in West Virginia and their establishment by a Congregational council of which Rev. W. W. Patton was a prominent member: "The pastor and trustees of the German Lutheran church on S. Madison street have declared against Masonry and all similar secret societies, and in consequence several influential members have withdrawn and a church is being formed with more liberal tendencies, particularly in the matter of the lodge. The new society is looking for temporary quarters until they can build, and are negotiating with the Free Congregational church for the lease of their basement or lecture room."

—That irrepressible "Pauline missionary," Rev. William Taylor, coming from his world-wide mission as a lay delegate to the General Conference of the M. E. church, has already sought legislation in the interests of the great work he represents, by offering the following, which was referred to the committee on missions: "I want this body to say that it is lawful and right to get people converted to God and to organize them into self-supporting Methodist Episcopal churches in foreign countries just as we have always been accustomed to do in the United States, and that such churches under the jurisdiction of our bishops, fulfilling the disciplinary conditions of membership, shall be eligible to direct legitimate relation to the Methodist Episcopal church without being put under the jurisdiction of the missionary society of such churches, opposing no bar to. but assisting the missionary society in the work of founding missions among the poor in the same countries; that the rule under which young ministers may be ordained for foreign work at the beginning instead of the end of their probation may be made applicable to a minister sent to foreign self-supporting fields; and that the bishops be authorized to organize a West Coast Conference in South America as soon as they deem it advisable."—Ev. Messenger.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

We gather from the Washington correspondence of the Christian Standard an interesting account of the late annual convention for the support of the McAll mission in France, addressed by Rev. Wm. Stone of Hartford and Pasteur Jean Paul Cooke of France:

Mr. Stone spoke of the brief existence and origin of Mr. McAll's labors in France. While returning from an Alpine district, where he had sojourned for a rest, and to recuperate health, Mr. McAll visited the French capital and preached to some laboring men in the vicinity of the Louvre. He noted with what deep seriousness these men received the news of a Saviour to whom they themselves could appeal. At once the church in England was informed of his intention to remain, and this earnest Christian man settled with his family right among the most incontrollable sections of Communists. No one had dared to go before, but like the trust that Daniel had, he made his home here fearlessly. His house was opened for services, and a school for children and mothers his wife established.

Gradually the leaven spread, until in that part of old Paris across the Seine, where for years none but an armed regiment could go in safety, this man's work became known. Testaments were in so many homes, children went in the dark, narrow streets singing of the sweet old story of Christ's love to a fallen world. Men, rough and hardened almost to the degree of criminals, gathered in the little yard about this Christian home on the Lord's day, and with bare heads received into "good soil" and "among thorns" the precious words of salvation. Today, scarcely ten years old, Mr. McAll's teaching has founded nearly thirty meeting stations or halls in the great capital, and fifty more over all France.

Mr. Stone alluded to the Huguenots, that they were the steady power of this nation. Though Carlyle had said, "In the revolution France was a nation in hysterics," the influence of these people still was manifest, and had been the means to secure the formation of the republic; and through this strong middle class, who resist encroachments of the higher, and suppress anarchy from the lower, we can hope to give Christ to France. The old families of that oppressed party say, and we believe it is typical of the spirituality of the nation, that when the Huguenots left France they departed in the night, leaving the lights burning in their cottages. Can we not thank God these lights have never been extinguished?

Pasteur Cooke, who has given the past twenty years of his life to carry the gospel into priest-ridden villages of his country, spoke long and earnestly of his people and the necessity of sending now the gospel to France. Citing the barriers to the growth of Christianity, he said it was not Romanism; that the priest, except in obscure districts, as Brittany, etc., had no further power to prevent people from reading the word of God. In Paris they had absolutely no control over their churchmen.

In further exoneration that the French "love darkness," he spoke of the downfall of the Conspiracy of Silence, which, till ten years ago, was everywhere formed, making it unpopular to discuss religion on the trains, in the hotels or social assemblies.

"Then," Mr. Cooke continued, "my version of the difficulty of evangelizing France is that our people have no consciousness of sin; that the ideas and practices of priestcraft and infallibility has obliterated the consciences of my people." Many pathetic and sadly humorous stories were told illustrating this painfully apparent truth. Of children, innocent, clapping their hands in joy at the suggestion of another "sin" to enroll for the priest's pardon; "lest he should scold me, and might not think I told him all, if he saw so few written down," as a little school girl said.

In closing, Mr. Cooke related the circumstance of a recent meeting in Paris of leading Protestant workers in response to an appeal from Mr. McAll. Until this session ministers of all denominations had occasionally helped the English mission, and when Mr. McAll, from the necessity of the hour, as many were striving to come to Christ and be his truly, had suggested the converts take communion in the halls where they were converted, there was immediate dissension among the pastors who had helped him, and utterances were made if he should permit this to be done he would found a new personal church. The commitee or assemblage met, and note the result, apostolic Christians. It was decided that the converts under Mr. McAll should take communion with the nearest evangelical church. And, Mr. Cooke remarked to the Presbyterian supporters of this mission, some fellowship with Methodists, some with the Baptist churches, and so on.

THE WOMEN OF CHINA.

The condition of women there I could talk about till midnight,—the most dreadful and sad thing in all China. If any man wants to compare any heathen religion with Christianity, even what is generally considered to be the purest and loftiest—the Confucian system of ethics—there are a dozen different tests; but I beg that the condition of woman where Christ has not come be noticed. There is nothing that makes a man's heart bleed so in all Chinese life as the condition of woman,—ignorant, abject, slave and drudge as she is of man, from the day of her birth to the day of her death. But Christian women can get access to them, and that is why we need women missionaries and women physicians in China. The most expert physicians in the world would not be allowed to go and prescribe for a woman; for it is contrary to their ideas of propriety; and hence I rejoice that female physicians are going to India and China. I had the pleasure of knowing some of them and seeing them in their work, and I think I may be pardoned upon the soil of Michigan for saying that I took pride in knowing that four of them were all graduates of the university with which I had the pleasure of being connected. I felt a sort of fatherly interest in them.—Pres. Angell, University of Mich., at Annual Meeting of A. B. C. F. M.

THE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—There are 447 Grand Army "Posts" or lodges reported in Illinois. In Iowa the same order has 14,093 members, a reported gain of 8,894 in a year.

—The Congregational church of Canton, Ill., gave up its house of worship to the G. A. R. lodge on Sabbath, May 25. The Sabbath before 1500 members of the same order from Cincinnati, Milwaukee and elsewhere spent the time visiting the painting representing the battle of Gettysburg, on exhibition in this city. That was about the measure of their regard for the God whose overruling power preserved us a nation at that bloody battle.

—The people of Will county, Ill., will celebrate the next Fourth of July by laying the corner-stone of the new county court house, which is to be erected in Joliet. But the good citizens of the county have turned over their rights and honor on the occasion to the Freemasons; and a court house so begun will be likely to continue under the dark and treacherous control of the same influence to the betrayal of justice and right.

—The Knight Templar grand commandery of Connecticut has passed a resolution to the effect that any knights in its jurisdiction who shall confer, communicate, or sell, or assist in conferring, communicating or selling or soliciting any one to receive or apply for any so-called Masonic degrees limited to Freemasons not recognized by the commandery, shall be liable to expulsion from the rights and privileges of knighthood.

—The oath of the Grand Army of the Republic as given in the ritual adopted in 1868 ought to be read at the head of every procession of this lodge which parades before the public as the conservator of patriotism on so-called "Decoration" day, that God-fearing American citizens may know the influences that are leading them into the snares of lodgery: "I do solemnly swear, in presence of Almighty God, and these witnesses, my former companions in arms, that I will never, under any pretense, nor for any purpose whatever, expose the secrets of this encampment. That I will never make known, or cause to be made known, any of the hidden mysteries, work, or ritual of this band of comrades, whereby the same may come to the knowledge of the uninitiated. I do further solemnly swear, that I will never wrong a soldier or his family, nor suffer others to wrong them, if in my power to prevent it; but that I will, on all occasions, when not inconsistent with the duty I owe to God, my country, and myself, assist him and his family. That I will sustain for all offices of trust and profit, other things equal, the Citizen Soldier of the Republic. I do further swear, that I will yield implicit obedience to the Encampment of which I may be a member, and to the lawful rules and of the Grand Encampment, to which this is subordinate; and I further promise and declare, that should any books or papers belonging to this Encampment come or be placed in my hands, I will neither print or copy any portion thereof, except by special permission of the Grand Encampment. I do further swear, that I take this obligation upon myself without any mental reservation or equivocation, under no less a penalty than that of being treated and punished as a Traitor by this order. So help me God and keep me steadfast."

—What is the punishment of a traitor? Says the Michigan Holiness Record on the above oath: "After taking this oath the recruit is reminded what it is to be 'punished as a traitor' by the sight (the covering being removed from his eyes as he kneels) before him of an open coffin, spade, shovel, and the usual implements of executions, with the Guard drawn up in front representing a firing party. Every one knows that the punishment of a traitor is death. This order claims to take upon itself the right to take human life—the greatest violation of the laws of our country—yet claims to be a patriotic institution."

Two slaves formerly owned by Jeff Davis now own his plantation, for which they paid $200,000.

—The State convention favoring equal suffrage at Flint, Mich., elected Mary L. Doe president and Governor Begole vice-president. A constitution and by-laws were also adopted. Mrs. Helen M. Gougar was one of the prominent speakers.

GUIZOT'S

HISTORY OF

FRANCE.

From the Earliest Times to 1848.

Eight volumes, small octavo, large type, over 400 fine illustrations. Price reduced from nearly $50 to only $6.00 per set, 75 cents per volume. Volume I. now ready; others at intervals of ten days. Sample volume sent postpaid, with privilege to return, 65 cents.

This is the only complete American edition of this magnificent work, which is known as the best popular history of France. The cost of importation is $36.00, and the only other American edition (which is incomplete, covering only five of the eight volumes here given, and not including even the French Revolution), is, at this time, $33.00. The present edition is unabridged, and includes the more than four hundred really superb illustrations of the English edition, and its convenience of form, for reading and the library shelves, is superior to any other edition published.

Guizot is one of the most brilliant writers whose pen has ever pictured the events of history. His pages fairly glow with eloquent fire. One thrills, as he reads, and follows on, page after page, as he would an entrancing romance of Scott or Dickens. And what more inviting subject could be chosen for such a writer than the history of France?—France, the home of Chevalier Bayard, and the great Napoleon; of Joan of Arc, and Lafayette; of the Huguenots, and the execrable monsters of St. Bartholomew's Day; of Voltaire, and Bosseut; of Fenelon, Racine, and St. Pierre.

And, probably, never was historical work more graphically and sumptuously—fittingly illustrated. My first announcement was planned to include only 100 illustrations, but I found it so difficult to select, or rather, to omit, that I was compelled to yield to the temptation to include the more than FOUR HUNDRED original pictures.

Accordingly, in keeping with the brilliant text and magnificent illustrations, I have undertaken to give, in this edition, the handsomest and best work which have ever issued from my presses—and I present it with real pride and unquestioned confidence that my patrons will approve.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. FARM AND GARDEN.

GREEN CORN FOR PIGS.

In the summer and early fall feeding of pigs, we have found sweet corn one of the best and most convenient kinds of fodder. Pork is made to the best advantage by putting the pigs, as soon as they are weaned from the sow and have learned to eat milk and meal, into the pen, and keeping them there under full feed until they are ready for slaughter in November or December. With a good breed of swine there is no difficulty in making March pigs weigh from 250 to 300 pounds at eight or nine months old. With plenty of Indian meal and skimmed milk they will grow rapidly until the corn is large enough for cutting. About the first of August this should be given as an additional ration. The pigs will eat the green stalks and leaves with the greatest relish after the ears have been plucked. It is an excellent appetizer, helps the digestion of more solid food, and promotes the thrift of the animals. Field corn may not be quite so nutritious, but no better use can be made of that, after the ears are in milk, than to cut and feed it to fattening swine. It costs much less to make pork in summer than in cold winter weather.—American Agriculturist.

HOW TO HANDLE BEES.

A bee raiser in Ireland communicates to the Farmers' Gazette (Dublin) his experience in the management of bees, from which we extract as follows:

Some people get into a fury of excitement whenever they see a bee or hear its hum, though it be only intent on gathering a little honey from the nearest flower. They shout and wallop about them with hands or handkerchiefs, as if they were being attacked by an enemy. Such are just the people who generally get stung. Let the bee alone, even though it be buzzing close to your face. In all likelihood it is only animated by curiosity. Make a fuss about it, strike it, or get it entangled in your clothes or hair, and blame yourself if you feel its javelin. When engaged in collecting honey or pollen from the flowers, no amount of teasing will cause it to sting unless you hurt or entangle it. Even when a swarm fills the air you may safely walk about in the midst of it, only let your motions be slow and deliberate. Should they alight on your hands or face, never mind, they will soon fly again; they are only resting. In such a case go slowly aside, and give yourself a gentle shake or two, but refrain from brushing or beating at the bees. Avoid, however, standing in the line of the flight of bees going from or returning to their hives. At such times they have such an impetus that before they are aware of your presence they get entangled in your hair, and are apt to resent your obtrusiveness. So much for one's passive behavior. Let us now suppose ourselves engaged in necessary action. First let us learn these principles:

1. Bees never attack when their stomachs are filled with honey or other liquid sweet. This is their normal condition when swarming, and therefore they are then harmless, as also when returning laden to their hives.

2. Neither do they attack when thoroughly frightened. We frighten bees by blowing smoke among them, or by rapping rather violently on their hives.

3. When bees are alarmed in a hive by smoke or concussion, their first impulse is to fill their honey bags from their combs.

4. Bees in a hive that is constantly being rapped against will in a few minutes rush bodily out from among their combs into an empty skep or box set over them.

Suppose now we wish to get all the bees out of a common straw hive. We provide the needful empty skep and four wood or iron pins, six or seven inches long, a roll of burning rags, unless we possess a modern bellows, smoker, or tobacco pipe, and a stool or empty pail, on which to steady the hive while operating. We now approach the hive, blow three or four whiffs of smoke into the entrance to drive in any loiterers, gently raise the edge from the floor board, and repeat the smoking. Without the least jar, now lift the hive boldly up, and gently turn the mouth upward. If the bees show any sign of being ill-natured, give them a puff occasionally. Set the crown of the hive on to the stool or pail, and see that it is steady, and having the side where the bees are thickest raised an inch or two; now fix the empty skep over the other by sticking two of the pins into the lower hive, about an inch or two below the highest part of its edge, so as to support the edge of the empty skep. The other pins, sharpened at both ends, are placed as supports between the skeps. They will thus touch each other at one side, the other being open so as to give a full view.

Now commence rapping, gently at first, but gradually with more force, against the sides of the lower hive. In a few seconds the bees will commence to run as if for life to the upper hive. Among them may be seen the queen if a sharp lookout be kept. The great art here is in keeping the bees in one continuous, steady stream. Once they take a stand it is not so easy to dislodge them. Five to ten minutes should suffice to finish the operation if the room be warm. The driven bees may now be shaken about or tumbled from one hive to another without the slightest risk of stings.

If the weather be cold, or the operation be performed at a season when there is no unsealed honey in the hive, a little warm sirup should be sprinkled on the bees before commencing to drive.

In our modern hives we use less ceremony in dislodging the bees. After a whiff of smoke, we simply lift the frames of comb one at a time, give them a shake in front of the hive or skep we want to get the bees into, and in a minute whisk off the few that remain with a feather.

In getting bees into a hive we either pour them down in front of it, directing their course to its entrance with a feather, or shake them at once on the top of the frames, and cover instantly with a cloth.

To secure a swarm that has issued and clustered on a tree or bush, we advise, if possible, to cut the branch off after all are settled. If this be done gently, the bees can then be carried to the stand they are to occupy, laid down at the door of their new hive, and directed with a feather, as before; otherwise we hold an inverted skep below the cluster, give the branch one sharp rap, cover the skep, into which the bees will fall, with a cloth, and carry it to its future abode.

To make a simple examination of a colony in a bar frame hive, the quilt is removed, a puff or two of smoke given, and the frames are lifted one at a time, with as little jar as possible. Both sides can be examined, the queen seen and captured if desired, and the entire secrets of the hive discovered without hurting a bee or receiving a sting.

HONEYSUCKLES.

Thos. Meehan, in the Germantown Independent, says: "Honeysuckles are old favorites in gardens, and many suppose there is nothing new to be said about them. But there are now more kinds known than there were a few years ago, and some of the newer sorts differ in many respects from the older ones. The Chinese and Japan sorts are probably the best known of all, with the addition of the Belgian. The two former flower at the same time in the spring. Both are desirable, and are often planted together, on account of the contrast of color of the leaves and branches, the Chinese having red stems and leaves of the same tint, while the Japan is of a dark, shining green. The Japan is of a dense growth, and is the more desirable of the two, when the object is to form a screen as well as to have bloom. Then, too, the Japan is very nearly evergreen, a great portion of the leaves keeping on until spring, especially when not too badly exposed to cutting winds. The Belgian is not a good one for climbing, but for rock work, or covering an old stump, or similar purpose, where dense growth is not wanted, it is very well suited. It is one of the honeysuckles which has a honey scent to the flowers, and it blooms occasionally throughout the summer. But for a succession of flowers, there are none equal the newer one called Halleana, or Hall's honeysuckle. This does not commence to bloom so early as the others named, but then it flowers so profusely, and the blooms continue to come more or less all summer, that it is a sort which can not be done without, where flowers are an object. It is not alone its ever-blooming qualities which recommend it. It is besides a very strong grower, the best in that respect, in fact, of any of the sorts. The leaves are not of such a glossy green as those of the Japan, but they are very persistent in the winter time. It is a sort which pleases all who have it. There are other kinds of honeysuckles valuable in collections and for certain places, such as our native scarlet and yellow sorts, which are yet occasionally met in our woods hereabouts. It will be a long time before any vine is found to supersede the honeysuckle for planting about our homes."

A NEW

Anti-masonic Scrap-book.

A neat pamphlet, comprising forty-three tracts against secret orders, published by the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. It contains some of the MOST POWERFUL ARGUMENTS put in brief form, written by men of distinguished ability, showing the evil nature and dangerous tendency of secret societies. Those who circulate tracts need the book to make their selections wisely.
Send for a copy to Anti-masonic headquarters, the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO. Price, 25 cents.

IN BRIEF.

An exchange says that a blast in a limestone quarry near Bodie, Cal., uncovered five petrified gull's eggs. Scientists are now wrestling with the question: "Can a petrified gull lay an egg?"

Stable-keeper—"By the way, shall I put in an extra buffalo?" English Blood—Couldn't you let me 'ave an 'orse, you know? Er—er—rather not drive a buffalo first time, you know."

Mr. George William Curtis has written Mayor Martin of Boston, declining to accept the generous sum appropriated as compensation for delivering the eulogy on Wendell Phillips, and saying that in selecting him for the duty the city of Boston conferred on him the greatest honor of his life.

Edward King writes from Paris: "I hear that ex-Gov. Leland Stanford of California, who has been here for some time past and who is in very bad health, has decided to give several millions of dollars out of his immense fortune to the founding of a university for the sons of workingmen. This institution will probably be located in the State of California, and will be named after Gov. Stanford's only son, who died recently in Florence of malarial fever."

The New Orleans daily Picayune of May 15th was printed on paper made of bagasse, the refuse of the sugar-cane fibre. It is a superior paper and its inventors claim that it can be produced at less cost than chemical wood paper, and that it will make a better sheet for the money than any paper mill in the United States can produce from other material.

The National Library at Madrid alone contains 600,000 printed books and 30,000 MSS, while the university boasts of nearly 137,000 books and an equal number of MSS. Then the private collections are numerous and splendid. The Duke of Ossuna's possessions move students of the Elizabethan drama to jealousy. He has 3,000 MSS. plays, including many of Lope de Vega, of the great age of the Spanish theatre.

The agile climbers of the telegraph poles will shortly find their occupation gone. The New York Assembly has passed the bill compelling the telegraph and telephone companies to put their wires under ground, and the dangerous and unsightly obstructions which disfigure our streets will in due time be consigned to oblivion. It will cost a great deal of money to place the wires in suitable subways, but once they are there the cost of maintenance and the liability to damage and interruption will be materially reduced.—N. Y. Sun.

The snapping of an electric light pole on Fifth avenue, New York, let the wires down into the street fully charge. A passing horse stepped on the wire and received such a violent shock that it was flung motionless to the ground, and in attempting to lift the body of the horse the driver received a shock scarcely less energetic, being thrown down. After a time the animal recovered sufficiently to walk to the stable, but the shock produced a fatal effect. It is said that even the harness was so charged that there was danger in touching it. The horse appeared dull and lifeless, but was covered with sweat and was very much heated.

The mud geyser thrown up near Wheeling, W. Va., still remains a mystery. The discharge of matter from the orifice, which is about two feet in diameter and smoothly drilled in a solid rock, has ceased, but the evidences of phenomenal action remain. All efforts to measure the depths of the shaft have failed because of the force of the gaseous discharge. Heavy timber dropped endwise into the aperture, after descending below the surface is hurled into the air with terrific force. About the orifice is a considerable mound of mud, stones and coal thrown out by the gaseous discharge, and as the nearest coal vein is sixty feet below the surface, the well must be at least that deep. All efforts to fire the invisible discharge force have failed, and the water thrown out is as cold as ice, thus making it certain that heat and natural gas have nothing to do with the mystery.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Well Pleased.

Dr. C. ROBERTS, Winchester, Ill., says: "I have used it with entire satisfaction in cases of debility from age or overwork, and in inebriates and dyspeptics, and am well pleased with its effects."

A WOMAN'S WOES.

A TALE OF SUFFERING, WITH A SEQUEL OF HAPPINESS—SOME DOMESTIC EXPERIENCES.

The following letter to the Kansas City Times describing the striking, almost dramatic experience of an American lady is so interesting and pictures so clearly the feelings and emotions of others that we reproduce it entire. It will be found very readable and instructive:

Messrs. Editors: Did I not know that this land is filled with women who are unhappy and cannot tell the reason; are miserable when they have every reason to be joyous, I should not venture to address you this letter. I believe, however, I can offer some suggestions that will be valuable to all women and invaluable to many. When I was fifteen years old I presume I was happier and healthier than most girls in America to-day. I hardly knew what pain was except by hearsay. But the situation changed suddenly and severely. I became aware that something was undermining my life. I felt strange sensations that would come and go and then return with greater power than before. My side pained me at times and again I would feel a dull aching between the shoulders. I had darting pains through my temples and a pressure on top of my head. I lost sleep, appetite and flesh, and my friends feared I was going into a decline. I know that the feelings I then had are not an uncommon occurrence among women, both young and old, but I did not realize what it meant at that time, and so was careless—with what results will appear. From then until within the past two years I have seen but few comfortable days, and I am now fifty-five years old.

A few years after the events above stated my heart began to trouble me. At times I would feel acute, darting pains, and a gurgling as if water was forming. My entire right side enlarged and I felt sharp, cutting pangs through my lungs and around my shoulder blades. I could only breathe in catches or gasps and then with the greatest effort. I was without appetite one day and the next very hungry, but always constipated. During all those years I did not know what these troubles meant nor did I realize how terribly they must end. Of course I tried to overcome them; consulted doctors and used remedies, but it was of no avail. My troubles increased with the years; I had a severe pain in the small of my back; my teeth became loosened; my tongue swelled to twice its natural size; my gums were like sponges, bleeding freely at times, and my lungs and nose both bled on different occasions. At that time I felt cold chills running up my back and I constantly expectorated a brown mucous substance that was very offensive. The fluids I passed were frequently like bloody milk and then again almost solid albumen. For thirty years I did not know what it was to be free from headache. Occasionally I would have a feeling of suffocation followed by hot flashes and a profuse perspiration. God only knows what I suffered for I cannot deseribe it. I only know that I existed and that my tired life was ebbing away with nothing to arrest decay.

I was in this condition a little over two years ago and neither myself nor my friends expected or hoped for anything but death. Picture, if you can, nearly forty years of agony, and you can understand why we felt in that way. But a brighter day came. I began a new manner of treatment and I saw new results. My pain became less intense. The most severe symptoms decreased. My hope revived and I seemed awakening to another life. I continued to improve until my health and strength returned, thus enabling me to carry out a desire which I consider a duty in writing you this letter and saying that my life, health and hope for coming years are due wholly to Warner's Safe Cure, which has done wonders for me, and also restored many of my friends.

Many who may read these lines will possibly think I am over-enthusiastic. Is it possible to be over-enthusiastic after being delivered from a life of misery and brought into a world of comfort and happiness? Was the blind man mentioned in the Bible, whose sight was restored, too enthusiastic? The fact is I am only doing what I believe to be my duty in making my experience public, for I know there are myriads of women who are going into the same dark path unless they are warned in time and saved as I have been. This is a most serious matter and one which concerns the welfare of the nation as well as the happiness of the people. If the mothers of this land are unhealthy America will become a nation of invalids, and any means which can so safely and surely avert this danger as that which I have described, should be gladly welcomed by all true men and women.

The Culture of Beauty.

ALTHOUGH nature alone can produce perfect beauty, art may in a great measure supply nature's deficiencies. We see this instanced in the clearness and lustre imparted to even a sallow skin by Glenn's Sulphur Soap. The lady of forty, who uses this beautifier, drops at least ten years of her age. Unlike the dangerous cosmetics which obstruct the pores, it is entirely harmless. See that "C. N. Crittenton, Proprietor," is printed on each packet, without which none is genuine. Sold by druggists and fancy goods dealers.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The House of Representatives Monday, by a vote of 137 to 113, refused to take up the bankruptcy bill, which is regarded as a practical defeat of the bill for this session, and probably for this Congress.

—Senator Aldrich's substitute for the House labor bureau bill was passed by the Senate Friday. It provides for the establishment of a labor bureau in the Department of the Interior, which shall be under charge of a commissioner, to hold office for four years, who shall collect data relating to capital and labor, and make an annual report to the Secretary of the Interior.

—The Secretary of State has received a dispatch from our Minister in Mexico announcing the President of the republic had, in accordance with the decree of the Chamber of Deputies of Mexico, given effect to its appropriation of $100,000, to defray the expenses of the Government of Mexico at the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition at New Orleans.

—The death of Sam Ward, who for years was the best known and most successful lobbyist in Washington, is announced to have occurred in Italy, May 9th. He was a brother of Julia Ward Howe, the poet and woman suffrage advocate, and was a man of unusual ability. His chief notoriety was in connection with the lobbies that surrounded the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses, and he was called "Vestibuli Rex," a title of which he was very proud.

COUNTRY.

—Measles are epidemic at Shelbyville, Ill. There are 100 cases under treatment and six deaths occurred last week.

—A boiler explosion near Lewisburg, Ark., Saturday evening, killed two persons and fatally injured two others.

—Patrick Flannigan's house at Lafayette, Ind., was burned Wednesday night by incendiaries in revenge, as is alleged, because he voted the Republican ticket at the recent election. His two little children narrowly escaped death.

—Isaac M. Veitch, a distinguished citizen of St. Louis, died suddenly Thursday afternoon, aged 65. He had just delivered a speech to the Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Missouri, dropped into his office and expired before medical aid arrived.

—The Cincinnati Lead Pipe and Sheet Company's works at Cincinnati were destroyed by fire Monday, involving a loss of $60,000. Two persons were fatally burned.

—A hurricane, accompanied by rain, swept over Champaign county, Ill., Monday night. Three persons were stunned by lightning at Seymour, but will recover.

—A hail, rain and wind storm early Friday morning did serious damage to crops in sections of Jo Daviess county, Ill., and Lafayette county, Wis. In some instances whole fields were washed out.

—A railway mail schedule has been perfected between the United States and the City of Mexico. The trip from New York will be made in six days, 23 hours, and from the City of Mexico in seven days, one hour, the distance between both points being 3,749 miles.

—All the houses in Tarlton village, O., were unroofed by a hurricane Monday afternoon. Near Lancaster the race and fair-ground structures were demolished, and many horses killed by falling barns. Fences and trees were leveled.

—Lightning Friday night struck an oil tank of the Atlantic Refining Company in the suburbs of Philadelphia. The flames spread rapidly and in a short time a loss of $150,000 was caused. At last reports the fire was burning fiercely and eating its way to a neighborhood in which are stored paraffine and other oils. Many vessels were compelled to leave their moorings to escape destruction.

—When the New York express from Chicago reached Jackson, Mich., Thursday night, three men informed the passengers in the rear coach that they must move into the next car; and as the travelers passed out on the platform they were relieved of all their valuables by the men. The robbery was so skillfully effected that the train moved off before the amazed victims could give an alarm.

—Ferdinand Ward, General Grant's partner, was arrested in New York Wednesday night on a suit by the City Chamberlain. Ward, not being able to procure the $300,000 bail, was incarcerated in the Ludlow street jail Thursday evening.

—The Penn State Bank of Pittsburg closed its doors about noon Wednesday, a steady "run" having largely diminished the funds. The president, Mr. Riddle, says the concern is able to pay dollar for dollar. The liabilities are said to be about $1,500,000, with assets greatly in excess of these figures.

—Last week the Cincinnati base ball players were arrested Monday at Indianapolis for their game of Sunday, and the Indianapolis nine will be arrested to-day. The men were released on their own recognizance.

—Indignation prevails at Columbus, Ohio, regarding the scenes witnessed there Sunday, May 18th, over a base ball game. Excursionists numbering 2,000 came to the city, drank freely, and drove furiously in hacks through the town, accompanied by abandoned women. The papers are united in their condemnation of the riotous doings, and efforts will be made to prevent Sunday games in future.

—The warehouse of Hiram Sibley, on the north bank of Chicago river, near Clark street, was destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. The loss is estimated at $125,000, with an insurance of 70 per cent., largely in foreign companies. Mr. Sibley is credited with a fortune of $16,000,000. He is at present engaged in erecting two mammoth ten-story warehouses adjoining the structure which was burned, and will doubtless proceed to build a third.

—The State veterinary surgeon of Kansas, after a protracted tour, reports glanders prevailing among horses in fifteen counties.

—The Union Pacific road, having suffered a defeat in its attempt to reduce wages, is credited with an intention to discharge 40 per cent. of its employes and endeavor to re-engage them at lower rates.

—An epidemic of measles is prevailing among adults and children in Hanover township, near Galena, Illinois, and several deaths have occurred.

—Dispatches from Trinity, Texas, state that there have been incessant rains during the past week. No trains on the Trinity and Sabine road have been run since the 20th, and there are no prospects for trains for several days. International and Great Northern railroad work has been suspended. Trinity river is still rising at the rate of one inch an hour. It is now over a mile and a half wide at the bridge. Families were forced to flee for their lives. There has been distressing destruction of crops, stock, and improvements. The worst has yet to come.

—Three boilers in Carr, Ryder & Wheeler's planing-mill at Dubuque, Iowa, exploded Saturday afternoon, shattering the mill and adjoining structures. In the debris were found the mangled remains of two men and three children, and search is being made for other bodies. A number of persons were injured, some seriously. The financial loss is about $7,000, fully insured.

—A terrible collision took place Sunday on the New York West Shore road at Savannah, N. Y. The train from the west came down at the rate of thirty miles an hour, and struck the west-bound train, which had not got on the side track, completely demolishing one coach and part of another, killing four and mangling seven persons.

FOREIGN.

—Private letters to New Orleans say the Captain General of Cuba has liberated some desperate criminals upon condition that they join Aguero's band and assassinate him. Aguero is burning and pillaging on his march, and his force is being augmented daily.

—At Liraves, Mexico, a serious conflict is reported to have occurred Monday last between the troops and the people, and fears are expressed that a revolution has begun which will spread to all sections of the republic. It is said that the present government is so corrupt that any change would be desirable.

—The French brig Senorine sank on the eastern ledge of the great banks of Newfoundland some time in the first week of May. An English trading schooner which recently arrived brought on a portion of her wreckage—trunks, bedding and clothing, all identifying the lost vessel. The crew of men, with fifty-three passengers, all perished. The lost vessel was on her way to take part in the fishing expedition, of which St. Pierre is the general rendezvous.

—The customs collector at Winnipeg, Manitoba, informs the officials of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad that hogs can not be imported into Manitoba for breeding purposes, and their entry is forbidden, except for immediate slaughter.

—One-half of the Mail Building at Toronto, Ont., burned Saturday morning, and the telephone service of the city was destroyed. The loss is about $100,000.

—Lord Dufferin has stipulated if the Turkish troops are dispatched to Suakim, in Egypt, English officers must command them, England to pay all the expenses and have sole control during the period of the withdrawal of the Turks from the Soudan. The Sultan declines the proposition, and negotiations are pending for a mixed expedition of English and Turkish troops.

GEN. A. W. RILEY—A SKETCH.

In an elegant residence, built by and for himself, in the city of Rochester, New York, now lives the wonderful man whose portrait is given above. He is tall, erect, hale and vigorous; though the next snow that falls will whiten his ninetieth winter. He married his last wife when 76 years of age; and since then he has used a million of bricks in erecting tenements; and, with an agreeable companion, seems destined to "Husband out life's taper to its close."

Gen. Riley, whose air and taste for military tactics gave him from the Governor his title in the militia many years ago, went to Rochester with a kit of tools and a ten dollar bill. He has been a citizen of Rochester ever since; though he has given temperance addresses in most parts of the United States and in Europe; traveling at his own charges; paying his own salary; and often, while he was wealthy, hiring saloon-keepers and sometimes drunkards to sit under his arguments, paying them by the hour! While pastor in the city of Cincinnati, some forty years ago, we saw the handbills, announcing that Hon. Sam. Carey and Gen. A. W. Riley would speak on Temperance in the court house, on the wharves and in the halls of that city; and we remember the forest of anecdotes which sprung up after their meetings.

Gen. Riley has made several fortunes, and lost them; always managing to satisfy his creditors, so as to maintain his credit and Christian standing. Financial cyclones, of which he has met many, wrecked and sunk other crafts; but, when their fury was spent, would show to the wrecked mariners clinging to the floating fragments of their fortunes, Gen. Riley riding the ground-swell with a snug little competence, ready to dip again into some fortunate speculation. It would amuse one to walk the streets of Rochester with the General, and have him point out the blocks, buildings and corners he has owned in the course of his financial life-ventures.

But the marvel of this wonderful man is not the physical but the moral part of his life. He has been to reforms what the white cap is to waves: always in the ascendant; and light even amid surrounding darkness. He stood by Fred. Douglass in the Jerry Rescue, and endorsed Gerrit Smith's anathema of the Utica mobs; as years before, he listened admiringly to the eloquence of Alvan Stuart and Myron Holley, and backed Thurlow Weed in his terrible grapple with the dark lodge.

As the General precedes us some seventeen years in the march of life, we had ceased to think of him as among the living when (judge of our surprise), our good friend Mr. Alling, said to us, "There is an old gentleman up our street, named Gen. Riley, who knows all about Myron Holley, Thurlow Weed and Frederick Douglass, when they were citizens of Rochester." We went to him at once, and here you behold the man!

As the General is not quite ninety, he promised at once to attend the American Prohibition meeting in the evening, and was prompt to his promise; and he consented to be chosen a delegate to represent Monroe county in our Chicago Convention, June 20th next. We hope Providence will permit him to be present. He sat as vice-president in our Rochester meeting, and, as nearly as we can report him from memory, spoke to us as follows:

GEN. RILEY'S REMARKS.

"I have long been a business man and property-holder in Rochester, but I have never paused to weigh the consequences of doing right in a plain case, to the business which I chanced to be in. My mother taught me when a child, the lesson of the modern ditty, 'Dare to do right;' and I have ever obeyed her injunction. And though I have suffered in the world's estimate for doing right and opposing wrong; though I have sometimes lost money, and sometimes reputation by opposing Masonry, liquor-selling and slavery in past years, my family have not suffered hunger,—and I own a residence in this city now as good as my neighbors, and have means to live in it.

"It is ever best in the long run, to do right, though the words of our Saviour were true when he warned us that men would hate us for doing right. 'If ye were of the world, the world would love his own, but because ye are not of the world but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.' There never was a man in the city of Rochester so thoroughly and generally hated as was Josiah Bissell; and yet there never was so general mourning at any other funeral here as at his. His life was one protest against Sabbath-breaking, liquor-selling, slavery and the secret lodge, and hence he was hated while living, and universally honored and lamented when he was dead.

"On one occasion, when we wanted to hold meetings for reform, though I had put much money into churches here, we could get no church in which to hold our meetings. It was thought best to build one, and a good church building was erected in my garden here in the space of a single week.

"The fact that your numbers are few makes nothing against you. Reforms have always been carried by minorities. I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is, that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals! I am a member of the First Presbyterian church here in Rochester, and I say the things to my brethren there, which I am saying here; and though my pastor says nothing on these topics himself, he respects me the more because I say them; for he knows that they are true.

"I have but little while to stay and I wish to im press this thing upon young men. No man ever was, or ever will be worse off in the end for uttering his honest convictions, and doing what is right."

The above are not the words exactly, but they are the ideas uttered by this distinguished citizen of Rochester, New York; and we wish they could be left in a small tract at the door of every dwelling in that beautiful city

The great musical festival held in Chicago last week suggests that the drilling of large choruses and orchestras to such a degree of perfection and the importation of the best solo singers of Europe costs heavily and marks the enthusiasm of our American people for the best music. One can hardly find any objection to the warm support given to the festival, any more than to the editorials in the Tribune announcing the "Collapse of Italian Opera." Two managers went through the country last season with a picked and expensive troupe but with a very unprofitable bank account; and last month the Dramatic Festival Association of Cincinnati had to make up a deficiency of $42,700; the receipts being only $10,700. The figures are encouraging to those who wish the ennobling and elevating effect of good music to reach the masses. Much has been done of late years for congregational singing in our churches, but much yet remains to be done, nor shall we reach perfection in this matter until the idea of divine worship shall be of first importance.

In a debate on the Utah bill in the Senate last week Mr. Brown of Georgia made a singular and vindictive speech, in which he attacked New England with peculiar hostility for her lax divorce laws. Mormon polygamy might be immoral, but according to his figures there were but 1,200 men and women in Utah who would not swear that they had never been guilty of polygamy; while in New England there were 36,000 persons who were living in practical polygamy. Mr. Brown's charges, though severe, are not altogether unwarranted, since in some parts of New England the proportion of divorces to marriages is nearly one to ten, but he gives too much credit to the lodge oath whose obligation the Mormons plead and so refuse to confess the fact of their polygamy. The speaker evidently had no confidence in the Mormon figures, but cared more for a chance to strike at the New England opposition to slavery. Senator Hoar replied with some sarcasm, that the vices of New England, though a reproach, are carefully written down, and the presence of a large number of mulattoes in the South might yet ask for an accounting.

The best of men that ever wore earth about him was a sufferer,—a soft, meek, patient, humble, tranquil spirit; the first true gentleman that ever breathed. —Decker.

Aloft, on the throne of God, and not below, in the foot-prints of a trampling multitude, are the sacred rules of right, which no majorities can displace or overturn.—Charles Sumner.

ALWAYS CONCEAL AND NEVER REVEAL.

Why is it that our clergy while revealing the mysteries of our religion to the people, never reveal the mysteries of that other religion which is set up and inculcated as its rival? The Masonic lodge as a teacher of religion has become co-extensive in space, and perhaps superior in influence, to the church; and yet, how little should we know of this rival religion if we depended for our knowledge upon the clergy!

In the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles" recently discovered in Constantinople, two ways are plainly pointed out to the reader: one is the way of life, and the other is the way of death. But our modern Christian teachers, while they have a good deal to say about the way of life as pointed out by the church, very seldom or never tell us anything about the way of death which leads through the lodge. We are told by Scripture that we must hold fast to the good and eschew evil. A good teacher, therefore, while he tells us what the good is to which we must cleave, will also tell us what the bad is from which we must flee.

The omission to do this by our clergy in the case of the crying evil of Freemasonry, which is leading thousands of our young men astray from the Christian religion into a mere religion of trade-craft, like that of Diana of the Ephesians, is well exemplified in the Christian Instructor, May 1st. By the way of Sabbath-school instruction in that paper, the 15th chapter of 1st. Corinthians is commented on. Now the whole character of that chapter is evidently tinged by opposition with the religious teachings of the Greeks. It is well known that at a short distance from Corinth stood the great center of Grecian worship, the temple of Eleusis, to which the temple of Ephesus bore a secondary relation. The worship at Eleusis (see Phelp's Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern) was based on the mystical character of the transmutation of grains of corn buried in the earth into subsistence for men and animals. "Thou fool," virtually says St. Paul, "that which thou sowest is not, as you pretend, the daughter of Ceres which goes down to hell for three months of the year, and at the end of that time is permitted through supplication made to Jove to come back and stay with her mother for the rest of the year, etc., etc., but it is mere grain." The resurrection of the body through Christ, he declares, is very different from this secret mysticism of the Greeks. The body that is buried in the earth is not the spiritual body that rises therefrom: the body that rises is not the same body that was buried. The resurrection was not like the idea of Proserpine going down to hell and then coming back therefrom, as the pagans taught. Heaven and hell had entered into no arrangement by which a soul should spend three months in one and nine months in the other, or upon the bright earth.

It was not at Athens so much as at Corinth that St. Paul arrays the faith of Christian life against the senseless arts and practices of the pagan Greeks. So sensible was Freemason Voltaire of this fact that he takes up the figure used by Christ and St. Paul of corn dying before it can sprout forth into life again, as an evidence of error, since, says he, some corn does not die; for if it did it could not sprout. Both the Saviour and St. Paul in alluding to the growth of corn from the kernel were evidently referring to and correcting the pagan ideas of the times; and the infidel Voltaire meets them, right there, at the vital point, and maintains the faith of the pagans!

That our modern Freemasons under the lead of Voltaire and other such philosophers have imitated to some considerable extent the ancient initiation into the mysteries of Eleusis is very manifest. And it is equally manifest to every candid person who examines thoroughly into the subject that the religion taught by Freemasons is no better than that practiced at Eleusis, the believer in which St. Paul called a fool. The 15th chapter of the 1st Corinthians must be considered as an arrayal by St. Paul of the sublime doctrines of Christian faith in opposition to the superstitious practices of ancient mysticism, which faith is equally opposed to modern Freemasonry; and yet how silent our preachers and our Sabbath-school teachers remain on the subject! The Episcopal minister reads this 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians at the grave; and how often it has occurred to us that it was against his own heathen practices as a Freemason that that chapter was written! What must we think of a minister who knows so little of the religion which he professes to teach? He, a Freemason, reads with seeming approval a chapter whose whole tone and spirit are opposed to Freemasonry! The clergy as a body always conceal and never reveal the fact that the mysteries of Freemasonry with the resurrection of Hiram Abiff are more in accord with the secret mysteries of Eleusis and Ephesus than they are with the open, revealed mysteries of the Christian religion. They conceal this fact, make use of it for their own personal material advantage, and the people seemingly love to have it so!

What then is the Christian religion? Is it a mere pretence, a varnish, a thin gilding to cover over the resurrected superstitions and knaveries of the Eleusinean mysteries? Is it merely to give an outer air of decency to the covert villainies of the age? To one of any real Christian sensibility it would be a sad thing indeed if he were to be compelled to hear Robert Ingersoll read this 15th chapter at the grave of a near friend; and equally shocked should one be to hear a Masonic clergyman read it there. It is a mystifying reflection that men of integrity must become ex-communicated in religion and disfranchised in politics where the clergy fail to point out the way of the lodge as the way of death. No honest man of intelligence and learning can fail to lose respect either for religion or for its professors, so long as those professors see no difference between the precepts of the Bible and the frauds and impositions of the Masonic lodge. Honest men in these days find the church arrayed against them in favor of Freemasonry, because of the silence of preachers.

It was so during the reign of the slave-power. Men went on listening to ministers who never alluded to the great national evil, and voting for Presidents who directed the whole machinery of government for the support of that evil, as it is now directed for the support of the lodge, until finally the day of reckoning came. A generation of silence, of concealing and never revealing, on the part of the pulpit, the press, and the rostrum, ended in four years of bloodshed. As slavery was once a political virtue, for which men were rewarded with office, so Freemasonry is now. Silence towards it from the guardians of the public interests is rewarded with place and emolument. Our preachers tell us that the resurrection of Christ is very good, but the fact that the resurrection of Hiram Abiff is very very bad, they ever conceal and never reveal.

AMERICAN.

JUST PATENTED!

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

A new and strange arrangement to rule the church! Stranger than popery or the pope of Rome! Very simple and yet more potent than truth and righteousness combined with millions of pious and peace loving souls who prefer peace to purity. It is cheap as dirt and quite as clean, literally. We have known a pennyweight of it to rule a church of a hundred members through a priest or a deacon and often through a well-to-do laymember—swaying pastor and people as by a charmed scepter. Like the magnet, it drew all to the North Pole of the frigidity. I could not see how one-twentieth of an ounce of mere nickel could sway and freeze such a mass of humanity. But it was only humanity. That was the trouble. The salt had lost its savor, and only a corpse remained. As man is man only when in union with the soul of a man, so a church is a church only when illuminated and impelled by the soul of the church, the Holy Spirit. When he steps out the compact becomes a huge moral corpse.

But nickel is nothing but sordid dust, how can a little nickel or, peradventure, silver or even gold, have such potency as that supposed? The gold in the ears and on the persons of Israel's fair ones had only partial power in the camp till it was formulated into a fancy calf. Nothing like fancy worship. A fancy church edifice, fancy membership with a fancy minister, these are things for this age of progress. No intrinsic good in mere ores and metals only when put into form, that is deified, more or less. Now take a recipe: of pure nickel one-twentieth of an ounce. Make it into three links. Call these by the names of three cardinal virtues and make them into a chain. Wear this on the vest, and any one who is any saint worth naming, will recognize this deified chain (symbol of attributes human and divine), as demanding reverence. These links must not, cannot be offended by any unfavorable criticism however kind. No allusion unless laudatory can be allowed from pulpit or press. No, they must and shall not be called in question. Half of the letters in the alphabet are put under tribute to tell the awful dignity of these magic links. Such as G. W. P., etc., etc., ad infinitum, ad nauseam.

No appeal from these titled dignitaries. How can there be an appeal from the G. W. C. P.? Is not this ultimate authority? Woe to the minister, woe to the church that does not "bow his head a little," yea much in presence of the august nickel trinity. To this the church agrees—brother Nickel must not be hurt. Now "let us have peace." There is one way to have it. Only one. Brother Three-links is a quiet, peaceable soul. Never complains long as he is undisturbed; and disturbed he must not, shall not be. He can rule. His proclivities are all in that direction. His lodge education, titles of dignity, all indicate h ability to rule, and the church says he shall not b hindered from his usefulness in ruling.

What will the church do without Diotrephes? Ho easy and how simple this new patent to rule th church! Israel calls for a king. "Grand Sovereig King." Three links, compass-and-square, or gave wood is anointed to regal power. The compass an square are the things to travel under—so the chure tries them and she is sure to go through.

Some months ago we made a safe trip on th "Handy," plying on the Ohio river. Rode full twenty miles on this little steamer and were no wrecked! We rode under the compass and squar We had none on us, but the one over us took us saf ly through.

Masonry is so handy anywhere. Good on lan river, ocean, in church or state. With it you ca hand in or out, over or under, unobserved. The gre Solomon has said of our holy craft, "He winket with his eyes, he speaketh with his feet, he teachet with his fingers." Who would be up to this Sta route age of sublime arts must be a first-class the lodgian in the church, beat the "bulls" the "bears on Wall Street, and spend a term or two in Congres When a pennyweight of nickel can rule a church o one thousand members, we may be said to live in th nickel period. This can be done—has been done ov churches of greater or less numbers by our judiciou brother Three-links whenever and wherever the peac ful and docile brethren thought it best. He can sett and unsettle pastors at the move of the hand or crook of his finger, and is now doing that busines This patent is very effective in the court or jury-roo also. Indeed, it can make and unmake President Once the church ruled the lodge out of her sacre precinct, now the lodge rules out the impartial Hol Ghost preacher, the full and free Gospel of Christ a taught in the Scriptures—the Father, Son and Hol Spirit, as set forth in their distinctive missions in ou world. Salvation alone through Christ; regeneratio by the Holy Ghost, with the fruits of righteousnes growing out of a renewed heart, are antagonized i every part of the lodge rituals.

This patent is fully adequate to the task and i pledged solemnly to take every faithful brother o the mystic tie into the G. L. A. Get knowledge, ge virtue, get righteousness, if convenient, but with al thy getting get the nickel, the three links, the com pass and square. Sold in all lawful (?) lodges in thi lodge blessed (?) land for fees and dues at our ow prices. Only one party is recognized in prices. Cal and take our goods and examine after. We make n children's bargains. No money returned whether ou goods suit or not. We are doing a staving busines for our customers.

THE ORIGIN, PURPOSES, AND DESTINY OF FREEMASONRY.

BY H. A. DAY.

As to its origin, the principles of the order are as old as man's rebellion against God. The antiquity of Freemasonry is only found in the semblance it bears to the Ancient Mysteries, about which so much is said by the standard authorities of the order. Now these Ancient Mysteries so frequently referred to to prove the antiquity of Freemasonry, are only the systems of Baal worship which were carried on in secret chambers in ancient times, which systems God condemns from Genesis to Revelation; and for the practices of which secret ceremonies, God cursed whole nations and suffered them to be spoiled by the destroyer. The ceremonies of Freemasonry carried on all through the United States in "secret chambers" are a continuation of those practices which God condemned in ancient times, and still condemns. But other than this, the boasted antiquity of speculative Freemasonry is a lie. Its connection in any sense with the temple of Solomon is another lie, and its bringing in Abraham, Isaac, Jacob or John the Evangelist as sympathizers with its principles or practicers of its rites, is one of the basest of lies. Speculative Freemasonry as now organized, is 167 years of age the 24th day of this month (June).

The purposes of this order are, the overthrow of the Christian religion, to change from the worship of the true God to the worship of false gods, and the burning of "incense to vanity." In ancient times the work was carried on by the various modes of idolatry then practiced. Idolatry was practiced in open and secret worship. Such was the worship of Tammuz, Osiris, Isis, Adonis, the Sun, etc., all of which is denominated Baal worship in the Bible and in the history of those times. The ceremonies of Freemasonry entered into the worship of the Sun, into the worship of Osiris, Bacchus, etc., in ancient times, and in all Masonic lodges at the present time the work is going on under the sanction and protection of the United States government, and hence it has become a national sin. There will be no reform of lasting benefit to this nation, except through a party in whose platform of principles shall be found one plank recognizing God as the author of civil government, his law as supreme, and our need of divine assistance as a nation. Another plank must demand that the lodges of this country shall disband and that the idolatrous practices thereof shall wholly cease before we shall see the prosperity desired, or obtain the blessing of God upon us. If such is not the case, we may henceforth expect nothing but wrath from him who gave us our existence. As to the destiny of Freemasonry, we say emphatically, it is destined to be overthrown. And though the smile of derision may curl the lip of the scoffer, it remaineth true, that "Every tree that my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." This is not a tree of the Father's planting, and it will most certainly be rooted up. Would that we might infuse courage into every Anti-masonic soul on this point. Oh, ye fearful and unbelieving, Freemasonry will be overthrown, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Its boasted, honorable and ancient origin is a sham, a lying pretense; its purposes are the overthrow of Christianity, the destruction of good government, and the general corruption of society. Its destiny is hell. Its Grandest Master is the father of lies, whose mission among men is, by some means to secure them as sharers of his eternal torment in the bottomless pit. Reader, beware! Whosoever is deceived by the institution of Freemasonry is not wise.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—Think not to say unto yourselves that we have Abraham for our father.

MY BRETHREN:—Some of you (not all, I hope) seem to think that because you had Abraham (Lincoln) for your political father, therefore whatever you may do is all right. There seems to be no end to the back-pay grabs, Credit Mobilier swindles, false coinages, Star-route frauds, unmerited pensions, etc., etc., which you practice, or stand by and see practiced in his name. Merely because in his day the evil of slavery grew ripe and rotten, and fell from the tree with a quash, you claim great credit to Abraham Lincoln and to yourselves, and seem to think that you may do anything you please on the strength of that fall. The Jesuit priests themselves never made half the merit out of the immense store of all the virtues of all the saints from the days of the murdered innocents till now, that you are disposed to make out of the abolition of slavery; and you surpass the Jesuits too, in making the claim to this merit (which does not belong to you) the basis of all kinds of knavery.

My friends, there is some difference between Abraham the Patriarch and Abraham the President. When the Patriarch had conquered in battle, he went out to meet the great high priest of righteousness, and give him a tenth part of the spoils; but your political Abraham, even when he could only just catch glimpses of peace through the smoke of battle hurried out to meet the great Masonic high priest of knavery, and gave him a charter that priest's worship, which was tantamount to giving him all our American institutions at once.

My friends, it is not Republicans, or followers of Abraham Lincoln that we want; any number of Lincolnites could be raised up, even out of the worst kind of Freemasons and Democrats. What we want is REFORM; and that can be attained only by repenting of our Republican sins, the chiefest of all of which is a shameless, diseased whoring after Masonry.

Believe me, my friends, as surely as pride goes before a fall, so the moment of victory is a moment of great danger; and especially to a conquering people. They are then prone, in the exercise of their generosity, to receive as a yoke the views of their fallen adversary rather than his virtues. As the man who, becoming wounded while slaying a diseased animal, often in proceeding to skin and quarter it, takes into his veins a mortal virus, so, when one peeple strikes down and conquers another, the conquerors are apt to catch the vices of degeneracy and death from their foes. The Republican party seems to have caught from the slave-power the vice of calling good evil, and evil good. It meanly (not meekly) says that Masons are very "good men;" that they are very charitable and kind to "widows and orphans;" that Masonry is "ancient and honorable;" etc., when we know that no greater nest of villainies, not even the slave-power itself, ever existed than the Masonic lodge.

My brethren,—Never vote for an unrepentant man whom you have detected in either active or silent partnership with a fraud so glaring, so blasphemous, and yet so base as Freemasonry. So MOTE IT BE!

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE FOR JAPAN.

BY REV. NATHAN BROWN, D.D.

[From a paper read at Osaka Conference.]

Has the world of joy and beauty that surrounds us, have the relics of past ages that lie embedded in the strata beneath us, have the starry globes of enormous magnitude that roll above our heads anything to do with religion, or religion with them? If so, they legitimately belong, as I conceive, to the circle of Christian literature. Wherever we see God's ways and works there we find a theme for Christian thought, Christian speech, and Christian writing. The Creator whom Christianity teaches us to worship fills all things. He pervades a threefold realm, the spiritual, the material and the moral, and he reveals himself to us in three great books—his Word, his Works, and his Providence. All the sciences are full of God. God is in astronomy, and no book on that subject which ignores the Maker of the starry heavens is worthy to rank as an astronomical or scientific work. God is in geology, and any treatise on this theme, however accurately and exhaustively it may arrange and describe buried strata and periods of time, whether it piles up the ages to a million or millions of millions, if it passes over in silence the idea of an Everlasting Worker, is no contribution to science, but a delusion and a snare, an insult to the understanding and consciousness of our inward nature. The man who can properly describe the fauna and flora of this beautiful world, its feathered songsters, its insects and fishes, must be one who holds communion with nature and with nature's God; one who is not ashamed to speak of the almighty Originator and Mover of all, and who finds it impossible to teach us natural history without telling us what God has done for beast, bird and insect, in ten thousand wonderful provisions and adaptations, such as none but a being of infinite love could devise. How sweetly does the thread of true science run through the Saviour's teachings and references to nature's harmonies; to the little sparrows, objects of the divine care; the lilies that array the fields in glory; the sun with his warm rays and the kindly rain that falls with blessings even on the wicked and unthankful, all telling us of the Father's love.

Nor is there less of God in the book of Providence. The Bible, indeed, is to a great extent made up of the records of divine interventions in human affairs. No wonder that those who repudiate the idea of special providences should dislike the Bible. But what is history without this thread? Writers like Hume and Gibbon have left us the results of life-long labors, in the skeletons of history which they have prepared and hung up for posterity to study. The element of God's providence has as far as possible been eliminated; but the vigor and warmth of true and life-like history are lost, and the volumes lie upon the shelves, simply as books of reference. If history is to have a place in the Christian literature of Japan, it must be a history that has God in it. So of works in other departments; biography, geography, travels, art and antiquities. They should be written by Christian men, and with a view to their moral and religious influence.

Is such a literature desirable for Japan? And if so, is it the duty of missionaries to take any part in its production? It has been said that "ignorance is the mother of devotion," but this idea has never found favor with Protestants. Our glory is that we regard science as the handmaid of religion; that the wider our knowledge of TRUTH, the broader and firmer are the foundations of our faith; that if we would secure the elements of permanent growth in mission churches we must implant in our converts the desire of searching for Truth—all Truth. We have sufficient warning in the history of Roman Catholic missions, that converts may be gathered by the thousands and hundreds of thousands as in India, supplied with creed and catechism, a liturgy, and fragmentary portions of scriptures, only to be swept back in the next generation, by the return wave of heathenism, till scarce a vestige of the missionary's teaching remains.

Is there a fear that modern science, research and discovery will shake the pillars of our religion? Such a feeling would be tantamount to a confession that we ourselves have little confidence in the truth of the creed we profess; that we are already at heart more than half infidel; that we are trying to build hopes of salvation on what we ourselves suspect to be no more than treacherous sand. A person who fears the light of science has no faith that is worthy the name of Christian. Such is not the position of Protestants. We trust ourselves to a religion that we believe to be synonymous with Truth; we accept it and value it only as it stands on that everlasting foundation. Show us that it has not this foundation, and we shall be as ready to repudiate it as we now are to embrace and spread it. Let Truth and Error grapple; on this ground we ask no favors. The heavens may fall, but Truth and Justice stand for evermore. Happy they who can look on with calmness while the agitation between light and darkness is going on.

In what form shall a Christian literature be presented to the Japanese? The plain answer to this question would naturally be, that the books published must be in the vernacular, and in the character most widely known and most easily read by the Japanese. Such an answer will not, however, be accepted by all, probably not by a majority of the Japanese literati of the present day. The hieroglyphic system, introduced along with the Buddhist religion over a thousand years ago, has obtained such an entire control among the educated classes that the cultivation of the native language through the medium of its own natural resources is looked upon as an impossibility. Professors in the colleges and elsewhere have uttered their protest, warning the Japanese of the injury done to their own tongue, and the folly of attempting to make a hieroglyphic system like the Sinico-Japanese a vehicle of western learning and popular advancement; in the Japanese newspapers we have constant complaints of the inefficiency of this cumbrous macaroni writing, rendering it impossible even for government officials to read the orders addressed to them without the help of an interpreter; we have the expressed opinions of many missionaries that the corruption of Japanese through the medium of Chinese is a calamity and a barrier to all real improvement; yet these complaints generally end by saying, "But what can we do? How can the evil be remedied?"

There is no doubt of the great superiority of the Roman alphabet over any syllabic system, such as the Hirakana. The latter, however, being a strictly phonetic system and universally understood, is well worthy to be patronized as the best medium for missionary printing, on the ground that our labors must chiefly be for present effect upon the masses, rather than for prospective results in the future. If the Hirakana should become the settled mode of missionary printing, as it is of the ordinary block printing, it would prove a stepping-stone to the Roman, and the Japanese themselves would soon perceive the advantages of this character, now so generally adopted by the civilized world. In the remarks I have made in favor of the Kana for present use, I wish to be understood as referring to the Hirakana only, not to the Katakana. The latter has too few characters, and those too rigid in form, without variation or accentuation to express the homophones with which the Chinese has so liberally supplied us. I am not aware that any attempts have been made to print native books in Katakana without the help of Chinese; certain it is that the New Testament in this character alone would be in many places ambiguous if not quite unintelligible.

But the real foe with which the Christian literature of Japan has to contend is the hieroglyphic system. This system is entrenched in a citadel well-nigh impregnable. It has a whole army of instructors depending for their livelihood on the teaching and interpreting of Chinese, together with the entire Buddhist priesthood, whose ministrations are dependent upon and interwoven with that character. All these parties would be in arms if the Government should attempt to change their course of instruction from Chinese to the pure vernacular. It is difficult to find teachers who are willing to be employed in mission schools, unless the chief part of their teaching is in Chinese. They consider it to be beneath their dignity to give instruction merely in their native tongue. Such are the obstacles that stand in the way of every missionary who wishes to reach the masses of the people through a medium that all can understand.

Of the two great systems of writing that have hitherto divided the world, there can be little doubt that the hieroglyphic, or ideographic, is the oldest. In primitive times the first attempts at depicting thoughts on bark or stone must have been much the same as they still are amongst the Indians of North America and other uncivilized tribes. The earliest experiment of a savage would not be to picture a sound, or to invent a character that should be the representative of a sound. He would sooner picture a man, or a horse, a tree or a house, than seek arbitrary signs for the forms of speech by which these objects were known. That was an invention of later date, involving a much higher type of civilization than either the naming of objects or their pictorial representation. Hieroglyphic or picture-writing has two elements, the object or idea and its pictorial representative addressed to the eye. It cannot properly be called a language or tongue, because the tongue and other vocal organs have no part in this mode of communication. Speech also deals with but two elements, connecting objects and ideas with the sounds representing them, doing for the ear what hieroglyphic writing does for the eye. While it is a far superior mode of intercommunication, it still needs the written character to make it perfect. Primitive man had, in speech, a twisted rope of two strands, idea and sound; in hieroglyphics another, of which the intertwined strands were idea and picture; but the two cords were isolated, rendering no assistance to each other, without compactness, strength, or beauty, till some bright genius conceived the happy thought of making the rope of three strands instead of two, combining idea and sound, sound and picture all in one. Thus Aleph and Beth (Ox and House) each became lord of a new domain; no longer exhausting their power upon the two ideas they first represented, their respective offices were extended to the hundreds and thousands of vocables of which they formed constituents parts. Twenty other hieroglyphs were selected for similar honors, and the number of characters necessary for written language diminished from twice or thrice ten thousand to twenty-two. This was one of those grand discoveries from which it would be as impossible for the human race to go back, as it would be to overthrow the teachings of Galileo and Newton.

If the hieroglyphic system is good for China with its hundred different languages, it is good for Japan, England, America, and all other countries, since it can as well be used, with proper adaptations, for one spoken language as for another. The hieroglyphics of Assyria, Babylon and Egypt sunk to oblivion in their contest with an alphabet popularizing the literature that had been hidden in mouldy temples and in the caskets of a privileged class. There was no doubt just as much opposition then to opening the mysteries of literature, science and religion to the common people through an easily acquired and rapidly written phonetic system as there now is to the printing of Japanese scriptures and other religious works in the native phonetic character—the "women and children's writing," as it is contemptuously called. But the hieroglyphics went down, never to come up again, except as curiosities for learned antiquarians to decipher. So will it be with the hieroglyphics of China, venerable and wonderful as they are, challenging universal admiration and presenting the most remarkable example of ingenuity, literary toil and patience that the world has ever seen. But no scheme of picture-writing can co-exist with modern civilization; the masses can never be chained down to a system that requires eight or ten years to obtain even a partial knowledge of the characters necessary for ordinary reading.

Can we, as missionaries, with any propriety be called on to aid in bolstering up a fallen and decayed system, which has died out in all the old nations of the earth except one, and which even there, in its own home, is tottering to its foundations? Are we justified in spending thousands upon thousands every year for teaching Chinese in our missionary schools and seminaries, to gratify a pedantic attachment to the old relics of Buddhist literature, merely because their antiquity and sacred associations have made them venerable in the eyes of the learned? Shall we not rather anticipate whatever reformations we perceive to be inevitable, and thus hasten the benefits which Christian civilization is sure to bring? Doubtless we ought to reach as many minds as possible, by whatever language or written character we may find necessary; but it certainly is not necessary to give the preference to foreign words, foreign idioms, and foreign hieroglyphics.

But one question remains. Have we need of any new or more efficient means or agencies for providing the evangelical literature we desire? Would the organization of more societies, or the combination of those already existing in one great publishing body be attended with any benefits? I believe the general answer would be in the negative. We have good reason to be satisfied with our present agencies and modes of labor, and the success which has attended our efforts thus far. It is doubtful whether there is an instance to be found in history where so large an amount of evangelical literature has been prepared and put in circulation, in so short a time, at the outset of mission labor, as in Japan. The work of publication began about 1870, twelve years ago, and has been steadily increasing from year to year, until the different works in print constitute quite a respectable library for every native reader who desires them; while the yearly sales by many of the leading agencies amount to millions of pages, scattered through the length and breadth of the empire. It is a great and glorious experiment; the seed is being sown; may the Lord of the harvest make the end more glorious than the beginning!

HEATHENISH FUNERALS.

The care of the dead bodies of our loved ones is the tenderest, saddest task of life. This sacred duty to the dead has been honored by all people claiming the title of noble civilization ever since Abraham the patriarch buried Sarah in the cave of Machpelah that is at Hebron. The early Christians buried their dead in and about their places of worship, thus keeping the dead bodies of their friends most sacred. This custom is being largely departed from by the mass of Christian people. Cemeteries located in places of beauty have become the receptacles of the dead. Monuments of granite and marble are reared in lofty and imperishable columns to guard the place of the sleeping dust. In our own country a peculiar phase of civilization in its treatment of the dead is being, and will be developed. In many places the dead are buried with peculiar fitness, honor and natural tenderness.

In many places in the Old World it is the custom to bury the dead by the hands of comparative strangers, or friends, but with none of the relatives attending the obsequies. In the farther East the dead, by the Greeks and others, are buried in great haste, absolutely running with the body to the grave. One person is buried in the grave of another, if the previously buried person has been buried three years. No coffins are used in the burial, and the bones of the former occupants are dug up to make a receptacle for another. The funerals among the people of Palestine are accompanied with striking pageant of banners and rude bands of music and hired mourners who chant their mournful dirges and receive as reward at the grave a piaster or a few paras.

In our country scenes may often be witnessed which, while somewhat refined, are no less heathenish in their character. The preacher, a chaplain of some order, lays aside his own ministerial character and puts on a little apron, or other paraphernalia prescribed for him by the order, and attends to the ceremonies. Bands of music play and banners of strange device and parades of men in strange attire follow in procession and surround or precede the corpse. Such a procession through the streets on its way to the cemetery, or some church, reminds one of a Mohammedan funeral, and appears as a vast, noisy pageant and parade as though a jubilee were being held over the dead. Only the "hired mourners" are necessary to make the funeral a reproduction of the heathen performances with the dead. At the grave, when the body is placed in the narrow, damp chamber, a Christless, deistic burial ceremony is read over the tomb, and strange words repeated which speak of meeting the departed in the "grand lodge above." These practices have become an enormity which ought to be despised and discarded by all Christian people. The following are some of the objections which lie against them.

1. These burial ceremonies are for the most part Christless and deistic.

2. They are often used by the hands of a minister who sets aside the prescribed formula of the church from which he has his license and ordination as a minister of Jesus Christ.

3. They are often used by men who have no regard for God or a preparation for the future life by faith and pardon of sin in Jesus Christ.

4. They are used indiscriminately in the burial of the good and the bad.

5. They are a shameless caricature of the ceremonies and services of the Christian church, as used in the burial of the dead in the hope of the Lord Jesus.

6. The whole display of paraphernalia with bands of music and pompous parade is only in accord with the practices of heathenism and is utterly repulsive and cruel and reprehensible and abominable in a Christian land, and outrageous in connection with the sad funeral rites of the dead.

7. They have conduced to the custom of Sunday funerals in which these orders could turn out en masse and furnish a grand display to the people, thus dishonoring, dissipating, and even desecrating the Lord's holy day.

8. They often thrust aside from his place the minister of Christ of whose church the deceased was a member, and are thus a usurpation of the sacred function of this officer in the church of Christ.

9. No secular or worldly or Christless orders of men have a right to caricature the Christian burial ceremonies of the church of Jesus Christ in this manner, mixing the heathenish parade and deistic ceremony and semblance of Christian hope in a common mass of heathenish practice.

10 These heathenish ceremonies over the dead in our own country constitute one of the strongest menaces to the rites of Christianity, and one of the most delusive dangers to men who are easily led to false hopes of eternal life.

11. These ceremonies, parades and paraphernalia are often a desecration of the sacredness of the sanctuary of the house of God.

The thrusting of these parades and lodge displays into the solemn funeral rites of the dead ought to disgust every really honest Christian man with the whole secret society system, and cause him to stand aloof from the whole business now, henceforth and forever. The church of Christ assumes no such prerogatives as are pretended by these abominable orders in the burial of the dead The Christian church buries its members with no regalia and display of church ensigns. Down in the dust gently and lovingly the Protestant churches of America entomb their bemoaned dead, simply as members of a common brotherhood, and Christian believers. The church buries its dead alone as those who "sleep in Jesus." The lodges of the country come forward with their heathenish display of regalia, banners and Christless ceremonies in a way which ought to make every Christian man and woman sick at heart.—Religious Telescope.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

CALL FOR NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The National Convention of the American Party will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20, 1884, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, to revise the platform of the party, and transact such other business as may be brought forward.

Each State will be entitled to as many delegates as there are Congressional Districts in the State, and two delegates at large. These delegates may be chosen in such manner as each State shall determine, and they shall be furnished with credentials signed by the chairman of the State Committee, or by the member of the National Committee for that State.

Persons friendly to the cause, who are not delegates, or who are elected to represent organizations friendly to the party, will be admitted to all the privileges of the Convention except that of voting, and this privilege may be extended to them by the Convention provided the delegation of the State from which they come is not otherwise full. Signed— F. W. CAPWELL,
President.

E. D. BAILEY, Eastern Secretary.
J. P. STODDARD, Western Secretary.

WHY JUNE 20TH?

The question has been asked, Why is the political convention of Friday the 20th inst. put so late in the week? I answer, Commencement at Wheaton College occurs on Wednesday the 18th, the annual business meeting of the N. C. Association on the 19th as provided in its by-laws, and by holding the political convention on the day following it will give those who wish an opportunity to attend these three important gatherings with very little extra expense. It is believed that by this arrangement each of the meetings will be benefited and the general interests of the cause promoted. J. P. STODDARD.

The American party has many friends, and the time is at hand when they ought to show their united strength in the convention of June 19th, and the campaign to follow. If this convention is allowed to "go by default," little impression will be made and little good accomplished. Numbers are a power as well as ability, and if Hon. S. C. Pomeroy and other speakers are greeted by meager audiences, it will have a very depressing effect. After the hurry and worry of the Republican convention is over, the time will be favorable for calm and intelligent action, and if the American party throughout the country shows anything like its real strength in convention, it will command the respect of politicians and of the people as never before. There is a splendid opportunity to advance our reform along the whole line of conflict. Will the friends improve it by reporting in force at the convention June 19th, in Farwell Hall.

—As the time of the American party convention approaches, prospects improve with the arrivals of each day's mail. Several States will be represented by large numbers of friends beside the regular delegates. The mists of candidacy surrounding the Republican convention will soon roll away, and people will then have more definite ideas of what they want to do. There should be no hesitation on the part of any one or delay in arranging to come to Chicago on the 19th and 20th insts.

WALTER H. SHUPE (not Sharpe, as lately spelled in these columns) is the political manager for Butler in the Anti-monopolist party. He is a thirty-two degree Mason, and from 1872 to 8 he published The Advocate in New York, which gained in a few years a phenomenal circulation of more than 100,000; but all of a sudden collapsed. January 1st, 1877, Shupe sent out a postal card addressed "To any Freemason or member of the Society of Friends," on which he says of his journal:

"It is a Masonic paper, aiming to meet the wants of any well ordered family—devoted to the dissemination of Masonic literature and general news; a reflex of public opinion, as shown in extracts from editorials of the leading American newspapers on current topics, and proper toned light reading."

Such is the man who is manager for the Anti-monopoly party—a pretended Quaker and a Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret in Masonry.

I have at the last two Presidential elections voted the American ticket and the only vote for the party cast in the county. It was counted at the county seat but not reported. I think the party is making a grand mistake in trying to unite with the temperance party, and in endeavoring to put a plank on woman suffrage in the platform.—JOHN BELL, Warsaw, Pa.

Be content to work on though small, till the majesty of our principles shall have time to attract to themselves the best hearts and hands in the Union. Our platform is a "Lifter," and is capable of bearing up the Nation.—J. L. BARLOW.

I rejoice in the work that the noble women are doing in the temperance cause, and hope the blessing of God will be on them. I have seen the bitter tears drop from a dear mother's eyes too many times to make the least allowance for rum, and I know of no terms strong enough to express my hatred of it. I heartily endorse the letter in the Cynosure of May 15 ("A Woman's Opinion"). I believe we ought to do all the good we can, but, like her, I do not want to vote.—MRS. H. A. C., Polo, Mo.

THIS IS TO GIVE DUE AND TIMELY NOTICE that all persons, without distinction of race or sex, who adopt the platform of the American party, will be admitted to seats in the convention to be held in Farwell Hall, June 20th, and accorded all the rights and privileges of certified delegates, except that of voting. There are many questions to be considered and a large amount of business to be done, and it should not be left to the few when so many are interested. If you favor good government, good morals, and desire justice, equity and equal rights to the deserving, you should be willing to make the sacrifice necessary on your part to secure a radical reform.

J. P. STODDARD,
Sec'y National Committee.

WILL THEY SUSTAIN HIM?

Vermont offers us a Republican candidate for the Presidency. That candidate steps entirely outside of the economical and republican character of the State, and proposes to bestow a sinecure of twenty thousand dollars a year upon an American citizen, which citizen had been making use of a great name, won by the lavishment of blood and treasure of American citizens, for trifling with the financial honor and interests of the country. This sinecure is greater than the entire fortune of three-fourths of the Senator's constituents, and would buy ten or a dozen of their average farms, on which they support themselves and his (the Senator's) great reputation.

Under any possible circumstances, where is the justice of giving any one general full retired pay rather than any other general?

Is not financial honor of as much value to a country as military glory?

The Vermont delegation in Congress has identified itself with extravagant expenditures ever since the beginning of the war, thus making their State a political province of Massachusetts, and representing Massachusetts' high tariff interests instead of Vermont agriculture and economy. One of its Senators even took his back-pay grab right on the eve of a great financial disaster to the whole nation, and bribed the Masonic legislature with it for a return to office. This act could not be done by an honest people. It was the work of a machine. He also sustained a rebel general in the disgrace of repudiation for political effect, after having formerly represented to his constituency that rebel generals were to be driven out of the country.

The Vermont delegation is more likely to help drive patriotic generals out of the country than rebel ones.

But will Vermont sustain this last act of double extravagance on the part of her favorite machine candidate for the Presidency?

Reader, neither the Vermont people nor Vermont civil institutions are represented by her Congressional delegation. That delegation represents the lodge machine; and if you sustain the delegation you merely sustain the lodge and not the character of the State. Should a great national convention deceive the people and lead them to suppose that they are voting for Vermont characteristics instead of for the Masonic lodge?

Before awarding any more full-pay retiracy, so unlike the retiracy of Washington, would it not be well to see if it should not be bestowed upon the families of the Chisholms, the Mathews, the Dickensons and numerous others who have lost their lives in the defence of a free government which it is supposed that our sinecure generals and pensioners have saved?

DOWN WITH THE LODGE!

NATIONAL PLATFORMS.

The nominating conventions are now the centers of interest throughout the nation, and although not always a true expression of the character of a party nor reliably indicating its purposes, yet these platforms are of interest to all public spirited people, men or women.

We have been asked to print the Anti-monopoly platform as a matter of information, and present it herewith:

The Anti-monopoly Organization of the United States in convention assembled, declares

1. That labor and capital should be allies, not enemies, and we demand justice for both by protecting the rights of all as against privileges for the few.

2. That corporations, the creatures of law, should be controlled by law.

3. That we propose the greatest reduction practicable in public expenses.

4. That in the enactment and vigorous execution of just laws, equality of rights, equality of burdens, equality of privileges, and equality of powers in all citizens will be secured. To this end we further declare:

5. That it is the duty of the government to immediately exercise its constitutional prerogatives to regulate commerce among the States. The great instruments by which this commerce is carried on are transportation, money, and the transmission of intelligence. They are now mercilessly controlled by giant monopolies to the impoverishment of labor, the crushing out of healthful competition, and the destruction of business security. We hold it, therefore, to be the imperative and immediate duty of Congress to pass all needful laws for the control and regulation of these great agents of commerce in accordance with the oft-repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

6. That these monopolies, which have exacted from enterprise such a heavy tribute, have also inflicted countless wrongs upon the toiling millions of the United States, and no system of reform should commend itself to the support of the people which does not protect the man who earns his bread by the sweat of his face. Bureaus of labor statistics must be established, both state and national; arbitration should take the place of brute force in the settlement of disputes between employer and employed; the national eight-hour law should be honestly enforced; the importation of foreign labor, under contract, be made illegal; and whatever practical reforms may be necessary for the protection of united labor must be granted to the end that unto the toiler shall be given that proportion of the profits of the thing or value created which his labor bears to the cost of production.

7. That we approve and favor the passage of an interstate commerce bill. Navigable waters should be improved by government and be free.

8. We demand the payment of the bonded debt as it falls due; the election of United State Senators by the direct vote of the people of their respective States; a graduated income tax, and a tariff (which is a tax upon the people) that shall be so levied as to be as light as possible upon necessaries.

We denounce the present tariff as being largely in the interest of monopoly, and demand that it be speedily and radically reformed in the interest of labor instead of capital.

9. That no further grants of public lands shall be made to corporations. All enactments granting land to corporations should be strictly construed, and all land grants should be forfeited where the terms upon which the grants were made have not been strictly complied with. The public lands must be held for homes for actual settlers, and must not be subject to purchase or control by non-resident foreigners or other speculators.

10. That we deprecate the discrimination of American legislation against the greatest of American industries—agriculture, by which it has been deprived of nearly all beneficial legislation, while forced to bear the brunt of taxation; and we demand for it the fostering care of government and the just recognition of its importance in the development and advancement of our land. And we appeal to the American farmers to co-operate with us in our endeavors to advance the material interests of the country and the overthrow of monopoly in every shape when and wherever found.

THE GREENBACK LABOR PARTY

Which met in Indianapolis last week had several platforms presented differing in some important particulars from each other. The report adopted was very lengthy, embracing thirteen resolutions, the first of which declares that the recent decision of the supreme court on the legal tender question was a vindication of the principles of the National Greenback party. Substitution of greenbacks for national bank notes is demanded. The withdrawal of fractional currency is condemned, and it is insisted that the money in the treasury should be applied to the payment of the national debt. The two great parties are denounced for having permitted the establishment of land, railroad, money and other monopolies and immediate governmental action is demanded for the correction of these abuses. Restitution of unearned railroad grants, Congressional regulation of inter-state commerce, prohibition of alien ownership of land, abolition of contract-prison and child labor, rigid inspection of mines and factories, and reduction in the term of United States senatorship are demanded. The platform also declares that, while great panics have occurred under both high and low tariffs, the country has never suffered in this way while the volume of money in circulation was equal to the needs of commerce. Give farmers and manufacturers money as cheap as it is given the banks and they can pay higher wages to labor and compete with the world. For the purpose of testing popular opinion amendments in favor of woman suffrage and on the subject of the liquor traffic were adopted.

On the balloting for nominations the first ballot resulted as follows: Benj. F. Butler, 328; Jesse Harper of Illinois, 98; Allis of Wisconsin, 1. Solon Chase, though not placed in nomination, received two votes. Gen. A. M. Vest, of Mississippi, was chosen by acclamation for Vice President.

Thus Butler has the pleasure of riding two horses in the campaign. His well known dexterity as a political manager may keep him from a fatal tumble.

—Another Butler advocate is Ralph Beaumont, of Elmira, New York, president of the Knights of Labor. He has announced his intention of making a tour of the continent on foot, from Maine to California. He proposes to start from Bangor on July 3rd, and expects to make upward of twenty miles a day, delivering a lecture every night at some town on the route on the labor and anti-monopoly questions. He will advocate the claims of Benjamin F. Butler to the support of independent voters as a Presidential candidate.

—In General Butler's reply accepting the nomination of the Anti-monopolists he says: "Concurring in each measure of public sentiment set forth in the resolutions of the convention, I need only add that if the votes of the electors shall entrust me with the executive power of that high office, every one of them shall be fully, justly and energetically used to make every measure of relief to the people and reform in government pointed out by your platform of principles, realities of administration."

LITERATURE.

THE SEVEN GREAT MONARCHIES OF THE ANCIENT EASTERN WORLD; or the history, geography, and antiquities of Chaldea, Assyria, Babylonia, Media, Persia, Parthia, and Sassanian or new Persian Empire. By George Rawlinson, M. A., Professor of ancient history in the University of Oxford. Three volumes of some 600 pages each. John B. Alden, New York. Price, 80 cts. per volume.

This greatest work of George Rawlinson is one of immense research brought into a compass and written in terms which has rendered it popular from the first publication and has placed it beside such histories as those of Rollins and Grote. Prof. Rawlinson has had in this great compilation the assistance of his brother, Sir Henry Rawlinson, the celebrated Oriental scholar and diplomatist, whose investigations in the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris have been among the most valuable. Although the latter has written numerous addresses and papers, he has attempted no extensive history of his explorations, which work seems to have been left for his brother, who thus became like Aaron to Moses. Of these three volumes the limits of an ordinary notice prevent a just review of their contents which comprise a history of the governments, customs, laws and religions of these ancient peoples, and a description of the country they inhabited, its geography and interesting physical changes. The prominence of Babylon—the city, the kingdom and the great system opposed to Jerusalem and the Christian system—which appears throughout the Bible, makes the study of these volumes of great interest and value. The publisher has made the work one of his finest productions. The print is large and good, the illustrations and maps abundant; and on the whole it is one of the best pieces of work for which the reading public is indebted to Mr. Alden.

RISE AND FALL OF POLITICAL PARTIES in the United States. By Rufus Blanchard. National School Furnishing Co., Chicago. pp. 218. Price, 50c.

The political manuals which have heretofore been presented to the public have been generally mere reference books, statistical tables which are of little permanent value and are never taken up except for reference. Mr. Blanchard, whose other historical and poetical works have been highly commended by literary circles, has in this latest labor of his pen given the public at a seasonable time a tempting little volume. No serried ranks of statistics appall the eye, yet there are dates and facts enough to burden an ordinary memory. Beginning with the organization of popular government in England the author passes to the rise of parties in that country and our own and traces them through that portion of colonial history and the independence period when the clouds of war almost obscured everything simply political. After the adoption of the Constitution the party lines became clearer and they are traced through the various administrations down to the present year, and a concluding chapter reviews the tariff acts from 1789 to 1884. The author is happily not of those who so fear the power of secret orders as to falsify or suppress historical facts that justly demand a place in such a volume; and in both the earlier and later contests with the lodge he has given fairly and well the facts respecting the Anti-masonic nominations and vote, and their influence upon other parties. One error, which has been quite a general one, and naturally so, should be noted. The Anti-masonic nominations have not been made by the National Christian Association, but either by mass meetings or by the American conventions held in connection with the N. C. A. meetings. The style of the book is charming in its simplicity and clearness. The political movements, which during their progress seem involved and confusing are unrolled in few and easy words so that their general tendency and practical bearings upon the history of the nation are finely impressed upon the memory. No political manual can compare with it, to our knowledge, for this excellent characteristic.

The North American Review for June opens with an article on "Harboring Conspiracy," by Prof. Henry Wade Rogers, who examines, in the light of international law, the diplomatic history of the United States and the national constitution, the question as to how far our government may and must go in suppressing plots against governments with which we are at peace. Henry D. Lloyd, in the same number, shows how every branch of production is coming under the control of "Lords of Industry," the corporations and monopolies. The statements made showing how combinations are driving competition out of existence are surprising. And these are not confined to what are termed capitalists, but extend through nearly all the branches of retail trade and among skilled workmen and common laborers. The article shows, without saying or meaning it, how powerfully the lessons of the lodge are impressed upon men who come under its shadow. There are unknown and immeasurable factors of destruction in these combinations of labor and trade which have all the lodge mould of yielding independence of action to "unknown superiors." Other articles of not less importance are: "Struggle for Immortality," by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; "Sociological Fallacies," by Prof. W. G. Sumner; "The Rise and Fall of Authority," by President J. C. Welling; "Walt Whitman," by Walker Kennedy; and a symposium on "Expert Testimo-

The frontispiece of the June Century is an engraving of St. Gauden's statue of Robert Richard Randall, founder of the home for disabled seamen on Staten Island, known as Sailors' Snug Harbor. An accompanying sketch contains many sailors' yarns and anecdotes about the old tars who have found a safe anchorage here. Dr. Eggleston's paper on "Commerce in the Colonies" has especial interest in its sketches of the growth of shipbuilding, the early currency, and the various problems of trade, since Congress has lately been discussing the same matters. The paper is illustrated with fac-similes of old engravings and a complete set of colonial coins. President Elliot of Harvard writes on "What is a Liberal Education?" He makes a strong plea for the study of English. Dr. Washington Gladden's article on the "Use and Abuse of Parties" presents nothing very new or striking; but argues well for the advent of "the intelligent, prosperous citizen" as the directing agency in politics. The editor discusses the Cincinnati riots and the use of militia, and lays down some rules for the direction of soldiery in the presence of a mob which are good if they are not impractical for citizen soldiery.

The striking article on the nation's drink and tobacco bill in the Christian Union of last March 27th and the method of picturing the relative amount by dark lines has been used to fine advantage in a large printed chart issued by Rev. J. P. Dyas of Sandwich, Ill. Such a chart is a valuable addition to the temperance force in any village, and would preach a pointed sermon in every Sabbath school.

Mr. Orange Judd, for many years the successful editor of the American Agriculturist, after four years of rest since his retirement from that journal, has come to Chicago and assumes editorship of the Prairie Farmer.

St. Nicholas for June opens with a dainty frontispiece "Daisy Time." There are three instructive and finely illustrated articles which will help young readers to understand some facts in natural history. Spiders, storks, and bees are the subjects of these articles. Other articles are numerous but all in all have little permanent value. The riddles, Letter box, etc., of this magazine are always sprightly.

WHAT GOOD IN DECORATION DAY?

To cherish the memory of those who died for their country is doubtless a duty, but we do not believe in making a public parade of our patriotism when the show is clearly for the benefit of a secret society. Decoration day is used largely for the purpose of giving the G. A. R. and the whole gang of oath-bound organizations on up to Freemasonry a chance to show their feathers and pose before the people as patriotic institutions! Thus by deceiving the people in regard to its true nature, Freemasonry has managed to perpetuate itself and its numerous progeny. Why should a day be set apart merely to shower honors on the soldiers of one war? Are not the dead soldiers of other wars entitled to equal veneration? Who ever thought of decorating the graves of the heroes of '76, of 1812 or of '46? But Masonry had not then come out of its hiding-place where it had been driven by popular odium. It is possible that the present dominant political party expected to reap some benefit from Decoration day, but it was intended mainly for the G. A. R., which latter organization is used as a cat's-paw by the Masonic order to draw unsuspecting ex-soldiers into the meshes of secretism, just as it used the grange to trap farmers and the temperance orders to catch temperance people.

COLUMBIAN.

EASTERN NEBRASKA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your plan of furnishing back numbers of the Cynosure to subscribers for gratuitous distribution cannot fail to do incalculable good if extensively carried out and persevered in, as it certainly will be, if it be everywhere as it is in these parts, and all your subscribers feel about it as I do. The Cynosure carries a blazing light wherever it goes. Light always shows best and effects most in the darkest places. To as many such places as possible it should by all means go, and be kept going. Wherever this is done, though visible effects may be slow in showing themselves and thus weary our patience, yet if we stand still to see the salvation of God, we shall surely see it. Possibly in less time than we think. I fully believe this. Now, if there be one region darker and more needing light than this, on the subject of secretism, I should like to know where it is.

Here is fact first: In one of our little cities of, possibly, 1500 people, are not less than six of these dens of secretism, representing as many different secret orders. These all in full blast. Secretism is only another word for darkness and death in morals and religion, and for corruption in political and civil matters. Accordingly a careful observation here for a series of years shows the present state of morals and religion among us to be lower than ever before, with no seen indication of a change for the better. This certainly would not and could not be if these societies, so running over with life and vigor, were at all reformatory in character and influence. They are not so, but thoroughly the reverse.

Right here is the place for fact second: In the same town are, also, six churches of Christ, all supposed to be in good running order. These, one would naturally think, should be all-sufficient to offset, and much more than offset in power for good, the power of these bodies for evil, so that there would be some gain for morality and religion. Were this so, we could have patience and go quietly along as we have done for years. But the astounding fact is, they don't offset and are not likely to unless something be done. That strengthening command of Christ, which comes to each one of them, "Fear not, little flock," and the comforting promise implied in the words, "Because it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," seem to be utterly "of no effect" here. This is the exact truth or I would not say it. Why is this so? There may be many causes operating, and doubtless are. They hang in clusters, so to speak. One obvious cause is, that the churches and lodges are practically one, made so by the controlling lodge influence in the churches themselves. It has darkened and deadened everything. The pulpits of the city are as silent as death on the subject. No certain sound is given, the word not so preached and so applied as to touch the great evil. The press of the city—it has several weeklies—follows closely the example of the pulpit. Never a word against any secret order, but, on the contrary, they seem to regard them all with favor. They publish a Society Directory in the same column with that of the churches, as though equally a blessing in the community. This is the impression made. Very many are thus led to think the lodges just as good and as much needed as the churches, while others boast of them as better and more needed.

More need not be said to show how gross the darkness here. Things cannot be said and done in a very open way. Better on the sly than not at all. The light of the Cynosure can be let in by little and little. Its presence may not be noticed, but it will penetrate the darkness all the same and finally lead to open and more aggressive work. The twenty copies sent me I received in trust and wish to account for them. They are now in the hands of those who will read and use them. I know from inquiry they are doing good. Some of them have expressed a desire to subscribe for the paper. The want of means, just now, is all that hinders. I shall look after the matter and forward any names I may be able to get. The good work begun must go on.

PITH AND POINT.

GLADSTONE AND CHINESE GORDON.

The "grand old man" who so successfully holds the helm of that grand old ship, the British Empire, has again been crowned with victory over the raging elements which threatened to wash him overboard. The passions of bitter partisanship, like the turbulent sea and conflicting wintry winds, assailed him on every side, but his sound oaken ship surmounted them all and arrived safely in its destined port. Ireland and the Soudan were the thunder-clouds; and all the raging passions engendered by the misrule of past times in both countries and all the prejudices and fanaticism existing between the extremes of Mohammedanism and Romanism might be supposed to be combined with the recklessness of party spirit and the murderousness of dynamiters. And had Gladstone become a victim like Alexander of Russia, or our own Lincoln or Garfield, the worldlings in their wisdom would have exclaimed, "Just as we expected!" But happily it has been otherwise ordered. I have no more doubt of a Superintending Providence over the affairs of men and nations than that the sun turns night into day, or that the same Creator who made the sun adapted the eyes of men and moths to its light.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

My convictions are that we must be co-workers with God in this much needed reform. I cannot go out to lecture but I can spare a little of my scanty means to have the Christian Cynosure, and must have a supply of leaflets to scatter as seed, that some may fall in good soil. Then I think I am taught by Word and Spirit whom to support as ambassadors of Christ. I will not allow myself to be deceived; I would know certainly that he is a sound man in our reform; or if he is limping, save him if possible. If you cannot cure him, let him go to his own company. So, too, with your missionary contribution. You can now direct that it will not pass through the hands of lodgeites; and if you please, transfer your dollar you have so long a time given to those secular papers which are enemies of our cause. Let us pray that our God will give us victory.

LODGE PATRONAGE AT RICHMOND, INDIANA.

Although this is called a Quaker city, it is largely under control of secret societies, and yesterday I witnessed in one of the leading churches a scene that made my heart sick. It was the celebration of the ascension of our Lord by the Knight Templars in full uniform, which to some seemed grand, but to others, calling to mind the words of the Saviour in Matthew 24: "When ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel, standing in the holy place, flee to the mountain." It would seem that the time to flee has come. When we saw such a mixture of Christianity and idolatry as was there exhibited we could but ask with the apostle Paul, "What fellowship hath light with darkness, or what concord hath Christ with Belial, or righteousness with unrighteousness?" We are commanded to have no fellowship with these works of darkness, but rather to reprove them.

A FEW QUESTIONS FOR DR. LORIMER.

The Masonic lodge, is it from heaven or of men?

The Masonic apron which possesses such extraordinary virtue, is it from Mount Sinai, or did Joe Smith find it enwrapping the first Mormon Bible, the sanctions of which consist in the number of Solomon's wives?

Is a Knight Templar's claim to being a Christian no better than his spurious title of Sir Knight?

Does the Doctor's nearest approach to the example of St. Peter lie in wielding a sword?

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XI.—June 15, 1884.—The Blessedness of Believers.—Rom. 8: 28-39.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—We know that all things work together for good to them that love God.—Rom. 8: 28.

"We know." It is not merely a devout wish and hope, but a certain conviction. God comforts with realities.—A. S. We must remember that this was written in the midst of persecution, and in the expectation of bonds and imprisonment (see vers. 17, 18, and 35, and Acts 20: 23.—Conybeare.

"That all things." The whole universe, with all that it contains, as far as it is good, is the friend and ally of the Christian; as far as it is evil it is a more than conquered foe.—Hodge. It would be wrong to embrace under this promise what we may do ourselves in opposition to God's will, since that would contradict the idea, them that love God.—Godet.

"Work together." Look upon no evil, poverty, affliction, etc., as working by itself. For illustration, opposite seasons work together to perfect the year's harvest; opposite gases make a wholesome atmosphere.—Biblical Museum. Work implies time and a lengthened process, trial and waiting, till, like the harvest from the ground or the cloth from the loom, the long operation is perfected. To judge hastily of God's dealings ere his purposes are wrought out, would be like threshing a half-grown wheat-field, and being disappointed at finding no grain. Things now may seem very much against us; disaster may have met all our plans, and they may lie in the dust, though we made them with prayer for divine guidance. But have we seen the end? Wait for God, and satisfying views will break upon our eyes in the better world, when they are opened to see the reason of God's dealings with us, and how he has made all work together for our good. —W. H. Lewis.

"He also did predestinate." We thus get at the thought of the apostle: Whom God knew beforehand as certain to believe, whose faith he beheld eternally, he designated, predestined, as the objects of a grand decree, to wit, that he will not abandon them till he has brought them to the perfect likeness of his own Son. The object of the decree is not faith at all, as if God had said: As for thee, thou shalt believe; as for thee, thou shalt not believe. The object of predestination is glory: "I see the believing...., I will therefore that thou be glorified like my Son." Such is the meaning of the decree. The predestination of which Paul speaks is not a predestination to faith, but a predestination to glory, founded on the prevision of faith.—Godet.

ELECTION. This word simply expresses the divine side of our salvation. God knew and determined to do exactly what he has done in reference to our salvation. There are some simple facts and principles to which all agree, and which will help us in the practical understanding of this subject that borders on the wilderness of mystery and controversy: In every life and in our salvation we are conscious that there are two parts: (a) the divine, (b) free choice. There is much in every life that is beyond our control. There is much in our salvation and in all our acceptance of salvation, which is given and controlled by God. But also we know that we chose Christ as our Saviour. "The discussions about the freedom of the will have been endless, but nothing has shaken the conviction of the race as to the elementary idea of freedom as involved in choice."—Outline Study of Man, by Mark Hopkins.

"Whom he did predestinate, them he also called." By calling he begins to execute his plan. God has foreknown those who would not oppose to his gracious calling the resistance of unbelief, but would follow its drawing. Thereafter he has fore-ordained them to eternal salvation, and when the time had come for the execution of his saving counsel he has called them.—Meyer. Dr. Adam Clarke's interpretation is this: "God's mercy is as free to the Gentiles as to the Jews. And to this display of his mercy these two verses seem particularly to refer, and show us not what God will do for some selected individuals, but what he has already done for nations."—A. Clarke.

"Them he also glorified." It is the completion of our salvation in a glorious character, in glorious company, in a glorious work, in a glorious heaven (vers. 31–39.) This whole passage is a commentary on ver. 28.—Meyer.

"Shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" If God has done the greater, he will not leave the less undone. The gift of Christ includes all other gifts. If God so loved us as to give his Son for us, he will certainly give the Holy Spirit to render that gift effectual.—Hodge. There is a very marked shade of difference between the verb, freely give, and the preceding verbs, not sparing, delivering up. While the latter express something painful, the former denotes an act full of pleasure to the heart of him who does it.—Godet.

"All things." All that we need or hope for; or even more largely all created things, for ours, to subserve our good, and work together for us (compare 1 Cor. 3: 22). —Alford. If God spare not his own Son, in order to effect our salvation, what sacrifice on our part can be considered great, as a return for such love, or as a means of securing the salvation of others (ver. 32).—Hodge.

"Who shall lay anything," etc., i. e., no one can—neither Satan, conscience, nor the law. There is nothing to be dreaded but sin; if that be pardoned and removed, there is nothing left to fear. In the strongest manner possible, the apostle declares that the sins of believers are pardoned, and shows the ground on which this pardon rests.—Hodge.

"It is Christ that died." This is part of a double answer to the first question in ver. 33. God justifies, Christ died to procure that pardon, who then can con demn? And to make the answer still stronger, there is given a brief statement of the WORK OF CHRIST FOR OUR SALVATION. Christ made atonement by his death on the cross. "When I think of my sin, it seems impossible that any atonement should ever be adequate; but, when I think of Christ's death, it seems impossible that any sin should ever be great enough to need such an atonement as that."—Spurgeon.

"Who also maketh intercession for us." Using all his boundless interest with God in our behalf. This is the top of the climax. "His Session at God's right hand denotes his power to save us; his Intercession, his will to do it."—Bengel. But how are we to conceive of this intercession? Not certainly as one pleading "on bended knees and with ourstretched arms," to use the expressive language of Calvin. But yet neither is it merely a figurative intimation that the power of Christ's redemption is continually operative (Tholuck), or merely to show the fervor and vehemence of his love for us. (Chrysostom). It cannot be taken to mean less than this, that the glorified Redeemer, conscious of his claims, expressly signifies his will that the efficacy of his death should be made good to the uttermost, and signifies it in some such royal style as we find him employing in that wonderful Intercessory Prayer which he spoke as from within the veil (Jno. 17: 11, 12); "Father, I WILL that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am" (see John 17: 24). But in what form this will is expressed is as undiscoverable as it is unimportant.—J., F. and B.

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" This is the last step in the climax of the apostle's argument; the very summit of the mount of confidence, whence he looks down on his enemies as powerless. No one can accuse, no one can condemn, no one can separate us from the love of Christ. This last assurance gives permanency to the value of the other two. The love of Christ is clearly Christ's love towards us, and not ours towards him. The great difficulty with many Christians is, that they cannot persuade themselves that Christ (or God) loves them; and the reason why they can not feel confident of the love of God is, that they know they do not deserve his love; on the contrary, that they are in the highest degree unlovely. If our hope of God's mercy and love is founded on our own goodness or attractiveness, it is a false hope. We must believe that his love is gratuitous, mysterious; that it is what it is declared to be in the Bible, analogous to love of a parent for his child. A father's or mother's love is independent of the attractiveness of its object, and often in spite of its deformity.—Hodge.

"Through him that loved us." Not by their own strength or power. It was by the might of the Saviour, and by his power pledged to them, and confirmed by the love evinced when he gave himself for them (comp. Phil. 4: 13).—Barnes.

"For I am persuaded." There is no doubt, no question. Verses 38 and 39 are, as it were, the shout of victory on the battle-field now abandoned by the enemy.—Godet. The enumeration that follows is intended to include (poetically rather than logically) every possible category of being, especially those unseen powers of evil against which the warfare of the Christian was more particularly directed.—Sanday.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

FAITH IN GOD GIVES SECURITY AND STRENGTH.

1. The security of God's people. V. 28. God desires the happiness of every human being, and if everybody lived according to the rules he has laid down in his Word, misfortunes and trials would only be like the passing showers, which the farmer knows is just as necessary for the ripening of his fruit and grain as the sunshine. But the greater part of the human race are not living in this state of childlike obedience, so they have no childlike faith in the overruling providence of their Heavenly Father. Christ bids us take no thought for the things of the morrow, for the same hand which clothes the lilies and feeds the birds will much more clothe and feed his people, but there are many even among professing Christians who are always anxious about the future. This want of confidence in God leads them to join secret societies and be unequally yoked with worldly and godless men for the sake of getting a benefit for themselves and families in case of sickness or death. But many an Odd-fellow and Mason has died a few cents in debt to their lodge, and their families been refused the customary aid on the ground of unpaid dues. Others when too aged to work have been cast off by the lodge, which at the same time, as in the other case, kept their money. But if these men had trusted to God to provide for them in sickness and old age, if they had really believed that he would make all things work together for their good, they would never have been cheated and deceived by these selfish, Christless organizations.

2. The strongest side is always God's side. V. 31. "It is never the many but the few who reform the world," was a saying of Charles Kingsley. This is a truth to which all history, sacred and profane, bears abundant witness. No great moral or religious reform ever began with a majority. Many say that prohibition is impossible—in other words, that the rum traffic is too powerful to be overthrown. It is true that the Prohibitionists are still a political minority, but when the first temperance society was started in 1808, the movement was confined to one or two thoughtful, earnest minds who saw the mischief caused by rum, and felt that they must do all they could to stop it. Now we have numberless temperance organizations, Bands of Hope, temperance books and papers; and as a consequence people are everywhere wakening up to the importance of this great subject. The feeble minority is fast becoming a majority. There are many who ridicule the efforts of Anti-masons to overthrow the lodge power because they are so few and weak while the lodge is so strong; but "if God be for us who can be against us?"

3. Only voluntary sin can separate us from Christ. Vs. 35–39. It has been the universal testimony of seceders from Masonry that they could not enjoy Christ's presence and remain in the lodge. This shows what a dark, terrible power it wields over the soul, for it can do what Paul tells us neither life nor death, nor all the powers and authorities in earth or heaven can do—it can separate us from the love of Christ.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How do trials work good? Ps. 94: 12; Jas. 5: 10, 11. If God is for us does it matter how many are against us? Josh. 23: 10; Ps. 3: 6; Judges 6: 15, 16. What alone can separate us from God? Is. 59: 2.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.

Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1884.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

This is truly an august body. There are six hundred ministers and elders present, from Los Angelos, South California, within roar of the Pacific, and from Boston on the shore of the Atlantic; from South Florida and from Lakes Superior and Champlain, and at intervals all the way between these points. This vast group is held together by a symbol of faith and doctrine, procured and authorized by the English Parliament under the king who lost his head in 1649, cut off by the hands which wrote and subscribed their "Confession of Faith." And Hume, and Lord Brougham, and Lord Macauley, all three united in ascribing all the freedom there is in the English Constitution to the Puritan ancestors of the men who are now here in Saratoga Springs, adopting resolutions and making and hearing speeches.

True, the old Confession of Faith derived and drawn from the Bible by minds freed by Henry VIII. from the Pope, and by Scotch and English Puritans from the Bishops of Rome, has lost some of its jagged corners, as it has sailed down the gulf-stream of time. But while it holds that "Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy him forever," and that "The Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments" contain "the only rule" by which we are to know and glorify him, this General Assembly, or rather the mass of churches which it represents, will be as it now is, an august body of men. George P. Hayes of Denver, on the Rocky Mountains, is the exceedingly able moderator; and the wings of the body for which he is putting motions and giving rulings rest on either ocean, and their five Presbyteries in China, and one or two in Africa, and five in India, and their missions in South America, attest the vigor of their leadership and liberality of the people whom they instruct. And no one at all acquainted with the human race can sit and look this General Assembly in the face, with their patient, earnest, God-fearing wives by their sides, without a feeling of pride that he belongs to such a race.

PRESBYTERIAN DETERIORATION.

If any body of Christians holding to the Bible could keep itself pure, it would soon overrun the earth. God set up one church on the earth, to the last pin of its tabernacle, dictated by himself. Its religion was political, and its politics religious. Their first leader took a mass of fugitive slaves, and by the morality of the Old Testament formed them into a nation. When corrupted by success, their second great leader took a squad of bankrupts and runaways and, by the Psalms of David and the doctrines of those Psalms, formed them into a nation whose laws are now the moral standard of Christendom, which bids fair to soon include the world's inhabitants.

The Hebrew Commonwealth died of success. Solomon admitted, with his political marriage alliances, several hundred Masonic religions, which left out the Messiah, CHRIST—the only "way" mortals have to get to God. Several hundred religions mean several hundred moralities, with several hundred oaths; whereas, there is in fact, and can be but one. This infiltration of false religions, denying Christ altogether, or putting him on a level with idols; or, like Knight Templars, making him a mere tool of incantation and sorcery, broke down the Hebrew Commonwealth; so that from the most resplendent of nations, it has lost entirely its nationality, and the Jew from being the world's teacher, has long been its by-word.

Presbyterianism if it takes a like course, will have a like doom. While Presbytery in Scotland "stood up for Christ's crown rights," they gave their religious ideas to England and the United States. And when this General Assembly was thirty-four years old, and Presbyterians had begun to infringe "Christ's crown rights" by owning men, in 1818, this august body met this case thus:

"Resolved, That the voluntary enslaving of one part of mankind by another, is an atrocious violation of the most precious rights of human nature, utterly inconsistent with the law of God and the spirit of the Gospel."

In less than thirty years, this same Assembly restored William Graham, suspended by the Synod of Cincinnati, who taught and published that:

"Jesus Christ has authorized slave-holding in the charter of the church, and in all the laws he ever gave for the regulation of the church!"

The Assembly had deteriorated by admitting slave-holders. It sold Christ in the slave, "the least" of his human brethren, for denominational success.

Nor was this all. A little before Graham was suspended by the Synod of Cincinnati for his monstrous teaching in favor of slavery, that same learned and able synod, meeting in Dayton, Ohio, voted "That membership in a Masonic lodge, is incompatible with a credible profession of the Christian religion."

I do not know that the Assembly was prejudiced by its Masonic members against the Synod of Cincinnati for its action against the lodge at Dayton, or that its action restoring Graham was promoted by Masons. But in 1837, when four synods, five hundred ministers, and a Presbyterian population of 60,000, were excinded, cut off without trial or hearing, I heard Dr. W. S. Plummer of Richmond, and others urge as a reason why those ministers should be cut off, that they were "accustomed to go to Presbytery with their saddlebags full of Anti-masonic almanacs;" and Elipha White of Charleston, James Smylie of Mississippi, and the slave State members generally applauded this coarse censure of Anti-masons. The Assembly was divided, families and churches rent, heavy lawsuits incurred, religion was reproached, and souls lost to get rid of ministers who were Abolitionists, and who had been Anti-masons! Slavery is dead, and the torn Assembly is reunited. So let the painful past be buried. But the lodge which rent the churches, and for a time the Union, still lives and waves its silent secret scepter over the whole glorious Presbyterian body, so dire and savage, that when the exceedingly able and interesting Interior, last September, published some Presbyterian authorities condemning the lodge as organized deism, Presbyterian ministers, North and South, sprung to its defence and suppressed the discussion, and the secret mills of heresy grind on! Though every Presbyterian pulpit knows full well, that Freemasonry has instituted, and now practices religious services, prayers, lectures, and funeral services with Christ LEFT OUT! This leprosy must be cured by Christ, or the fate of the Hebrew Commonwealth is the fate of our Republic. The nation and kingdom which will not worship Christ must perish —"be utterly wasted."

PROHIBITION ON FIRE.

Geo. P. Hayes, D.D., Moderator of the Assembly, addressed the W. C. T. U. of Saratoga, Sabbath afternoon, May 25. Dr. Hayes, formerly president of Washington and Jefferson College, Pa., is now pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Denver, Colorado; which State has per capita, more saloons than any other except Nevada. His address to above 1,000 people, mostly men, in the town hall, was applauded to the echo. It was decidedly the most remarkable speech I have heard on prohibition. Jaded, worn by official duties, and his nervous system over-taxed, he stood forward and addressed that great crowd of learned and venerable men, beginning abruptly thus:

"I am opposed to electing any man as President of the United States whose principles and personal habits are not in conformity with the prohibition temperance movement in the United States. Do you say, This is politics, and it is Sunday, and that I am a minister? All three are conceded. But if this topic is outside of my commission as minister of Christ, will some angel tell me what is inside of it? Is not defending the Decalogue the duty of the minister and a fit theme for the Sabbath? Passing by the first two, the next seven of the Ten Commandments are every one trampled on, broken continually by the business of the saloon. More profane swearing comes from liquor than from all other causes put together. And who does not know that the saloon system is one continuous Sabbath desecration? And does liquor obey and honor parents? Is it not the incessant cause of murders? Does it respect female purity? Could the brothel live without it? Is it not the prolific cause of theft and lying? In short, the saloon despises and sets at naught every law of God and man, and if assailing, prohibiting this evil and devising its suppression is not within my commission will some one tell me what is?

"'But you cannot make a man temperate by law!' I should like to take the man who says so to our Colorado States Prison. I would there show him men made temperate by putting them where they cannot get it; and if you put a man into a prison or a State where liquor is kept out by law, how is he to get drunk there?

"But if you start a Prohibition ticket you will draw votes from the Republicans and a straight Democrat will be President. Well! What will happen then? I have been some twelve days an inhabitant of New York State, of which, I believe a Democrat is now Governor, and nothing terrible has happened to me. But we say to those Republican leaders who know they cannot whip the liquor men by party lash into supporting prohibition, and who therefore propose to whip us Republican ministers and elders into supporting license, and some candidate who has wine by his plate: Gentlemen, you cannot do it. If you wish our votes, you must give us a candidate who neither drinks, nor licenses, nor gives it to others. I would rather have an outright drunkard or a Democrat who goes for whiskey openly, than a half-breed temperance man whom no one knows where to find.

"It is pitiful, the complaints of politicians who say we ministers and elders will ruin the Republican party unless we vote along with distillers and saloonists. Perhaps some of us may so vote. But I see not how my prayer is to get through to God for the salvation of my child, while I go to the ballot-box, and vote to license damnation for that child, or elect a man who will!

"I asked a friend in Colorado, 'What further use have we for the Republican party in this State? It has gone wrong on every moral question!' 'Oh, but its glorious record!' 'We do not dispute the glory of that record, but that is behind us, and to be forgotten. What we want is a party looking into the future, and guarding our national life from what is destroying it. Give us that! For just so truly as on the 3rd of June, at Chicago, you put before us a man whose sentiments and habits are against prohibition, we will draw votes enough from the Republican ticket next November, not indeed to elect our man, but we will certainly whip yours.'"

The above statements are accurately from this wonderful speech, but they no more represent the speech than an outline represents a map. It was full of rhetoric, and clear, powerful reasoning mixed with humor which made the whole inimitable and indescribable.

But the point of importance is that the heavy battalions are moving for reform. Every speech but one given on temperance here has been out and out prohibition; and the strongest paragraphs have been applauded most.

The chairman of the Temperance Committee, Dr. McGaw, pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Toledo, Ohio, was a pupil of mine in Knox College. Dr. Bacon of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, who received our convention there and aided it, and in whose pulpit I preached against the lodge, has since at one time received thirty-four members to his church, all but three on profession, and fifteen of them heads of families. The atmosphere here is bright with omens of good to Christ's cause.

ROCKS AHEAD.

The Secretary of Education reported to the Assembly, 1,100 churches unsupplied, 700 ministers unemployed, and but 75 ministers added the last year, 64 of whom were from other churches!

The Secretary blamed the fastidiousness of the churches that the unemployed ministers could not get places. We think the good Secretary mistaken. A returned missionary gave the true clue to the explanation. He says:

"Our churches in pagan lands have increased seven-fold more than yours at home;" and the reason is those mission churches exclude the Christless worshiper, while the home churches include them.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Rev. T. P. Hendy of Emporia, Kansas, in a good Prohibition speech, gave as one cause of the defeat of Gov. St. John, his advocacy of woman suffrage; but he said no word against it. Elder John Baird of the first Presbyterian church in Laramie, Wyoming, gave his views in conversation at length, with a mass of interesting facts. He said:

"In the Legislature which gave the women the ballot, all were Democrats; not a single Republican among them. Many of them thought it the best way to poke fun at it and break the thing down. But now," said Elder Baird "our first ladies go up to the polls and vote; the crowd always opening respectfully and allowing them to pass."

"It elevates," he said, "the tone of women's societies and visits. They have something beside village scandal to think and talk of. The wife of Dr. Hamilton (late our pastor) was born in Florida; and her husband was a secesh Democrat till he came to Laramie. Mrs. Hamilton, too, was decidedly Southern in her sympathies, manners and tastes. The Dr. came in smiling one day after our village election, and said, 'Well, Mrs. Hamilton has just cast her first Republican vote.'"

"Of twenty-two saloons in Laramie City, twenty-one are run by Democrats. Our village of 4,000 people are all Democrats, almost. But we came, by the women's help, within 63 votes of defeating the license."

"How do the saloon-keepers' wives vote?"

"Probably with their husbands; but one said to me, 'I have urged husband to get out of it, and he would gladly quit the business if he could turn his property into something else?'"

"And do the majority of your women vote no-license in such a community?"

"Majority is not the word. They almost all vote against liquor."

"Do not your women sometimes hold license or liquor meetings like the brewers and distillers?"

"I never heard of such a thing! The women hold the Women's Christian Temperance Union meetings. But never one on the other side."

"What is the effect on the general tone and character of your elections?"

"Our women have elevated them. The men drink, chew, swear, and spit less than before."

The above and much more was given us by a staid Presbyterian elder and Commissioner of the Assembly.

RECAPITULATION.

Forty-seven years ago, the slave State Presbyterianay cast out 500 ministers, four Synods, and a Presbyterian population of 60,000 people for their opposition to the slavery and secret societies.

Now what do I see?

1. The extreme Southern representatives who have walked over the broken fetters of four million slaves, asking, by their delegates, Drs. Hodge and Stratton, for the brotherly love of the North, and kept from rushing back to fellowship only by the expiring remnant of secession and treason in their churches.

2. The prayers of the apostles of the Assembly are anti-sectarian prayers, not for "Our church," much less for "The church," but for "our part of thy Zion," and "That branch of thy church to which we belong."

3. The Assembly walk up meekly yet firmly to our Federal government, and point out its infractions of the Sabbath.

4. The Assembly is a flame of fire on the liquor-crime. See the sketch of the Moderator's speech before the Women's Christian Temperance Union, also Dr. McGaw's temperance report.

5. The large Assembly's prayer meeting listened to the statement of the editor of the Cynosure, showing that the schism of 1837–8 was caused by Freemasonry as well as slavery, with no sign or token of disapprobation or displeasure that the subject of secret societies was introduced.

Let us thank God and take courage.

OHIO PROHIBITIONIST LEADERS.

NORWALK, OHIO, MAY 30TH, 1884.—We ran down to Akron to see Hon. Ferdinand Schumacher, who would have been Gov. Schumacher had temperance voters done their whole duty. I am told that of the 314,683 prohibitionists who refused to vote their sentiments but went with their parties, 100,000 were Democrats, the rest Republicans. Mr. Schumacher is a wonderful man, a small wiry German, who has accumulated wealth; runs an immense business; is endlessly active; keeps his neat office in a heavy stone building in excellent architectural taste; clerks all busy, and everything in his establishment moving like clockwork. When the prohibitionists get to their senses, quit their useless parties and make Schumacher governor, Ohio will be run as his business is now, and every timber and rope be in order from skyscraper to keel, and from bowsprit to rudder.

I spoke on prohibition politics in the Universalist church, which Mr. Schumacher patronizes, not because he is a Universalist, which he is not, but because it opens its doors to the discussion of reforms. The singing was excellent. The pastor of the Congregationalist church gave me complimentary introduction. Rev. Mr. Helwig, late President of Springfield College, also attended with us, both excellent men; in short you will see I was glad we went down to Akron.

GIDEON T. STEWART

is here at Norwalk. He is reputed to be a very successful lawyer, and a good man and Prohibitionist. He lives in a neat and comely mansion, one wing of which is his office, where his son is partner, and two other sons here are in good business. Both these men have devoted time, talent and money to the Prohibition war, and God rewards them through their children. It is to be regretted that neither Schumacher nor Stewart oppose secret societies. They have not studied their nature, and do not see how utterly hopeless a cause Prohibition is while allied to the lodge by the little "orders" which are mere drill-schools for Masons.

THE POLITICAL CLOUD-BURST

will have come before this reaches our readers. Ben Butler is already riding two horses to get to cover, —Anti-monopoly, which is "Bread or Blood," and Greenbackers, both of whom give the lie to their good principles and professions by nominating a thirty-three degree Mason. The country is agape to see which liquor-drinker and advocate of license Republicans will nominate next Wednesday, and what Prohibitionists will do with the nomination.

—General Secretary Stoddard lectured in the Free Methodist church in South Chicago Saturday evening, and improved the occasion of his visit to interview some of the pastors of that suburb, with encouraging results.

—A good letter from the apostle of reform in Kentucky John G. Fee of Berea, comes too late for the present paper and will appear in our next.

—Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit is now with his son-in-law, Rev. George P. Milton of Winnebago, Ill. He is invited to address a Sabbath school meeting in the College Chapel, Wheaton, next Sabbath afternoon. He will be present at commencement at Wheaton and at the annual N. C. A. meeting and the American convention in this city.

—Our Banner, edited by Rev. J. C. K. Milligan speaks with little hope of the recovery of his brother, Dr. Milligan of Pittsburg. Reports which we believe to be later are, however, we are most happy to say much more encouraging. A change in his medical treatment has had a good effect and some of his friends have again become hopeful. The Banner says:

"Dr. A. M. Milligan is not thought by his friends to be improving. His condition is that of extreme prostration of all the vital organs, without any apparent organic disease. His friends and all who love the church will pray earnestly for recovery. Verily the hand of the Lord has been laid heavily on the ministry during the past year. Five ministers have been called away, and three, including Drs. Milligan and Sloane, have been disabled for weeks and even months."

—The memorial to the United Presbyterian General Assembly upon the secret lodge of the Grand Army of the Republic, which is reprinted on our 12th page, aroused prolonged discussion which made some revelations that ought to be a surprise. From the press report given below it appears that the brethren could not determine whether a society whose murderous oath we published last week should be fellowshiped by the church. But there is no doubt as to the result of the proposed investigation, and we shall await it with interest. The dispatches say:

"The afternoon session was wholly devoted to the discussion of the report of the Judiciary Committee as to whether the members of the Grand Army of the Republic could become members of the United Presbyterian church under the rule excluding members of secret or oath-bound societies. The committee reported they had not sufficient evidence to decide the question, and expressed the belief the matter belongs to church sessions and presbyteries. This was not deemed satisfactory and a warm and animated discussion followed. Finally the whole matter was referred to a special committee with instructions to report positively to the next General Assembly, and give their reasons why they decide yea or nay."

A LAW WHICH SHOULD BE COPIED by every State in the Union is that lately passed by the New York legislature and thus reported by the Weekly Ithican: "All interested in the suppression of immoral literature, that modern propagator of crime, will be glad to witness the wholesome check about to be placed upon publications and newspapers of the Police Gazette order which have become so popular as Sunday as well as week-day reading with a large class of superficial people. The Albany legislature has passed a bill, now in the Governor's hands, which declares it a misdemeanor to sell, give away, lend, or show, or keep for sale or distribution any book, pamphlet, magazine, newspaper or other printed matter devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports or accounts of criminal deeds, or exhibit any such books or papers upon any street or highway or in any other place within the view, or which may be within the view, of any minor child. This will compel the newsdealers and vendors of flash literature to keep their wares under cover, where they will no longer catch the eyes and inflame the imagination of school boys or offend the modesty of their mothers and sisters."

—"There is not a heathen left." So writes a missionary from the Island of Puru, in the Scanan group. And what makes this announcement most remarkable is the fact that missionary labor there was not undertaken until about eleven years ago. During this time the whole island has been evangelized; and the churches, having built good chapels and mission houses at their own expense, are now supporting their own pastors and contributing to the society that sent them their teachers and preachers. This is an encouragement to all missionary workers everywhere. It shows that when the Gospel is faithfully preached it will be received, and will save the nations.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS IN EGYPT report much success among the Mohammedans. From the report to the General Assembly we copy: "Every year many of our pupils are the children of Mohammedans. In 1882 over 500 Muslim were in our schools. In 1883 there have been 536 pupils from the children of Islam. During the existence of the Mission some 39 persons of Muslim birth have been baptized. Of the 39 there have been 22 ex-slaves, who had been brought from the Soudan; the remaining 17 were native Egyptians. Ten of the twenty-two slaves have died; of the twelve living two are trying to do what they can in teaching the Gospel. Of the seventeen Egyptians one has died, two have gone to America, and Ahmad is in Edinburgh. So that of the 39 baptized, 11 are dead, 3 are abroad, but in connection with the church, and 25 are members of the church in Egypt, three of them being native children, twelve being ex-slaves and ten adult native Egyptians. It is only within the last two or three years that anything like a "movement" among the Muslims was evident. Thirteen of the 39 referred to above have been baptized within that time, most of them during 1883. Nine others—one a girl and one a slave—are now asking for baptism, making forty-eight who have left their old faith. This may not appear a very large number, but the tremendous prejudices to be overcome must be remembered, as well as the fact that until very recently the certain doom of every convert from Islam was a miserable death. And of those who last year came unto the light of the Gospel, one was banished to Cyprus, where he is now an exile from his native land; another was imprisoned; another was beaten and put in irons—all were cast off by the parents and counted as dead. It would be curious to know how many Muslim converts had been made in the whole Turkish Empire!"

—Rev. James M. Pullman of New York has also spoken plainly on the Grant failure in a recent sermon:

"We have heard an ex-general of the army and an ex-President of the Republic spoken of in connection with the late catastrophes; what are we to think about that? We regard him with a certain veneration, to be sure, but are we to say that a man who was able to hold the position of General of the army and to sit through two terms at the White House was so bereft of the power of reflection and observation, that he sat an unsuspecting and innocent victim to the cunning of an unscrupulous Wall street wildcat? No, we are not to be so blinded. Our judgment is that men who breathe that malarious atmosphere of political and speculative life will have their judgments and consciences perverted so that acts formerly abhorred will seem to them just those to be tolerated. We ourselves are parasites of the social order. A bad social taste as in this Wall street rottenness no more tends to cure itself than a cancer. When righteous men go to work this evil will be extirpated. Nature cannot do it. You were put here for this purpose. For this you were furnished with a conscience. Are we learning to spend our money no better than they did in the days of Nero? When we ignore our obligations this is our mistake, and then is our damnation. These transactions in Wall street are simply those of unmorality, not immorality."

A TESTIMONY IN A GREAT MEETING.

REMARKS OF THE EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY PRAYER-MEETING, SARATOGA SPRINGS, MAY 24, 1884.

My Respected Brethren:—Forty-seven years ago I was present in this Assembly in Philadelphia when it was rent assunder into New and Old School. The alleged causes of that fearful schism were not the real causes. The doctrines of this Assembly are to-day the same they were then. The real causes were given by a few slave State leaders who reproached the ministers of the excinded synods with opposition to slavery and secret societies.

Slavery is now no more. The auction block on which mothers were sold with babes in their arms along with mules and cattle, is gone forever: and now what do we see? The representatives of those churches which cast you off, Drs. Hodge and Stratton, are here asking and offering the reciprocities of brotherly love! aye, and their tendered spiritual fellowship and love are received and returned.

This great Presbyterian body, in which I have spent, as a Presbyterian pastor, nine of the happiest and most useful years of my life, was, in its origin, a religion of principle; and it is now swinging back from where it was stranded by the slavery cyclone, to its old grooves. Let the dead past be.

"But let us see in our return to humanity; the fall of the slave-power, your noble and fearless testimony for the Sabbath, your bold declaration for the prohibition of the liquor-crime,—let us see in these our return to God I have been in many Presbyterian prayer meetings, but never in a sweeter or more tender one than this. For the Spirit of God goes where the truth of God is uttered and applied, and when the stumbling-blocks are taken up, and Christ's way made straight among the people, he will come and help us, and save our sinful race."

After these few remarks, a brother arose in the meeting and announced my name, and several afterward warmly greeted me.

—For fear of alienating votes the political press of all stripes and shades is very tender of Gen. Grant and his $14,500,000 failure in stock gambling. It is impossible to conceive how the head of a firm, and the one who gave it character and standing, should be deceived as to its dealing unless he was an imbecile or criminally neglectful. The local paper in Wheaton put the case well:

"For our part we can see no apology for engaging or continuing in a business which gives or promises illegitimate or mysterious profits, and believe the thief or criminal in high life should be punished, as well as the poor man."

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet pro vides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Pro claiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cyno sure.

5 Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C A , to the amount of 25 cents.

The Home.

TREAD IT IN!

Costly seed my hand was sowing:
Summer's sultry sun was glowing,
  While refreshing showers were few.
Thus a gardener espied me,
Stood ere long in smiles beside me:—
"Seasons late and clouds untrue—
Failure only may betide me;
  Seems my labor vain to you?"

This his answer: "After strewing
Thick your seed, there'll be no rueing
  If you only tread it in;
'Twill not matter greatly whether
Late the time and dry the weather,
  Best results you still may win;
Soil and seed urged well together—
  Soon the sprouting will begin."

Carefully the seed-bed pressing,
Trampling in my scattered blessing,
  Now I watch the skies no more.
"Sow as sows the garden lover,
Drop the seed, with patience cover;
  Faithful work with worthy lore—
O'er the two success will hover,
  Desert places these restore."

Loving sower, thou art needed!
Far too oft is skill unheeded
  In the work we do for God;
Many a soul no joy has tasted,
Many a life to failure hasted,
  (Work's grand sceptre made a rod!)
Much of sowing has been wasted
  With the seed-bed left untrod.

Seed is God's, but man's the sowing;
Seasons, too, are God's bestowing,
  But the harvest's his and thine.
On the earth the seed is lying,
For the human tread 'tis crying.
  Brooded o'er by heart divine,
Still the priceless germs are dying—
  For the lack of touch of mine!

Tread the good seed in, O teacher!
Tread it in, discouraged preacher,
  All thy being o'er the word!
Press it with such true endeavor
Heart-soil there must cling forever,
  All its chemistry upstirred;
Naught shall then its life dissever,
  Lateness, drought, nor searching bird.

SCENES IN THE LAND OF THE VEDA

It is only by scaling their towering heights and gazing down into their silent depths and across their sunlit peaks that one receives any adequate idea of the sublime grandeur of the Himalaya range, whose glaciers effectually close in India on the north. The memory of two long, glorious summers spent amid their towering beauties will never be forgotten. Imagine yourself, if you can, dear reader, in the early spring, with the thermometer running up already into the nineties, turning with a crowd of perspiring humanity, northward. The East Indian railroad bears you rapidly toward Umbally, some fifty miles east of the first range. You pass swiftly through cities and villages, surrounded with various tokens of paganism; you stop momentarily at stations, whilst a throng of strange people, in all the strangeness of Oriental garb, and in various states of excitement, scramble aboard; and on again rushes the iron horse through the dust, heat and glare, until welcome night wraps its mantle around the landscape. In the early morning your destination, at least by rail, is reached, you partake of a refreshing breakfast, and the dawk gharree, or mail carriage, is announced; you go out and see an odd-looking. closed carriage, with sliding doors of wood, drawn by four or six wiry-looking little ponies, or tattoos. You get into your conveyance, and have to recline on cushions, the reason of which you soon discover. A ringing blast from a horn, reminding you, perhaps, of old stage-coach days, a crack of the whip, a cheery shout from your pagan driver, and you are off—with a vengeance. The ponies fairly fly over the ground, the vehicle rocks alarmingly, the pace threatens destruction; where the road is rough, the mystery of the cushion is explained, Your poor body is slammed from one side of the coach to the other, your spirit groans within you, your repeated and imploring cries to stop! or go slower! are misunderstood or unheeded. You resign yourself to the unevitable, and are pulled up a dusty, panting, heaving, groaning mass at the first stage.

Fresh horses are brought forth, and on you go again until, as the evening shadows lengthen, you complete this portion of your journey, and pause to rest your weary body at a comfortable hotel near the foot of the first mountain range. Simla is your destination, some fifty miles in the interior, and that distance you must travel on horseback; for about ten dollars a stout little hill pony is provided, which you will change for a fresh one at stations, scattered at intervals of fourteen miles or so along the road, and a syce or groom accompanies you. The road goes winding up and down the mountain, a narrow rocky path, scaling giddy heights, rounding dangerous precipices, sometimes lost amidst the fragrant forest trees where birds of brilliant plumage fill the air with melody, and hosts of monkeys chatter and gambol; anon dipping down into deep hollows, fording swift tumbling streams, and then up higher yet until the walls of the fort crowning the heights of Kissoulee, five thousand feet above the sea, appear in the distance. You leave it behind, and go on into the mountain solitudes until Simla is reached.

A station of some note and importance is Simla, because it is the seat of government during the hot season, and from the first of May till the last of October is thronged with people of all ranks. It is a gay and delightful summer resort nestling in the bosom of the eternal hills whose "shadowy sides" are clothed with many hued garments, and behind them in solemn grandeur tower the "snowy range;" five miles of the earth's crust, crowned with a glittering coronet of ice and snow, cast up into the azure. Here is scenery before which the Alps and Rockies, with all the glories of the Yosemite, fade away into insignificance. "Here may the eye, as it sweeps along the horizon, embrace a line of snow-clad mountains, such as exist in no other part of the world, stretching over one-third of the entire circle, at a distance of forty or fifty miles, their peaks towering over a sea of intervening ranges piled one behind another, whose extent on either hand is lost in the remote distance, and of which the nearest rises from a gulf far down beneath the spectator's feet, where may be seen the silver line that marks a river's course, or crimson fields of amaranth and the dwellings of man." Here may be seen glorious sunrises when "God's great picture" is made resplendent by the brilliant orb of day, as it flashes from the eastern sky over the distant peaks. Here the departing day, with soft and mellow light, steals softly away, as peak after peak is hidden in shadows and an unseen hand draws the curtain of silent night across the bright expanse. You stand in awe as the glowing purples of the hills are slowly veiled from sight, and the night is carried up the slopes of those gigantic snowy peaks, which still raise their sublime heads, radiant in rosy light, far above the shadows of the darkening world.

Look abroad from these Himalayan heights and gaze upon this land—"historic, electric with mighty associations, with political changes, and with the birth of great religions." In imagination, you see the splendors of Jehangeer's royal court, when England's first ambassador was received as a humble suppliant.

Some two centuries pass rapidly before you, and you see that "great mogul's" lineal descendant, Shah Gezee, the last of his line, a prisoner in a small house of three rooms in the once royal city of Delhi, with two British soldiers standing guard over him.

You see Agra with its tomb of Akbar, and the peerless Tay Mahal, a structure of which Bishop Heber said, that "it was designed by Titans and finished by jewelers." You see Delhi, Lucknow, and Cawnpore, where gallant Outram, Christian Havelock, brave Campbell, and many other valiant men, like so many Alexanders,

> From morn till even fought,
> And sheathed their swords for lack of argument.

You see Allabahad, Benares, Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, with their monuments, temples and ghats; their palaces, schools, churches, and missions; their teaming millions, religions and philosophies. As you look abroad over this broad expanse, whose history seems written in the sky, and to be whispered to you by its palms and mangoes, tamarinds and bread-fruit trees; over all this land of idolatry; over these fields of antiquity and these scenes of a decaying faith, beholding the triumphs of the cross, you say, thank God, the labors of Xavier, Carey, Judson, Wilson and Duff, have not been in vain; the long night is passing away, and the "day is at hand" when, in the courts of heaven, an archangel shall declare "India is the Lord's and the people thereof," and unto her God hath "given a new name." Brethren and sisters in Christ from the Atlantic to the Pacific, it is for us to say how much a brotherhood, half-a-million strong, can and should do to hasten this glad time of final triumph.—C. C. Crowther, in the Christian Standard.

Masonry excludes Jesus Christ in order to include infidels and peoples who have embraced religions based on other than Christ as Redeemer. How, then, can a Christian be a Mason? Will some Methodist preacher answer.—The Shining Way, David City, Neb.

NOT GUILTY.

A member of the church congregation in Wisconsin was last fall charged with gambling in stocks and and brought up before a committee for investigation. The trial began by a deacon asking:

"Brother Smith, the charge is gambling in stocks."

"Yes, sir."

"And you plead not guilty!"

"No, sir, I plead guilty."

"Then you do buy and sell stocks, speculate in wheat and oats, and sell futures in pork?'

"I do, sir. Didn't I give $1,000 in cash to help build this church?"

"Yes."

"Well, I scooped them in on a little deal in pork. Didn't I pay in $500 on that organ?"

"Yes."

"That was a part of my profits on a speculate in in oats. Didn't I foot a deficiency of $400 in the minister's salary this year?"

"Yes."

"That came from a rise in stocks. Didn't I chip in $700 toward the parsonage?"

"Yes."

"That came from a corner in oats. Haven't I whacked up on the orphan asylum, the new bridge, the park, and the fire engine?"

"You have."

"Well, that meant more corners and holding on till I felt my hair growing grey. Gentlemen I will step out for a moment and let you reach a verdict."

He stepped out, but it was only thirty seconds before he was called in and congratulated on the verdict of "not guilty."—Selected.

A PERFECT WOMAN.

Was there ever a eulogy on woman to rival Proverbs 31? A glory of enthusiasm flushes through a womanly being to find the Lord has made her a creature of power. Let her beware that "the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil," and that "she will do him good and not evil, all the days of her life." How the Omniscient enlarges on the industry of the good woman, and the comfort and adorning she gathers into a household! What a brave perfection this woman of whom it is written by God's Spirit, "strength and honor are her clothing, and she shall rejoice in time to come. She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up and call her blessed: her husband also, and he praiseth her. Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all." Thus much for woman in her usual lot of wife; but here follows a universal application: "Favor is deceitful, and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised. Give her the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praise her in the gates." Why should a feminine ever be dissatisfied with the sphere Providence assigns her? She may be feebler in physique and brain than man, but a subtle influence is hers he owns not. Even if wanting in seeming force, as some love to represent her, let her take comfort, for "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."—Sunday Magazine.

Temptation is a fearful word. It indicates the beginning of a possible series of infinite evils. It is the ringing of an alarm bell, whose melancholy sounds may reverberate through eternity. Like the sudden, sharp cry of "Fire!" in the night, it should rouse us to instantaneous activity, and brace every muscle to its highest tension.

Faith takes up the cross, love binds it to the soul, patience bears it to the end.

FAITH.

Dear mother, what is faith? do you know?
I hear people talk about it so,
Is't beautiful to see?
And can you show it me?
I want to have it right, when I grow.

Well, mother's little girl, let—me—see;
Come close beside my heart—on my knee.
Where are all the flowers
That blessed the summer hours?
Think how they filled your heart with glee.

You know they are all dead upon the plain;
Have you hope that they will come again,
The pink and crimson rose,
And all the lily-blows,
As you used to see them drink the rain?

Why, yes, I'll see them all, mother dear,
When winter time is gone they'll be here;
The buttercups will shine,
And daisy buds look fine,
When God sends the summer of the year.

Well, that is faith, my child, when you feel
That He is to be trusted for our weal;
And hearts are never cold,
No matter, young or old,
When loving trust is worn for their seal.

WHY EDDIE CAME HOME WITHOUT THE POTATOES.

Eddie Watson's auntie told me a story about him, which is such a good instance of presence of mind, that I will tell it to the little readers of the Pansy.

Eddie lived with his parents on a farm in Colorado. One day when he was about eight years old his mother said:

"Eddie, I would like you to be my marketman. Take your express wagon and go to the field, and tell Baker to please fill it with potatoes. Come back as quickly as you can, for I want them for dinner."

"Yes'm," said Eddie, "I'll hurry."

And emptying the stones with which he had been playing out of his wagon, he ran along till he came to a rise of the ground, from the top of which he could see the potato field.

He soon found Baker, who filled the wagon, and then Eddie with a "Gee up!" and a "Go ahead, Ned!" trotted briskly toward home; but when he came to the edge of the hill he was suddenly brought to a standstill, and had it not been for his courage he might never have gone any further; but as it was a few minutes later he rushed into the kitchen, almost out of breath, crying:

"Oh, mother, I didn't bring the potatoes for as I was going to run down the hill a big bear ran out from somewhere and stood on his hind legs right in front of me, so close that his hot breath came into my face, and he poked out his long, red tongue, and licked his chops as if he was ready to eat me.

"I shook so I let go my wagon, and it rolled down the hill, but the bear didn't move for I kept looking straight into his eyes. Oh, I think I must have looked for five minutes, and his hot breath came puff, puff, on my cheek, and his tongue went click, click. click, till my eyes began to feel so queer that I thought they would go shut, but just then one of our pigs came grunting along, and he picked the pig up in his arms and ran off to the woods, and then I ran down the hill as fast as I could."

"You are my brave boy," said his mother, as she fondly held him in her arms; then after a while she asked. "Why did you not run as soon as the bear came up to you?"

"Because," replied Eddie, "I remembered that father said, 'As long as you could look an animal in the eyes it wouldn't hurt you,' and I knew if I began to run the bear could easily catch me."

Eddie's father and Baker went in search of the bear and killed him. He proved to be a large grizzly.

How thankful Eddie's parents were that God had given their boy such presence of mind to act as he did. Some little folks scream terribly when only a bat flies near, or a worm or bug gets on them. Begin, children, while you are young to cultivate this good quality called presence of mind, which will help you in time of danger to be calm, while in your heart you can ask God what is best to be done.—Mary R. Earl in The Pansy.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

Young men do not realize as they should the importance of early forming habits of self-control and self-denial. Not a few men of genius have been wrecked because they did not learn in youth to deny themselves a temporary pleasure for the sake of a permanent benefit.

When John Quincy Adams was but fourteen years of age, he was selected by Francis Dana, United States Minister to Russia, as his private secretary. Boy though he was, young Adams resisted the social pleasures of court life at St. Petersburg that he might give himself to his official duties, and to the study of Latin, German and French, and to a course of English history. Subsequently he resided at Stockholm and at Paris. In both of these gay and dissolute cities he was his own master. But instead of yielding to social temptations, this boy of eighteen resolutely continued at his studies. While hard at mental work in Paris, his father, John Adams, was appointed minister at the Court of St. James. London's literary and social privileges would have been opened to the son of the American minister. His father would have been pleased to have had him in his family. The temptations to remain abroad were many and strong; but the youth turned his back upon them all, and decided to return to the United States and fit himself to earn his own living. He wrote in his diary:

"If I accompany my father to London, my satisfaction would possibly be greater than by returning to the United States; but I shall loiter away my precious time and not go home until I am forced to it. My father has been all his lifetime occupied by the interests of the public. His own fortune has suffered. His children must provide for themselves. I am determined to get my own living, and to be dependent upon no one. With a tolerable share of common sense, I hope, in America, to be independent and free. Rather than live otherwise, I would wish to die before my time."

We have quoted several lines of this entry, because we would call attention to the fact that this boy of eighteen resolutely put aside congenial pleasures in order to become self-reliant and self-supporting.

He was a rising lawyer when, at the age of twenty-seven, the President appointed him United States Minister at the Hague. He filled the place. His official duties were thoroughly attended to, and a little of his time was given to those social duties which his position imposed. But most of his leisure hours were employed in studying diplomacy, the English and Latin classics, and the Dutch and Italian languages. At night he reviewed the day, and censured himself if any duty had been omitted. At the close of every month and year he took an inventory of his moral and mental stock, to determine whether he had gained or lost.

In 1809, Mr. Adams became our minister at the Court of St. Petersburg. He found himself in the midst of splendor. Court life was full of entertainments, and magnificent banquets were given by the foreign ministers. But Mr. Adams continued to live in a simple style, as befitting his small salary and more becoming the representative of the Republic. Merchants urged him to accept loans of money. He refused the offers, though the temptation to an expensive style of living amounted almost to compulsion. "I will live within my income, and I will not anticipate my salary," he said, with Spartan firmness.

Mr. Adams' simple style of living kept him in good health and gave him leisure to indulge his thirst for knowledge. Yet the days seemed too short to the student who studied astronomy, mathematics, Plato, Demosthenes, Socrates, Æschines and Cicero. "I feel nothing like the tediousness of time," he wrote in his diary. "I suffer nothing like ennui. Time is too short for me, rather than too long. If the day was forty-eight hours, instead of twenty-four, I could employ them all."

Our purpose will be served, if we shall have induced one young man to imitate John Quincy Adams' self-reliant and studious habits. The country, the churches and society needs thousands of such self-reliant youth.—Youth's Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

REV. C. C. HARRAH of Galva, Ill., announces through the Union-Signal that he will lecture in behalf of local W. C. T. Unions or at temperance conventions in any part of the State. He asks no reward for this labor which is one of love to him, but asks that his expenses be paid, and that the proceeds of the lecture be used to promote the temperance work. The topics of lectures already prepared are: "Blood Will Tell," physiological; "The Advance Line of Temperance Reform," an anti-license plea; "Jesus the Emancipator of Woman," a gospel argument for woman's political enfranchisement.

BANNER TOWNS.

It was reported early last month from Marseilles, Ill., that the town election had for the sixth time consecutively voted "no license." This is the effect of the good work so earnestly set forward by Rev. A. Ethridge, and narrated by him in the Cynosure. This report has brought out the fact that Tampico, Whiteside county, Ill., has for nine years together voted "no license," and at her late corporation election but five votes were polled against the temperance ticket. A third banner town is Onargo in Iroquois county, of which a correspondent says: "With a population of 1,500 inhabitants there has not been a saloon in our little city for seventeen years, and for twelve years the subject of license has not been an issue, nor has it been mentioned at any election. We prefer churches and schools, of which we have six of the former, and a seminary with a record equal to any institution of its grade in the State, and a public school of which we are proud."

THE M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE ON TEMPERANCE.

The following report of a special committee was adopted unanimously at Philadelphia:

"The most important question of reform now before the public is that which relates to the prevention of intemperance and the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as beverages.

"We recommend the formation of juvenile temperance societies in all our Sunday schools and elsewhere, where practicable, and greater diligence in the home instruction of our children and youth concerning the evils of intemperance and the liquor traffic. To this end we suggest the introduction of one temperance lesson each quarter into our Sunday-school series, and that a temperance department be established in the Christian Advocate and in all weekly and semi-monthly papers published by the authority of the General Conference, including those intended specially for our Sunday-schools; and also that our Tract Society give increased attention to the publication and circulation of tracts upon constitutional prohibition.

"We further recommend the organization of annual conference temperance societies in all our annual conferences, and that upon the request of any conference, the presiding bishop appoint an agent to aid in carrying forward the temperance work, and also that greater diligence be used by our quarterly conference committees on temperance in promoting this reform in their respective communities, and that pastors shall convene these committees regularly once a quarter, as the discipline directs.

"We advise and urge that instruction upon hygiene and alcohol be introduced into all colleges, seminaries and other schools of our own denomination, and reseectfully call the attention of State legislatures to the importance of requiring by law the introduction of instruction upon these subjects into State universities and public schools.

"We remind our pastors and official members of local societies of the duty incumbent upon them to faithfully enforce our rules forbidding the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicants.

"While we seek to impress upon our people and the public the importance of total abstinence, we do not forget that it is the liquor traffic itself that is the chief source of the wide-spread intemperance that prevails, and we regard that traffic as an enemy to every true interest of the human race. It destroys health, reason, character and life, and wars against the home, the church, society, and the state. It is the most gigantic evil of the age in which we live, and its overthrow should be sought by all good citizens, without regard to denomination, party or nationality.

"We rejoice at the progress of public sentiment concerning this evil within recent years, and that a strong conviction is taking possession of the best and most thoughtful people in the land that this traffic ought to be exterminated. * * *

"We are unalterably opposed to the enactment of laws that propose by license, taxing or otherwise to regulate the drink traffic, because they provide for its continuance and afford no protection against its ravages. We hold that the proper attitude of Christians toward this traffic is one of uncompromising opposition, and while we do not presume to dictate to our people as to their political affiliations, we do express the opinion that they should not permit themselves to be controlled by party organizations that are managed in the interest of the liquor traffic. We advise the members of our church to aid in the enforcement of such laws as do not legalize or indorse the manufacture and sale of intoxicants to be used as beverages; and to this end we favor the organization of law and order leagues wherever practicable.

"We thankfully recognize and approve the great work carried on in all parts of the country by that National Temperance Society and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; we recommend their publications, commend them to the pecuniary aid of our people and earnestly exhort our members to actively co-operate with these organizations.

"Finally, we proclaim as our motto, 'Voluntary total abstinence from all intoxicants as the true ground of personal temperance, and complete legal prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating drinks as the duty of civil government.'"

TEMPERANCE REFORM IN RUSSIA.

One of the great curses of Russia is strong drink; and no people can rise in the scale of existence with this horrible millstone about their necks. The following extract shows that there is some thought on the subject in Russia:

The Emperor of Russia appointed a commission, some months ago, to investigate the causes and remedies for the increasing intemperance in the use of alcoholic liquors in his dominions. Of this commission, the well-known statesman and diplomat, Ignatieff, was the chairman. As a result of their investigations, the commission have recommended a very sensible and effective schedule of reforms. They vest the sale of intoxicating liquors in every village in the village council. There shall be but one drinking-house in any village, and the councils of a number of adjacent villages may agree that but one drinking-house shall suffice for them all. In each of these houses, tea, coffee, and other non-alcoholic drinks, shall be kept for sale, and also a supply of good water to be dispensed free. The keeper of the place shall be a resident of the village, a man of good character, and he shall be paid a salary, the profits of the business to go to the village treasury for local improvements. The commission provide also for punishing persons found drunk in the streets; for removing and fining the drink-vender if he sells to intoxicated persons, and for closing the drinking-house in any village by the district governor, if the council, through their agent, conduct it in an improper manner. It is probable that the Emperor will issue these propositions in a decree. It is not a little remarkable that Russia is in advance of every other European country on this subject.—Selected.

—The steamer Good News sent out in sections by the London Missionary Society for service on Lake Tanganika, has reached its destination and the parts are being put together, with a fair prospect of doing good work. It was Stanley's idea to send out a boat in this fashion.

THE CHURCHES.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley, Wesleyan evangelist, and his wife celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary on Monday evening of last week with a pleasant company of friends at their home in Wheaton.

—The graduation of the first class of Wheaton Theological Seminary, June 16th, will be an interesting event in the history of the Wesleyan churches and the friends of the institution will be largely represented on the occasion. It was hoped that Rev. N. Wardner, editor of the Wesleyan, could be present and speak, but ill health and the pressure of important private business will unfortunately prevent.

—The Lockport Wesleyan Conference has a special ministerial meeting on the 11th inst. at Napoli, N. Y. Among the topics to be presented is "Secretism Sin per se," by Rev. J. L. Benton.

—The Methodist Episcopal General Conference did not adopt the report on temperance printed on another page without some opposition. Debate was prematurely cut off and the vote was taken hurriedly; but opportunity was given for a considerable number to enter their protests against the paper.

—The Swedish Augustana Synod will meet in its twenty-fifth annual convention in Andover, Ill., on the 19th of June. The roll of ministers now include over 190 pastors with over 425 congregations. Its missionary activity is very extensive and successful.

—Moody and Sankey, the evangelists, began a three weeks' farewell mission, May 27, in an immense iron tabernacle which has been erected for their use on the Thames embankment. Mr. Moody told a correspondent that the Lord had wonderfully blessed the work in which they had been engaged during the past winter and spring in London. During that time they have held missions, varying in duration from one to two weeks, at Warnsworth, Islington, Stepney, Clapham, Battersea, Stratford, Newcross, Hammersmith and Hampstead, and thousands of souls had been brought to the Saviour. Mr. Sankey had been absent for several weeks on account of illness, but he was now happily recovered, and they believe the present series of revival meetings will be the most successful of all their work in England. After these meetings they expected to rest a few weeks, and to return to their homes in the United States early in July.

—At the State Association of Congregational churches meeting in Peoria last week, resolutions were adopted looking to the consolidation of all the women's missionary societies into one body. A report recommending the appointment of a State Sunday-school Superintendent, who shall do his work under the auspices of the Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Society, was adopted. A committee was appointed to prepare a memorial to the State Legislature relative to the law of divorce. The new creed was discussed at some length. Opinion as to the adoption of the new creed is about evenly divided; it is not thought it will receive the indorsement of this association.

—On Monday last in the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church (New Light) meeting in Pittsburg, Pa., a report of the committee condemning the liquor traffic licensed by the government, and providing for the excommunication of such church members as deal in spirituous liquors and rent property to tavern-keepers, after heated debate, was unanimously voted down.

—The Methodist Protestant Convention, in session at Baltimore Thursday, declared in favor of total abstinence and passed a resolution insisting that the divorce laws be so framed as to forbid either divorced party to marry during the life of the other.

—The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church began its sessions in Northwood, Ohio, last week.

—The mission to the Kabyles of Algeria, established by Mr. H. Grattan Guinness and Mr. and Mrs. Pearse, has been extended so as to embrace the rest of the Berber races. It is managed by a council. It is to be known hereafter as the "Mission to the Kabyles and other Berber races of North Africa." The secretary is Edward H. Glenny, Linton Road, Barking, London. The Berbers number six or eight millions. They are not so fanatical as other Moslems. The mission has two stations and is about to open a third. A medical missionary has been added to the staff, which now consists of five persons.

—W. B. Bagby of the Southern Baptist Mission, in Bahia, Brazil, says the Brazilians, with some exceptions, are quite willing to hear the Gospel, while in the interior where the power of the priest is not so great, they are eager to hear it.

—Sardan Hermon Singh, who is heir to princely estates in one of the richest provinces of Northern India, has recently been converted to Christ through the labors of the Presbyterian missionaries. According to Hindu custom he thereby forfeits his right of possession; but he gladly disregards this for Christ. He has married the daughter of the Rev. Golak Nath, a native Presbyterian missionary.

—The Baptist Foreign Missionary Union, in session last week at Detroit, decided to send missionaries to the Congo, in Africa, at a cost of $30,000 yearly. The Home Missionary Society began its meetings, the largest receipts in its history being reported—$401,692. During the year 145 churches were organized, and in the South and West 107 new churches were erected. The Society has school property of greater value than $600,000.

—Some weeks since, reference was made to the case of two police captains at an out-station of the American Board in Japan, who had become Christians, and one of whom had lost his place in consequence. The second was also forced to resign. The matter was brought to the notice of some of the higher officials, and, perhaps, as a result, one of the ex-captains has received a better position in another department. There is, no doubt, more or less local hostility to Christianity in Japan; but the spirit of the central government is decidedly favorable. It is very widely believed that the recent visit of Privy-councilor Ito to Germany, where he had several interviews with Prince Bismarck, and even with the Emperor William himself, on the subject of Christianity, made a profound impression upon his mind. He is reported to have said that he had previously believed that religion was, with these men, merely a matter of State policy, but that he was now convinced they were sincere Christians.

—The Rev. Clara M. Bisbee has started a Free church in Boston on the basis of "ethical culture." There will be in the service no petition to deity in the hope that human supplication may reverse the irrevocable decrees of nature, but "unworded music shall express our common confidence in that power which makes for righteousness."

—At the Moravian Synod at Letiz, Pa., the committee recommended that the synod meet only twice in ten years. Sixty-five ministers were now in the service, with five churches and two chapels dedicated; increase in members, 645; total communicants, 8,649. The church papers under the new management were successful. A valuable library of 1,356 volumes was presented by W. G. Malin of Philadelphia, being the rarest collection of Moravian literature in existence, excepting the archives of Herrnhut. The interest in foreign missions is increasing.

—The Wycliffe celebration in London, May 22d, was concluded with a great evening meeting at Exeter Hall. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided. In his address he said: "Of the reformers—Wycliffe, Luther and Tyndall—Wycliffe was perhaps the greatest. The Wycliffe movement diffused information and knowledge among the common people which hitherto only the learned possessed. Wycliffe's correct title is, 'The Morning Star of the Reformation.' England, after his time, never again was subject to the rule of the Pope. The people of England can only show thankful appreciation of his life by cherishing his precepts and blessing God for the translation of the Scriptures he made." Canon Taylor moved that "the quincentenary of John Wycliffe's death affords a suitable opportunity to commemorate his work as a patriot, church reformer, translator, and preacher of the holy scriptures." In making the motion Canon Taylor said: "The great work which Wycliffe died for—the church—is now in danger of being overthrown, and we should beware of those who are trying to lead us back to darkness, blindness, idolatry, and medievalism." Mr. Taylor's motion was carried.

—A German statistican tells us how the Christian people are taken care of by ministers of the church. 1. Protestants: There is one clergyman for 625 inhabitants of the United States, 794 in France, 908 in England, 932 in Hungary, 1,100 in Holland, 1,300 in Denmark, 1,440 in Switzerland, 1,600 in Germany, 1,734 in Austria, 2,268 in Finland, 3,600 in Russia. 2. Roman Catholics: There is one priest for 267 inhabitants of Italy, 419 in Spain, 536 in Portugal, 540 in Switzerland, 680 in Holland, 812 in Germany, 823 in France, 1,050 in Belgium, 1,143 in Austria, 1,145 in Hungary, 1,200 in Russia, 1,320 in England. 3. Greek Catholics: There is one priest for 350 inhabitants of Greece, 884 in Southern Austria, 1,060 in Russia, 1,900 in Servia.

—The American Congregational Association held its thirty-first annual meeting Tuesday, last week, at Boston. The year's receipts were $23,389, and the balance on hand is $233. Annual memberships were abolished, and life memberships raised from $30 to $50.

—The papers say that lately H. W. Beecher invited a celebrated violinist to play a few tunes for his congregation after the sermon was through, and he accepted.

—A missionary of the China Inland Mission, in the province of Kansuh, says that in Thibetan families every other son is given up to the gods, and is supported by the family. A principal temple has 300 priests; another has 100.

—Miss Whateley, who for twenty years past has been laboring in mission work in Egypt, said in a recent letter: "The first text which I learned in Arabic, and taught to my first little school of ragged girls, was this: 'I am the way, the truth, and the life;' this has been the head and front of all my teaching these many years."

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY met in St. Louis on Thursday last. The report of the permanent Committee on Narrative and the State of Religion showed a membership in the United States of 87,637, a gain of 2,194 in the year, an increase of 739; communications in foreign fields, 858; congregations in the United States a gain of 19; ministers, 732, a gain of 2; Sunday-schools, 825, a gain of 2; amount contributed to the memorial fund, $186,443. The Rev. Mr. French, of Cincinnati, was elected moderator without any contest. The report on foreign missions said that missionary work had been concentrated on two fields, viz: On the northwestern provinces of India and in the delta and valley of the Nile in Egypt. In six years laborers increased from 174 to 274, communicants from 1,069 to 2,648, and contributions from $47,551 to $64,179. Last year's receipts were $69,186, of which $32,980 was sent to Egypt and $28,480 to India. Gen. James A. Eakin presented and read a memorial prepared by the Allegheny convention, which strongly protests against the repeal of the law forbidding instrumental music in the church, and appeals for a restoration of the law. The memorial was listened to attentively, and at its conclusion that part of it relating to the interpretation of the law was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The press reports of the Assembly work on Saturday say that a test vote indicates the final decision will be that individual churches will be allowed to determine for themselves whether they will use musical instruments or not.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC AND THE UNITED PRESBYTERIANS.

[From the Christian Instructor.]

An association, self styled the Grand Army of the Republic, is organized in various States of our Union. If this order is an oath bound secret association, as is believed and charged by those best informed as to the character of the various orders of secretism, viz: the active workers in the National Christian Association, the United Presbyterian church cannot in faithfulness to her principles ignore the danger arising from this order, if fellowshiped in her communion.

This subject will come before the General Assembly by memorial, as may be seen in a published abstract of the minutes of Keokuk Presbytery. The judgment of the General Assembly in deciding the application of the Fifteenth Article to the holding of membership in said order would be preferable to conflicting judgments on this subject by different presbyteries. One presbytery (and perhaps the only presbytery that has taken action on such connection) has judged it inexpedient to either approve or condemn such connection.

Its action is referred to as a precedent or a reason to others for non-action on their part. And thus another of our distinctive principles is in danger of being eliminated from our profession. Success in removing one but emboldens attack upon another and another of our distinctive principles.

The only "two spiritual powers in the world," viz: "the spirit of evil and the spirit of good," are ever antagonizing each other—error and truth striving for the mastery. Each appeals to the church for her sanction and influence.

The following is the report of a committee appointed by Keokuk Presbytery on this subject and laid on the table—the whole subject to be referred by memorial to the General Assembly. The report is based on a published exposure of the ritual of the G. A. R., and is perhaps the best evidence now to be had as to the character of said association:

To the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Keokuk, to meet at Morning Sun, Iowa, April 7th, 1884: Your committee to which was referred the question from Morning Sun relative to members of the United Presbyterian church holding membership in the order known as the Grand Army of the Republic, would respectfully report:

That, after careful examination of this subject, we do without hesitation, declare that such connection is inconsistent with the principles of the United Presbyterian church, and is explicitly forbidden by the principles of the church. See especially the Fifteenth Article of the Basis of Union. To be more particular: the Grand Army of the Republic is a distinctly marked or defined factor in the great Empire of secretism which is so fearfully dominant everywhere. It is a society whose members are required, even before taking the oath of initiation, to come under a solemn obligation to keep secret everything they may see or hear in camp before, during or after the time of initiation. They are required in the oath of initiation solemnly to swear that they "will never make known or cause to be made known any of the hidden mysteries, work or ritual of this band of comrades, wherby the same may come to the knowledge of the uninitiated." Each one further swears, while kneeling at the altar, with his left hand on the crossed swords and the Bible, and his right hand pointing upward: "I will yield implicit obedience to the encampment of which I may be a member." And again: "I further swear that I take this obligation upon myself without any mental reservation or equivocation, under no less penalty than that of being treated and punished as a traitor by this order. So help me God, and keep me steadfast."

It is a society dangerous in any government, but especially in a government republican in form, (a) because it may be used for the promotion of unworthy and dangerous men who may manage it, to obtain coveted places of power in the government; (b) because worthy men may be discriminated against for the single reason that they do not hold membership in this secret order.

It is a society founded in and permeated by selfishness, and is, therefore, contrary to the letter and spirit of the Holy Scriptures. It is an irresponsible society, independent of either church or state, bound together by rash pledges and extra-judicial oaths. It claims the "power of the sword," that is, power over the lives of its members, and by its claims usurps the high prerogatives of the civil magistrate. This order is a society (in a word), secret and oath-bound, carefully guarded by outer and inner lines; it has its altar, emblems and chaplain; it has its grips and passwords; its promises and oaths of secrecy, and its penalties.

Hence, we conclude the order known as the Grand Army of the Republic is an association within the scope and meaning of the Fifteenth Article of the Basis of Union, and by it condemned, therefore,

Resolved. 1. That sessions are hereby enjoined to see that our rule excluding persons holding membership in this or any similar organization be strictly complied with.

2. That this report be ordered spread on the minutes of Presbytery, and that it be published in the papers of the church.

Chairman of Committee.

TRUTH IN THE HUSK.

We publish the poem below at the request of a lady reader, whose solicitation would have been in vain had not the surroundings of the piece given it a certain relative value. It is entitled "Masonry: by a Lady," and appears in Vol 1., No. 1, of the New Jersey Telephone, "a Masonic Guide," Jan., 1881. Alongside and filling about two-thirds of the page is the following in large type:

"To the Masonic Fraternity, Worthy Brother, Companion, or Frater: As a mark Master Mason under certain circumstances would present you with his mark and request of you some favor, so we present you with this specimen of our work, and request of you the favor of your subscription to our paper for the year 1881. Fraternally and courteously yours, W. H. Jefferys, 33rd degree, publisher and editor."

Following the poem is a note from the editor:

"We publish the above poetry with a view of pleasing our better half. In this connection we are compelled to admit the unpleasant fact that the matron of our house, and the angel of our home, has become an Anti-mason.

"Brother, Companion, or Frater! do you ask why is this thusly? We answer thereby hangs a tale of disappointment, sorrow and suffering—on the one part; and of violated obligations and murdered vows on the part of certain of our Masonic Brothers, Companions, and Sir Knights.

"We will reveal no more, except in that strict and private confidence which is expressed by the Masonic words 'on the square.'

"We however, deem it right and proper under the circumstances, to give place in our columns to 'Masonry: by a lady.'

"☞'Let us have peace.'"

A Mason's life is one that's free—
(Not the life though of mortar and bricks)—
But out at nights enjoying a spree,
And playing astonishing tricks,
While the shes at home are waiting,
Ne'er dreaming it all a dodge,
But thinking the sad belating
Is caused by "work at the lodge!"

Where they meet upon the level,
To part upon the square,
And raise the very devil
While congregated there.

If a bachelor chap in his courting days
Grows weary of being tied,
Both day and eve, almost always,
At his fair Dulcinea's side,—
The easiest way to escape awhile,
And in fact some calls to dodge,
Is to seek the aid of a Mason friend,
And join a Masonic Lodge.

Where they meet, etc.

If a married man is tired of home,
If he out at night would hodge,
And from his life-companion roam,
The wretch will join a lodge!

Where they meet, etc,

The women don't like Masons—
Don't believe in them the least—
From the Tiler at the entrance,
To the fellow in the East.
Lodge meetings are but covers
To hide some lurking dodge—
Look out when mates and lovers
"Have business at the lodge."

Where they meet, etc.

Now whate'er the Mason's secret,
Be it fetish, goat or ram;
Be their Order good or evil,
Worth a blessing or a —— psalm!
Let them keep it, snug and cosy,
Let them worship (in a horn),
Let them be sedate and prosy—
But as sure as they are born

We'll yet meet them on "the level,"
And ere we part be "square,"
For at some lodge-held revel
The women will be there.

Then woe betide the sinner
Who "spreads it" in the East;
Fear will make him rather thinner,
Though he may be fat—the beast.
And all their grand regalia—
Skin-aprons, scarfs, and jewels—
We'll sieze upon as plunder,
For women all ain't fools,

Though they don't meet on a level,
And don't part on a square,
Still they all can raise the ——
If they get a chance that's fair!

LODGEDOM.

—Confederate decoration day, May 27, was observed at Fredericksburg, Va. A floral shield and dove from the Grand Army Corps were suspended on the Confederate monument. The Confederate veterans joined in the observance of the National Decoration day.

—Chicago Commandery, Knight Templars, have accepted an invitation from the Minnesota Grand Commandery to attend their meeting June 24. They will start on the Sabbath on their tour of pleasure and dissipation.

—Rev. Mr. Butler of Exeter, Neb., is in trouble. Having to officiate at the funeral of a Mr. Bivins, he did not express any opinion as to the whereabouts of the departed brother, but impressively exhorted the sinners present to repentance. The local post of the G. A. R., of which Bivins had been a member, held an indignation meeting, passed resolutions denouncing the parson, and sent them to the newspapers. Let Bro. Butler take courage from this sort of trouble. See Matt. 5: 10–12.

—The "Right Worthy Grand Lodge of Good Templars" convened in Washington city last Tuesday for the thirtieth annual session with 400 delegates in attendance, representing Canada, India, Prince Edward Island, and every State in the Union. The R. W. G. T., George B. Katzenstein of Sacramento, presided. The report declares that unless one or both of the great political parties declare unequivocally for temperance that the temperance people will support a prohibition candidate to be nominated at the convention to be held at Pittsburg July 23. On Friday, John B. Finch of Nebraska was installed "Right Worthy Grand Templar."

BUSINESS.

THE WASHINGTON ADDRESS.

James Kennedy of San Jose, Cal., having ordered a quantity of the Washington address, "Frecmasonry and Free Government," sends for a second lot. "We want," he writes, "to post the prohibition lodge men of San Jose, for they are still groping in the dark, although they have been traveling eastward for 'light' for the last hundred years. But they love darkness rather than light."

Now that the national conventions are setting and presenting candidates is the time to interest radical men in favor of a radical party, and none is more so than the American. Circulate these pamphlets. Write to the N. C. A. treasurer for as many as you can well use, and send postage for them.

BIRNEY.

The sketch of JAMES G. BIRNEY, candidate of the Liberty Party for President, in pamphlet for 25 cents. A limited number of copies of this handsome pamphlet for sale at the N. C. A. office.

CHURCH FURNITURE.

A great bargain can be had by any church desiring to furnish its house of worship with seats and cushions. Address

NOTES.

We again wish to call the attention of canvassers for the Cynosure to the necessity of their stating in their letters that there is an extra copy due them, when such is the fact.

1ST. Unless you do state it, the subscription clerk may not think of it.

2D. When you send in a few names at a time, it is impossible for us to keep the account so as to know when each has his quota of subscribers, for we have not the time.

3D. Some have preferred not to take any commission though sending in full clubs. But we wish it clearly understood that if anyone who wishes it has failed to receive his extra number of the Cynosure or any commission due, we hope that they will write us at once that we may correct the error.

4TH. We are doing the business for you, friends and if it is not done satisfactorily we hope you will write us a personal letter.

5,000

Copies of the address by President J. Blanchard at Washington,

"FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT,"

are ready at this office for IMMEDIATE DISTRIBUTION. Let every reader of the Cynosure get a few copies to circulate among his neighbors. Send the postage and get the documents FREE.

F. W. CAPWELL, president of the N. C. A., and chairman of the National Committee of the American party, says of this speech: "It seems to me, in the line of address, the crowning effort of your life was the address you delivered at Washington, and reported in the Cynosure March 20th."

DR. J. N. NORRIS, Birmingham, Iowa, writes: "Permit an humble citizen to offer you his congratulations and to thank you for the brave, strong words for God and humanity uttered by you in the late Washington convention."

Let every reader of this note write immediately for all the copies he can use, enclosing stamps to pay the postage.

WONDER-BOOK
Of HISTORY—Illustrated.

A SURPRISE even for the old steadfast friends and champions of THE LITERARY REVOLUTION, and a delightful "chunk" of literary "dynamite" for the foes of choice books for the millions. "WHAT IS IT?" A new, enlarged, beautifully ILLUSTRATED and RICHLY BOUND edition to my heretofore published Historical Wonder-Book, which contains, UNABRIDGED:

GREEN'S Larger HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE.

CARLYLE'S History of the FRENCH REVOLUTION.

CREASY'S Fifteen DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD.

SCHILLER'S History of the THIRTY YEARS' WAR.

HERETOFORE it has been a "'Wonder-Book' in the amount and (literary) quality of its contents—the cheapest, well-made historical volume ever published." NOW, it is that, and more; very large and valuable indexes have been added to each of the four works; heavier and better paper is used in printing, and the printing is greatly improved in quality; nearly a hundred ILLUSTRATIONS, by famous artists, have been added; the BINDING is so unique, striking and appropriate as to be considered almost "an inspiration"—whoso sees the cover will be tempted to think he has found the gate to the "royal road to learning," and will surely open and look within. "WHAT IS THE COST?" Amazing as it may seem TO YOU, the price is only $2.50 per copy; and, even beyond this, the most extraordinary inducements are offered to energetic

AGENTS who will thoroughly canvass the exclusive territory assigned to them. My object is to make this work the means of advertising and introducing my numerous other books, which are not sold by agents or the trade, but to buyers direct only. To secure your choice of territory (and exclusive agency), whether village, township, or county, write IMMEDIATELY, stating your experience, what you want, and what you will undertake to do.

500,000 VOLUMES CHOICE BOOKS—100-page catalogue free. Books for examination before payment on evidence of good faith. Not sold by dealers—prices too low. Books by mail 20 per cent extra, for mailing.

FARM AND GARDEN.

GRAPE FERTILIZERS.

The grape-vine requires at the same time nitrogen, phosphate of lime, and potash. The first two seem to give the plant a powerful vegetation, and the third appears to favor the production of sugar in the fruit. All fertilizers containing these three elements in suitable proportions and sufficiently assimilated, may, therefore, be advantageously applied.

Stable manure contains from four to five-tenths per cent of nitrogen, from seven to eight-tenths phosphoric acid and about four or five-tenths potash. In France, according to Professor Faex, of the Agricultural School at Montpelier, from twelve to twenty-three tons are applied to the hectare (two acres, one rood, thirty-five perches) every four years, in a rather fresh state in impermeable, clayey land, and more or less decomposed in soil that is light or of average consistency and specially where calcareous.

Sheep's manure contains 72 per cent of nitrogen, 1.52 per cent of phosphoric acid. As far as known it is richer than stable manure. Its effect on vegetation also is more apparent and shorter of duration. A dose of about twelve tons is used every three years.

Reeds, seaweed, chips, etc., may be applied in heavy soil after having been coarsely chopped, or in lighter soil after being previously decomposed. These divers fertilizers contain nitrogen in the following quantities: box, 1.17 per cent; seaweed, from .40 to .45 per cent.

Soot contains 1.15 per cent of nitrogen and a rather large proportion of phosphate of lime and salts of potash; therefore, it produces very remarkable effects on the vine, especially in calcareous soil. Two or three tons are used to the hectare. Its action is annual, or nearly so.—Prairie Farmer.

SHADE TREES—PLANTING AND AFTER-CARE.

Trees that have grown in the open air will do better than those from thick woods. In selecting, those only should be taken that are perfectly sound; a dead spot, however small, will extend until it ruins the tree. Trees with short trunks and large thick tops should be chosen, avoiding such as divide into two nearly equal branches, for they will be very likely to split down. In taking up trees, every root should be secured to the uttermost fiber as far as possible, and without splitting or bruising them, and the holes for planting them should be large enough to receive the roots in their natural position. While out of the ground the roots should be protected from the air and kept moist, and in setting them fine rich earth should be packed around all the fibers.

Trees should be staked to prevent the wind from starting the roots, and well mulched to keep the ground moist and loose. A vicious practice prevails very extensively of cutting off the entire top. This is the death warrant of the tree. It may put out new branches and do well for a few years, but the wound will seldom heal; there will be a dead stub above the new limbs that will ultimately decay down into the center of the trunk, and the limbs will break off or die. This process in its various stages may be seen in a large proportion of the trees that have been treated in this way. If a trunk must be cut off, let it be just above a thrifty limb, whose growth will heal over the wound. If branches must be removed, they should be cut close to the trunk, great care being taken not to injure the bark or wood, the cut made smooth and covered at once with wax or paint so as to exclude the air. Shade trees are usually set too thick, from two to four times too many being put on the ground; consequently, as soon as they have grown a little, they interfere with each other, and a struggle for existence commences, in which all suffer and symmetrical growth is prevented. Trees should never be allowed to exclude the direct sunlight from a house; to do so is to make it unfit for a dwelling. To remedy this by pruning will leave naked trunks covered with unsightly scars, too large to heal over, which will ultimately decay and kill the tree. Thinning out is but little better, for the trees that remain will be stragglers standing at irregular distances, with forlorn and badly shaped tops.

Shade trees should be carefully watched and all branches that start where they are not wanted, that will ever interfere with streets, walks, buildings, or other branches should be promptly removed. Such branches are often neglected until their removal irreparably injures the shade tree. All dead limbs should be taken away at once.—American Agriculturist.

WORKING HORSES UNSHOD.

Shoeing horses is almost unknown in our section. I have often driven them 30 or 40 miles a day, and have never had a shoe on them. Our mail driver makes a daily circuit of about 30 or 40 miles with shoeless horses. I have several times purchased horses very cheap in the city, for the reason that they could scarcely walk for sore feet. After the shoes were removed and they were sent to the farm, in a few days all signs of lameness disappeared. A pair of mules at this time do most of the farm work; when purchased they could hardly move without apparent pain. The shoes were removed and they have had no trouble since, in working as a team or in the cart. A horse-shoer could not "make his salt" in our section. The reader will understand that we have no stones, and seldom a frozen road to travel over, and as a general thing the best of roads. Turnpikes and toll-gates were never known on the Eastern Shore.—A. P. S., Rock Hall, Md., in Country Gentleman.

TOMATO CUTTINGS.

A writer in Gardening Illustrated says that if young shoots of the tomato are taken off and propagated like bedding plants, they will make a less rampant growth than seedlings and be more fruitful. Cuttings prove best for pot culture. They are then to be kept near the glass, with a temperature of about fifty degrees.

THE BACK YARD.

Many back-yards are abominations to the eye and nose. One finds in them all sorts of litter and refuse from oyster cans to old boots. Here the slops of the kitchen are poured to increase the odors which ought to warn every thoughtful person of the malarial influence breeding there, to break out eventually in fevers or diphtheria. If any member of the family dies from one of these diseases, his death is probably lamented as a mysterious dispensation of providence, but the minister would say if he were to visit the back-yard, that death was caused solely by a violation of hygienic laws. A very strong argument against a dirty back-yard, is the spirit of deception which it is apt to foster in the young members of the family, for it is a constant deceit to present a clean and attractive front-yard to the gaze of the passers, while the back-yard is not fit to be seen. Children should be taught to be clean for the sake of cleanliness, and not because outsiders are likely to criticise them. The best plan is to have a hogshead or large box fitted up in one corner of the yard, and make it a rule to throw into this old cans, boots, broken dishes and all such rubbish, and when there is a great accumulation, to bury or burn it. Do not allow anything to be thrown about. Have drains made to convey all slops entirely away from the house. Make good walks, and let the ground have a fine covering of grass, not weeds. Put up strong supports for the clothes-line. Keep the fence in repair and plant currant bushes near it. Set vines about the refuse barrel, and train them over it until it is hidden. If you have a receptacle for ashes, let it be something which can be shut up, not a row of old barrels to offend the eye and give out a cloud of ashes every time the wind blows. Make it a rule to have the back-yard at all times as clean as the front one.—E. E. Rexford, in American Agriculturist.

KEROSENE TO KILL INSECTS.—AN EMULSION.

It has been discovered that milk, either fresh or soured, is a convenient medium to unite kerosene and water. Mix together kerosene and half as much milk, stirring them thoroughly to form a cream-like mixture. When the two are so completely united that no oil is visible, dilute the mixture with twelve times its bulk of water, adding the water gradually, and stirring thoroughly. This emulsion has been found especially useful in the treatment of the various scale insects, so difficult to destroy by ordinary insecticides, and is used for various other insect pests. For trees use a syringe or force pump, and for house-plants, often injured by scale insects, apply with a sponge or swab.—American Agriculturist.

The Cooley Creamer

Saves in labor its entire cost every season. It will produce enough more money from the milk to Pay for itself every 90 days over and above any other method you can employ. Don't buy infringing cans from irresponsible dealers. By decision of the U. S. Court the Cooley is the only Creamer or Milk Can which can be used water sealed or submerged without infringement. The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

The Coming Conflict

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire. Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

IN BRIEF.

A Sunday-school in Maine claims to have a teacher who in the last 22 years has been absent from only three sessions of the school. A school in Ohio claims the next best record, a teacher who in fourteen years has missed only two sessions.

It is estimated that there are between four and five thousand Chinese living in New York and Brooklyn. Much Christian work is done in their behalf, with very gratifying results. About 1,000 of them are enrolled in the Sunday-schools of the various evangelical denominations. Nearly forty of them are communicants.

Near Wabash, Ind., there is a school called "White's Institute," under the auspices of the Quakers, for the education of Indian children, forty of whom were recently received into it. These children come from nearly every important tribe in the Northwest and are educated at the expense of the general government.

No, young man, it doesn't hurt you a particle to sow your wild oats. Go ahead and sow as you wish. But it's the gathering in of the crop that will make you howl. And you have to gather it, too. If you don't it gathers you in, and one is a great deal worse than the other.—Burdette.

The cheapest and simplest gymnasium in the world—one that will exercise every muscle and bone in the body—is a flat piece of steel, notched on one side, fitted tightly into a wooden frame, and after being greased on both sides with a bacon rind, rubbed into a stick of wood laid lengthwise in a sawbuck.

Tornadoes occur in the afternoon generally between two o'clock and evening, four being called the tornado hour. They move from southwest to northeast generally east about twenty degrees north; and their linear movement is ordinarily from thirty to forty miles an hour. Tornadoes occur on sultry days, or when the temperature is very high, and the air is thoroughly saturated with moisture. They occur when the electrical conditions are high, or when the air is highly charged with electricity.

There is a remarkable place in the Gulf of Mexico known as the "oil spot." It extends about two miles along the shore, and perhaps three-quarters of a mile seaward. In a storm its appearance is very wonderful. All around are angry boiling waters, tossing the foam high in air, while within this enclosure is a perfect calm. In fine weather there is nothing to distinguish the place, but in a gale the waves become thick and of a reddish hue. Mud taken from the spot has all the cleansing qualities of soap, and is used to scrub the decks of vessels. Scientific men are puzzled to know what makes the "oil spot."

The last day of December, 1884, it will be 500 years since John Wycliffe died. The 21st day of May is to be celebrated the denunciations of his doctrines, which took place some forty-two years after his death, in obedience to the Council of Constance. The commemoration services will cover the following points: First, the deliverance of the country from foreign spiritual domination; second, the circulation of the Scriptures in the vulgar tongue; and third, the bringing of the Gospel message both by tongue and speech to the very doors of the people. It has been arranged that the commemoration shall comprise a special religious service in the church of the parish in which the doctrines were formally condemned, a popular gathering at Exeter Hall, and a conference at the Mansion House. At the conference the question will be raised, How can Wycliffe's memory be most suitably honored? The most honored names in England are associated with the movement. The churches in America, as we understand, do not intend wholly to overlook the quincentenary of the "Morning Star of the Reformation."

Sabbath desecration is proving to be not profitable. At Coney Island, where the Lord's day is utterly disregarded, it has been difficult to obtain competent and responsible men to conduct the hotels, because they do not pay or pay so little as to make no adequate return for the work and worry expended. The restaurants in the same locality change hands pretty much every season, because they too don't pay. The stock of the railways leading to the island has only a nomina price, because it is earning nothing. In this city the Sunday opening of the Exhibition of Water Colors was a disappointment in the matter of revenue. In Cincinnati the demoralization resulting from the desecration of the Sabbath was one of the prime causes of the recent riot.—Christian Intelligencer.

I have been figuring up what this capital of ours has cost us since the beginning, and I find that the amount is over $100,000,000. The subject was investigated by Congress in 1876. The total at that time was a cost of $94,362,453; since then $5,500,000 has been paid out for public buildings alone, and the amounts paid out for works of art, park decorations and other things will run the total far ahead of the amount above stated. For a number of years it has cost more than $1,000,000 a year to pay the government expenses of the District of Columbia, and since 1862 the amounts have been much higher. In 1873 the amount was more than $8,000,000. In 1875 it was more than $7,000,000, while from 1828 to 1852 it was less than one million a year. In 1814 only $1,800 was appropriated for the District of Columbia, and it was not until 1837 that the yearly proportion reached $1,000,000. It is interesting to look over the items of permanent improvements in Washington. These include the original cost of the buildings and their repairs, furnishing and keeping in order. The following estimate, though not exactly correct, is approximately so. It is less rather than greater than the actual cost, some of the minor expenses during the last seven years being omitted: The Capitol has cost $17,672,123, the Patent Office over $13,000,000, the Treasury about $7,200,000, the Washington streets more than $6,000,000, the State Department about $7,000,000, the Navy nearly $4,000,000, the White House, two parks and public grounds, about $2,000,000.—Washington (D. C.) Republic.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

As a Brain Food.

Dr. S. F. NEWCOMER, Greenfield, O., says: "In cases of general debility, and torpor of mind and body, it does exceedingly well."

To Country Belles.

VEILS and sunshades cannot prevent the summer sun from embrowning your complexions; but Glenn's Sulphur Soap will speedily restore if duly applied according to directions. The great charm of this article is, that there is not a suspicion that the effect it produces is artificial. Nothing can be more natural than the soft velvet texture it imparts to the skin. "C. N. Crittenton, Proprietor," is printed on each packet, without which none is genuine. Sold by druggists and fancy goods dealers.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, fifty cents.

High Authority.

DR. W. E. SCOTT, President of the College of Physicians, Montreal, writes: "I have recommended Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic as the best preparation used for debility, indigestion, dyspepsia, fever, ague, and loss of appetite." (Take no other.) Of druggists generally.

From Wilmer Brinton, M. D., Baltimore.

"I have used Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic in my practice, and have been much gratified with the result. As a tonic in all cases of debility, weakness, anæmia, chlorosis, etc., etc., it cannot be surpassed." (Remember the name, COLDEN'S—take no other.) Of druggists.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Odd-fellowship Judged by its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness:" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages: cloth, $1

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper. 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—It is estimated that about eighty members of the House and twenty Senators will attend the Chicago Republican Convention.

—The majority report of the United States Senate Elections Committee on the Danville riot declares that it was premeditated and preconcerted for the purpose of raising the race issue and intimidating the negroes. The Democrats prearranged the riot and endorsed it after it had occurred. In the Copiah, Miss., investigation, the majority report being Democratic, exhonorates the murderers of Wheeler.

—The Senate has passed the House bill appropriating $100,000 for the relief of the flood sufferers along the Mississippi amended so as to expend $50,000 and the balance for an Ohio relief fund.

—Colonel J. O. P. Burnside, disbursing officer of the Postoffice Department, was arrested Thursday. Examination of his books reveals the fact that he has embezzled government bonds of a face value of $45,000. He has been a fast liver, and recognized as a speculator and stock gambler for years.

COUNTRY.

—Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood of Washington, lectured before a small audience at Hershey Music Hall, Chicago, Friday evening. She spoke of the Presidential candidates and favored Logan.

—While Mayor Harrison, of this city, was passing along LaSalle street, near Jackson, he was enveloped in a cloud of dust arising from a pile of debris taken from a building at present being torn down in the vicinity. Two workmen who were guilty of the heinous offense of causing dust to settle on the Mayor's clothes were arrested and fined $10 each.

—Miss Clara Barton, President of the American Association of the Red Cross, started from Evansville, Ind., Monday last, with a boat-load of clothing, provisions, furniture and farming utensils to supply the people in the lower Ohio flood districts, whose wants have not yet been fully looked after.

—The first message over the new cable owned by the Gould-Mackey company was received Monday afternoon at Rockport, Mass., the steamship Faraday thanking the selectmen for her reception, and hoping to complete connection with Dover Bay that day.

—A dynamite cartridge was discovered in the basement of the building at Edina, Ind., in which the Journal of that place is printed. The discovery caused some excitement.

—Frederick D. Grant and Jesse R. Grant, sons of the General, filed schedules in their assignments at New York Monday. F. D. Grant owes $2,215,066, with assets nominally worth $1,990,013. J. R. Grant's liabilities are placed at $95,249, the nominal value of his assets being $131,150.

—In Fountain county, Ind., in a deposit of black sand, gold has been discovered yielding a large percentage to the ton. The find has caused no little excitement in the district.

—The natural gas well discovered on the Westinghouse premises in the Nineteenth Ward of Pittsburg is believed to be the largest in the world.

—George I. Seney, of the Metropolitan Bank, New York, made an assignment of his pictures Tuesday for the benefit of the creditors of the bank. There were 137 pictures valued at $350,000.

—There are 1,515 insane people in the asylum on Blackwell's Island, New York, and the State Commissioner of Lunacy estimates that New York will have 18,072 insane people in her asylums in 1890.

—Two boilers in a mill two miles east of McBride, Mich., exploded Friday afternoon, totally wrecking the building and killing three men. The bodies were unrecognizable. Charles Davis was fatally scalded and four others were injured.

—One of the worst railroad wrecks ever known, where there was no loss of life, happened Wednesday on the Falls branch of the N. Y. Central road at Murray, a short distance east of Albion, N. Y. Two freight trains collided at full speed on a single track. The crash was terrific and reduced both engines to a mass of broken iron, the engineers and firemen jumping in time to save their lives. Fifty-three freight cars were derailed, and twenty were in an instant piled on top of the two engines.

—Knupp's Tunnel, near Pittsburgh, on the South Pennsylvania railroad, was the scene of a terrible accident by which nine were instantly killed and eleven others severely injured, with slight hopes for recovery. A large force of men was engaged in excavating a tunnel about a hundred feet from the main entrance, when the heavy scaffolding gave way with the above appalling result. The accident was caused by quicksand. The coroner's jury exonerated the contractors from blame.

—Severe frosts occurred Wednesday night in northern Illinois, southern Wisconsin, northeastern Iowa and Ohio, western Pennsylvania, and Ontario, Canada, doing considerable damage to crops.

—A violent snowstorm passed over the towns south of Buffalo Friday morning, and trains from that vicinity were well covered with snow. An engineer on one train arriving stated that the storm while it lasted was as severe as in January.

—The frost did great damage all over New England Thursday night. In northern New Hampshire several inches of snow fell. Around Norwich ice a quarter of an inch thick formed, and all crops which can be killed by cold are ruined. In Vermont tender crops were killed.

—Reports from eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania indicate severe damage to early vegetables and fruits by the heavy frost. In some sections ice formed a quarter of an inch thick. The farmers report corn, wheat, potatoes and tomatoes badly frozen.

—Hooper's building at Baltimore collapsed Friday afternoon from the weight of cotton it contained, the fourth floor first giving way and forcing the others down. Of a number of persons in the structure six bodies have been recovered. Three persons were fatally injured and two others are missing and supposed to be in the debris.

—Five seamen of the sealing brig Confederate, now hemmed in by ice in Notre Dame Bay, reached St. John, N. F., Thursday, praying that aid be sent to the famishing crew on board, numbering seventy-four. They have no fuel, all the provisions except a little bread have been devoured, and the craft is surrounded by an ocean of ice as far as the eye can reach.

—A bleacher in Moore & Wilson's straw-board mill at Waterford, N. Y., exploded Tuesday night, blowing five men into eternity, totally demolishing the building, and damaging the stock and dye-works of J. M. King & Co., and Holroyd & Co. Nine men were in the mill at the time of the explosion.

—At Sharpsburg, Ky., Thursday, fire destroyed the Presbyterian church and four or five other structures, entailing a loss of $40,000.

—Incendiaries burned the court house at Florosville, Texas, Wednesday, the records, deeds, mortgages, and all valuable papers being consumed.

—The Belmont coal mines in Alabama, in which U. S. Grant, Jr., is a principal stockholder, have closed down because of the Grant & Ward failure.

—Five hundred laborers and yardmen of the Wabash Railroad struck Thursday because of non-payment of wages. The total bonded debt of the Wabash road is about $80,000,000.

—Reports from 1,000 correspondents of the National Press and Bottlers' Advocate, from all parts of the United States, in regard to the fruit crop, say the apple crop will be the largest ever known, but there will be only a half crop of peaches and pears. The prospect of a very large crop of small fruit is very good.

—The arrival of the steamer Faraday on the morning of May 22d at Rockport, Mass., with the shore end of the Bennett-Mackey cable, was announced by the booming of cannon and ringing of all church and fire bells. The entire population hastened to the beach, and soon the water was alive with craft. Large parties came from adjacent towns and the country. The cable was successfully landed and made fast.

FOREIGN.

—It is said Germany will side with France against England in the Egyptian conference unless England consents to Germany's acquiring her strip of West African territory.

—Twelve men have been committed for trial on a charge of conspiracy to murder at Sligo, Ireland, on the testimony of informers.

—An article appears in the Fortnightly Review written and signed by W. E. Gladstone on England's foreign policy. Gladstone says the period has now arrived when England may with advantage study and even reproduce in some of its most characteristic aspects the foreign policy of America.

—In the Commons Tuesday Gladstone again declared that the Egyptian conference would be limited to the discussion of the financial situation. He promised to lay before Parliament before the conference meets whatever result may be arrived at from the preliminary interchange of views between England and France. No agreement, he said, would be concluded without reference to the other powers. The government contemplated a European engagement and not a separate one with France. Although preliminary negotiations were taking place with France, due regard had been given England's rights and privileges.

—The French government proposes to celebrate the centenary commencement of the French revolution of 1789. It has also resolved to make a specially brilliant exhibition in Paris in 1889.

—Five hundred rebels attacked Suakim Wednesday night. The Egyptian soldiers thrown out to meet the attack became demoralized and ran away at the first onset of the enemy, but the rebels were frightened by the use of an electric light on the fortifications and retreated. The attack lasted two hours, during which the rebels kept up a continual firing, to which the war ships in the harbor replied, as well as the twelve guns in the forts. There were no lives lost, and no one was seriously hurt.

—An explosion, supposed to have been of dynamite, occurred in Scotland Yard, London, Friday night. One of the police headquarters' buildings was completely wrecked and a number of houses in the vicinity were seriously damaged. Five minutes later a similar explosion took place in Pall Mall, which shattered the windows of the Carlton Club building, and considerably injured other structures in the neighborhood. The roadway was torn up and rendered impassable. A short time after these explosions a rumor was circulated that the Victoria Railway station had been blown up. This, however, proved unfounded. The building partly wrecked by the explosion in Scotland Yard was a lodging-house used by the detectives of the department. The adjacent Clarence Tavern was partly demolished. Several clubs standing in the roadway were overturned by the force of the explosion. One carriage nearer by was blown to pieces and its horses were injured. A policeman on patrol duty at the time was seriously wounded and is now in the hospital. There were several detectives in the wrecked house, but none were hurt. The explosion in Pall Mall occurred a few minutes after that in Scotland Yard. Three minutes after this, at 9:20, a third explosion occurred in St. James' Square, only a short distance from the scene of the second one. The concussion in this case was the severest of all. The back wall of the Junior Carlton Club building, which faces on Pall Mall, was blown in, and the splendid mansion of Sir Watkin Williams Winn, M. P., was partially wrecked, and a number of servants injured.

An achievement in telegraphy is reported by the Telegraphist, whose representative recently paid a visit to the offices of the Indo-European Telegraph Company in London, and was put into communication with the clerk in charge at Emden. After a few signals the line was opened to Odessa, and afterward to Teheran. At the suggestion of the operator at Teheran, Kurrachee was called, and the signals still found clear and good. Kurrachee opened the line to Agra, and Agra switched on the line to Calcutta, and to the surprise of all concerned—the Calcutta clerk asked, "Are you really London?"—the signals were excellent, and the speed not less than twelve words a minute. The total length was 7,000 miles of wire.

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the National Christian Association will be held at 221 West Madison street, Chicago, June 19th, 1884, as provided in the by-laws of said Association. Opening session at 10 o'clock A. M.

As this is an important session for business and consultation, every corporate member and as many of the friends as possible should be present.

F. W. CAPWELL, President.
JOHN D. NUTTING, Recording Secretary.

RAILWAY NOTICE.

All who desire to attend the Chicago convention of the 20th inst. from New York State:

We, the undersigned, have made special arrangements with Mr. D. C. Starks, General Passenger Agent, Warsaw, to run an excursion train to the aforesaid convention, via the Rochester and Pittsburg railroad. All who may desire to attend the convention can do so at exceedingly low rates. We will endeavor to furnish first-class accomodations. Sleepers will be attached. The train will leave Rochester Tuesday, June 17, at 5:30 P. M., stopping at all stations between Rochester and Salamanca where there are those who wish to get on. No exchange of cars. Tickets good going, from the 17th to the 19th; returning, on or before the 30th. Now is the time to visit your friends in the West, and at the same time encourage by your presence.

All parties desiring to avail themselves of these rates should write immediately for further information to

F. W. CAPWELL, Chairman of State Com., or
W. B. STODDARD, Sec'y,
Dale, Wyoming Co., N. Y.

REDUCED RAILROAD FARES.

The question of railroad fares is one that interests every one who contemplates attending the convention June 20th inst.

The simple fact is, the man or the movement not in the ring has little prospect of favors from the "powers that be," unless he is ready to do their bidding; and much as I regret the fact, it is nevertheless a fact that I have not been able to secure reduction of rates to the American party convention.

The very best arrangements possible will be made to lighten the expenses of entertainment while here, and to aid the friends who may come in every way possible Come trusting in God, and his blessing which "maketh rich and addeth no sorrow therewith" shall be sufficient reward.

J. P. STODDARD.

The annual meeting of the N. C. A. and the National Convention of the American party will make a fine beginning for a few hundred Cynosure subscriptions. Friends who come to those meetings, each of you bring a good list in your pocket. Many who should now renew can send by the hand of a delegate. A little attention to this matter on the part of only one in ten of our readers will give the list a substantial lift, and doubly cheer all who labor about the paper, since it will come at a time when the business of all newspapers lags.

The late Methodist General Conference just as it was adjourning, on the last evening, adopted a resolution amending the book of Discipline "so as to prohibit preachers officiating in public services in any parish to which they do not belong, when requested by the regular pastor not to do so." Such a law would have been very convenient a few years ago when a New Jersey minister wished to tell what he had learned of the iniquity of the lodge over the line upon the territory of a brother pastor. The Christian act was a grievous offense, but one hard to name. The charge of preaching within the staked out game-ground of another was made to tell, however, and the offending brother was cast out of the M. E. synagogue. What would some of these men of zeal for metes and bounds do with John Wesley, their father, according to sectarianism? Everyone knows how he went across lots and anywhere to reach the multitudes. When the Epworth church was closed against him he preached often from his father's flat tombstone in the church-yard.

The Republican Convention is without excuse that it neglected to endorse several grand reform principles which need to be incorporated into our national life. A noble memorial from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was presented and was about to be shoved along to a committee, but the earnest protest of some members relaxed the rule and it was read by the secretary. Another resolution recommending to Congress a Constitutional amendment against the liquor traffic was read and given to the platform committee. Senator Blair of New Hampshire, the champion of prohibition in Congress, was on that committee and promised and old friend—and Anti-mason—that he would get in a resolution if it were a possible thing. He did gain a hearing for Miss Willard, who never spoke more eloquently or ardently for the cause so near her heart; but he could get no farther with an anti-liquor resolution. The platform is dumb on that topic, but it thereby leaves out a plank that would be very apt to tip up with Blaine and Logan on it.

Another good and sound plank which was called for was one demanding that the policy of the nation should be to settle all international disputes by arbitration without resort to the barbarism of war. The committee did not think the Republican party could yet spare the war trappings and expenses and influence. But it is a good omen that so much was asked of the party. For twelve years the American platform has recognized this issue as worthy the adoption of the nation. It was significant also that the Inter Ocean seconded the request editorially in these words: "In preserving the Union and thus securing forever peace upon this continent from ocean to ocean and from gulf to gulf, the Republican party wrought a great work for 'peace on earth and good will to men,' and in all our intercourse with other nations no opportunity should be lost to promote the great principle of arbitration. Our motto, and so far as our government can influence other governments the motto of the whole civilized world should be, 'Let us have peace.' A distinct recognition of this principle in the platform would be an important step in that direction. No one could object to such a plank."

The Gordian knot of the Mormon business is in its Endowment House Masonic oath. Every trial for polygamy has found this oath a barrier which could not be broken down. Punishment for contempt has failed to dissolve the stubborn and fanatical Mormon obedience to their secret obligation. A new case is just reported. Nellie White of Salt Lake City, the third and last wife of Girard Roundy, Bishop of Wanship, has been sent to jail for contempt of court in refusing to answer questions concerning her marriage and convict her Mormon husband of bigamy when before the Grand Jury. The nation may ere long, if action is delayed, call for an Alexander who shall cut this knot with a bloody sword.

HILLSDALE COLLEGE, Michigan, has three secret college societies for males, and one called Kappa Gamma, for girls. This girl's society has its head center in Evanston, Ill. The Hillsdale College belongs to the Free Will Baptists, who were once an anti secret sect. The bones of the donors to that institution would turn in their coffins if they were conscious that girls in that institution were running secret societies, and paying dues to a head center in the Methodist University at Evanston! Are the Methodists content that their University should become a roost and cage to breed these "unclean birds" of night as Moody calls them? Will Prof. Kimball make a note of this for his people?

I know of but two beautiful things: the starry heavens above my head, and the sense of duty within my heart.—Immanuel Kant.

Not a single faithful word is ever uttered that does not repeat itself in echoes till it reaches the throne of God. Not a noble deed is ever done, however obscurely, that is not chronicled in heaven.

A genuine Irishman came briskly into the town hall Canadaigua meeting, N. Y., and said: "I've jist looked in to see what I can hear; for, indade, where I come from, ye can't hang a Mason if he kills ye."

There are two things, each of which he will seldom fail to discover who seeks for it in earnest: the knowledge of what he ought to do, and a plausible pretext to do what he likes.

A man who is really diffident, timid and bashful, be his merit what it will, can hardly ever push himself forward in the world; his despondency throws him into inaction, and the forward, bustling and petulant will always precede him.

NATURE, REVELATION AND MODERN CRITICISM.

BY REV. GEORGE B. CHEEVER, D.D.

Every resurrection of nature in the spring season is a new and irresistible demonstration of the wisdom, power and love of God. Our little farm refreshed by rain seems like a new Paradise smiling and glowing in the love and radiance of the Creator; and the brightest, earliest, and most perfect of its flowers is an exquisite tuft of English primroses, one of the loveliest objects of natural beauty you ever set eyes upon. Why in the world did ever the poets baptize it with the name prim-rose, just the contrary to all its native, simple, attractive loveliness, as infantile and artless as a new-born babe smiling on its mother's breast. The man must have been a prim little rhyme-tattler, not knowing the plough-boys heart of his native Saxon, as Tyndal and Burns did, when he gave that name. But possibly, he meant primal instead of prim, and should have said so. But a cooing mother, lisping in her joy, is said to have whispered the name of her first-born daughter to the baptizing clergyman as Lucifer, instead of saying "Lucy, sir;" and so in place of a girl's the child had a boy's name.

I never saw this exquisitely beautiful flower outside of England, in such perfection; and this on was brought to us from Cornwall in its cradle two years ago, and just now, after some discipline of weather, has reached its intensest vernal fullness of beauty and glory. There are twenty perfect blossoms within the mossy green-leaved circlet of one rich tufted plant, and from the indescribable sweetness and glory of the vision which the flying angels themselves, on their ministries of love in this world, and trodden by the footsteps of the Son of God, might stop to wonder and adore, we may judge what the sight would be of the belt or border of such primroses, two or three feet deep, extending round the walks of a whole garden, springing from their soft, velvet tapestry of leaves, like the cloud of Murillo's child-angels attending on the Virgin Mother and her Son.

It has been raining now two days, one of the great rains of God's strength, whereby we have been shut in with the privilege of seeing from our windows the buds bursting, and the new-born blossoms laughing, the green leaves unfolding, and the whole earth putting on her raiment as of bridal glory in the freshness of a new creation. Who knows but that the happy scientific students of the works and Word of God in other worlds possess spectroscopic and color-shading and measuring instruments, with which they can read and rejoice to interpret the prophetic symbols, so glorious, so beautiful, so powerful to the believing soul, of the future resurrection, life and glory of "the people written in the book!"

Here they are toiling and moiling a few years with patient, praying wisdom like that of Daniel, whose record the angels study. Then lost from sight a little season, asleep in the dust of the earth (for so he giveth his beloved sleep) to awake in the likeness of Christ's glorified body, and to shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.

Go thy way, Daniel! Shut up the words and seal the book to the time of the end. Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased, and many shall be purified and made white and tried. So go thy way till the end, for Christ himself shall come and quote thy words, and thou with Job shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days, knowing now that thy Redeemer liveth, and shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and that out of thy flesh, in the image of thy Saviour, in the robe of his righteousness, thou shalt see God, and forever shalt be like him, for thou shalt see him as he is.

I sometimes find myself wondering what must be the emotions of the spirits of the just made perfect, forerunners and followers of Christ, such as Moses, Job, Samuel, David, Elijah, Enoch, Isaiah, Hezekiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, Malachi, John, Paul, if they see and know and converse with one another in the intermediate Paradise-world, where they look down at what is going on now on the earth where they once walked and worked by faith. What must they think of the books of critical demonstration now published and believed by thousands, proving that they themselves were liars, and the books written in their names anonymous forgeries, and Christ himself the greatest impostor of them all, and professors of theology in Christian seminaries endorsing such speculations of infidelity as more consistent with a large and liberal confession of Christ, and better adapted to the canons of a rational belief than Christ himself, being ignorant of the critical learning of the nineteenth century, and unable even to have read the newly discovered manuscripts of this age, could ever have imagined or mastered. But this is one of the elevated railroads of our day for rapid transit, and God be praised that as yet all men are not quite thus brutish in their knowledge!

Englewood, N. J.

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

BY EDMOND RONAYNE.

In a recent article I endeavored to set before the readers of this paper some simple thoughts from God's Word in regard to the "church of God" and in connection with that same subject I may now briefly add the following:

First, no person can "join the church." There is no such thing in the Word of God as "joining the church." There is indeed a deplorable picture of a younger son turning his back upon his father's house, going into a far country and joining himself to a citizen of that country (Luke 15); but not a single instance is on record in all the New Testament where any one "joined the church." Every member of the assembly of God is born into it. "Ye are no more strangers and foreigners but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God" (Eph. 2: 19); and all those who are "of the household of God" are "all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ" (Gal. 3: 26); "born again" of the Word and Spirit of God (Jno. 3: 5); born into God's family, being made "partakers of the divine nature," (2 Peter 1: 4); "sealed" with his Holy Spirit (Eph. 1: 13); "heirs of God and co-heirs with his only begotten Son." Rom. 8: 17. Beloved reader, how did you get children into your household? By birth—by natural birth. Well, God gets children into his household by birth also—by the new birth; and this new birth by which God gets children is just as true and just as real as the birth of any of your children or mine.

Can you say, beloved friend, as in the very presence of God that you are thus a child of God; that you have been really and truly "born of God" (Jno. 1: 13), "being born again by the Word of God which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Pet. 1: 23. If this is really true of you who read this article, then on the infallible, unchanging authority of God's Word you have "eternal life and shall never perish." Jno. 10: 28. You are "joined to the Lord" (1 Cor. 6: 17), not to a church. "You are a member of his body, of his flesh and of his bones." Eph. 5: 30. "God has set you in the body" (1 Cor. 12: 18), being that which he himself has made you, "created in Christ Jesus unto good works:" Eph. 2: 10. But on the other hand if you are not in reality a child of God, if you have not been really and truly "born again by the Word of God," then no matter what your profession is, no matter what sect you may have joined, no matter how much of a reformer you are, you are simply a child of wrath" (Eph. 2: 3), "without Christ, without hope and without God." Eph. 2: 12.

Remember, dear friend, that it is not getting religion but receiving Christ that causes you to be "born again" and become a child of God. "As many as received him"—not "as many" as got religion or "joined the church" or made a profession—but "as many as received him (the Son of God), to them gave he the right, or privilege (margin), to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name which were born of God." Jno. 1: 12, 13. "He that hath the Son hath life and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 Jno. 5: 12. And remember also that the moment any poor lost sinner receives Christ, the moment he takes God at his word and trusts in the "One offering" made "once for all" upon Calvary's cross (Heb. 10: 10), that very moment he becomes a child of God, having the same life, the same spirit, and the same Father as that glorified Man who sits "on the right hand of the majesty on high (Heb. 1: 3); he is "joined to the Lord" by the Holy Ghost, is a member of his body, and therefore cannot from the very nature of things join the church or assembly because he is already in it.

In the second place I desire to say that all those thus "born of God" and therefore united to Christ in heaven constitute the assembly of God upon earth—all having the same Holy Spirit, all partaking of the same divine nature, all possessing the same eternal life, and all pre-destinated by God "to be conformed to the image of his Son." Rom. 8: 29. This I say is the assembly of God, the body of Christ, of which he is the veritable living Head, and is that in which God has taken up his abode upon the earth by the Holy Ghost, as he did in the assembly of his earthly people in the wilderness by his presence in the Tabernacle. Jno. 14: 16, 17. Of the Holy Ghost in these verses the Lord Jesus testifies, "for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you," and thus he dwells in "the house" and also in the believer. God looks upon this assembly, although composed of "redeemed" or born-again ones out of "every kindred and tongue and people and nation," as one undivided whole, constituting thus "the unity of the Spirit," and it is the express desire of his heart that every one of his children should have fellowship with him in "endeavoring to keep that unity of Spirit in the bond of peace." Eph. 4: 3. But alas! alas! what do we see around us? "The unity of the Spirit," blessed be the God of all grace, remains the same undisturbed, inviolable thing that God has made it, but man as everywhere else has most terribly failed in his responsible position before God in the assembly, and the sad result of his failure is the myriads of seats and the Babylonish confusion of professing Christendom.

But so as not to make this article unnecessarily long I will simply add, that in the New Testament we find five things in relation to God's assembly as left down here to be a witness for Christ until he comes back again to receive his people to himself and to reign over this earth as the Son of Man, the Son of David, the King of Israel.

The assembly of God in every city or locality, we find, "came together into one place" on the first day of every week to worship, or as it is also expressed, "to break bread," according to Christ's own desire. In thus coming together they did so because they were redeemed: of course no Gentile or Jew could worship with them, none can worship God but a child of God, and so accordingly we find that the redemption of Christ is the cause of our gathering; the "one body of Christ is the ground of our gathering; the person of Christ is the center of our gathering; the Spirit of Christ is the power of our gathering; and the Word of Christ is the authority of our gathering.

This is God's order for his children as revealed in his Word, and anything else beside this is simply lawlessness and schism. Do you find this order, my dear Christian brother, carried out by yourself and your fellow Christians in the place where you live? If not, then may the Lord lead us in faithfulness to himself to take our true place outside the camp. Heb. 13: 13.

SHORT SERMON.

Text:—The abomination of desolation.

My Brethren:—The Roman eagles when thrust into the temple of Jerusalem could not have been more desolating to the Mosaic institutions than the Masonic lodge thrust into the place of the Puritan church is desolating to American institutions. The Roman power was not more abominable to the Jew than the Masonic lodge is to the true American. Yet power has always a very insinuating way in dealing with human affairs. The Jew tax-gatherer for the Roman power doubtless shared his extortions with the governor; here a tribune married a rich Jew's daughter; there a scheming centurion built a synagogue on half the sum he had robbed from the people; in another quarter some enterprising, money-making Jew had taken a fat contract for furnishing pork for the crack Tenth Legion; in still another quarter some Jew's smart son was given a lucrative office, and so on, though the Jewish nation detested the Roman power, yet the leading men of the community served it; were obsequious to it, and helped it to crush and destroy all that Moses had established.

And so it is, my friends, with our politicians respecting this foreign abomination the lodge: they serve it; are obsequious to it, and are helping it to destroy every vestige of our early American institutions.

My brethren, as the lodge is an organized lie, all truth and righteousness are perverted by it wherever it stands. Under its baneful shadow men call good evil, and evil good. They prefer Democratic generals to Whig ones. They honor bank-misdirectors and those who trifle with public confidence. He who is faithful over a few things or over many, they "let severely alone." They introduce lotteries into churches; run churches and communities in debt; rob them of funds and lay it to deacons or churchmen; vote patent knaves into office and exult in sustaining them there; vote the most extravagant back-pay grabs and Credit Mobilier swindles; subject the laws to a helpless attitude in the face of Star-route frauds and Ku-Klux outrages, and, if the thief should come in the night, far from taking alarm they give that thief sympathy and protection, and take him into partnership with them.

My friends, where the lodge has forced a little, poor State that we know of to pay many millions of dollars for white mercenary recruits when black patriots could have been had for the asking; where the two Senators, lodge-minions, are caught as if by the coming of a thief in the night in advocating the most extravagant and most discreditable expenditures, each on an occasion ten years apart on the eve of a great financial revulsion under which millions have suffered from loss while these Senators grow rich and jubilant; in a State where, owing to such extravaganees, school-teachers must be paid twice what they were before the war; where about every fifteenth voter is a pensioner, and where many local communities are in debt with not half the former means to pay—please tell me, my friends, in such a state of things, what is the chance for religion? Where is the money for its support to come from?

I will tell you what the chance for religion is: with all communities that thus come under the abomination of desolation it will be found that a mixture of Masonic lies, fraud, deceptions, intimidations and outrage will be a good enough religion for them. They will continue to throw flowers upon muddy graves; make a profane medley of prayers for the dead and political speeches for the living over the graves of many a bounty jumper, and then proceed to demand of Congress an enormous sinecure for one of their "fraternity" who has helped to swamp 60,000,000 of dollars of their honest fellow-citizens' hard earnings by gambling operations in Wall Street.

So Mote it be!

Take rather than give the tone of the company you are in. If you have ability you will show it more or less upon every subject, and if you have not you had better talk sillily upon a subject of other people's choosing than upon one of your own.

PERISH ALL TYRANTS, FAR AND NEAR!

The tyrant's chains are only strong
While slaves submit to wear them;
And who could bind them on the strong,
Determined not to wear them?
Then clank your chains, e'en though the links
Were light as fashion's feather;
The heart which rightly feels and thinks
Would cast them altogether.

The lords of earth are only great
While others clothe and feed them,
But what were all their pride and state,
Should labor cease to heed them?
The swain is higher than a king;
Before the laws of nature,
The monarch were a useless thing,
The swain a useless creature.

We toil, we spin, we delve the mine,
Sustaining each his neighbor;
And who can hold a right divine
To rob us of our labor?
We rush to battle—bear our lot
In every ill and danger,
And who shall make the peaceful cot
To homely joy a stranger?

Perish all tyrants far and near,
Beneath the chains that bind us;
And perish too that servile fear
Which makes the slaves they find us?
One grand, one universal claim—
One peal of moral thunder—
One glorious burst in Freedom's name,
Unholy bonds to sunder.

—Clark's Reform Song Book.

CLERICAL COWARDICE.

Jesus Christ was the Prince of Reformers. He denounced all shams and despised all half-measures. He was a radical revolutionist. He hurled his thunderbolts of condemnation against current evils, however hoary with age, however strongly entrenched in prejudice or passion. He advocated great principles that humiliated pride, antagonized cherished customs, and trampled venerable traditions under foot. He came into a terribly demoralized world—a world which was following a bad leadership, adopting a false philosophy, and rushing to a fatal destiny. It needed to be halted in its mad career. It needed alarm-notes rather than opiates—rebukes rather than flatteries—blister-plasters rather than soothing-syrup. Christ undertook this work of agitation, arousement, and revolution.

The Apostles and early Christians caught the spirit of their Master and struck bold and telling blows against the fashionable sins of their day. They had clear convictions, consecrated energies, and heroic courage. They had something more to deal out than dry abstractions and glittering generalities. Their gospel supplies did not consist of soft-soap and sentimentalism. They did not wait for public sentiment to kick them out. They looked difficulties and dangers out of countenance, and stood forth as the reprovers of a godless world. They told the truth and took the consequences. Of course they were considered rash, presumptuous, impracticable, foolish. None of these things moved them.

It is according to the genius of the Gospel and the fitness of things that ministers should be leaders in all philanthropic movements. They are mouth-pieces for the great Jehovah, they should be no cringing cowards or double-faced hypocrites. If they are the representatives of Jesus Christ, they should exhibit something of his dauntless courage and aggressive spirit. In a word, they should be leaders of the people—moulding public sentiment, pointing out special perils, promulgating great principles, arousing the popular conscience, and lifting the masses upward toward the standard of eternal rectitude.

How poorly some of our modern ministers seem to fill the bill! Take the great and growing question of temperance. It is so vital that every pulpit ought to be a temperance battery, and every minister ought to be an unqualified Prohibitionist. Many of the preachers are all right. They have light, enthusiasm, and courage. They are an honor to their profession. They vote as they pray, and they preach as though they apprehended the claim of God and humanity. But too many of them are still lagging behind—ignorant, indifferent, lazy, cowardly. They are waiting for others to do the hard work, to make the cause popular, to get the train well in motion, with an easy seat for their comfort and safety.

Some ministers are constitutional policy-workers. They are constantly studying the winds, ready to take whichever is likely to be the winning side. While a great cause is going through its weak and struggling stage, they are not apt to be around. They are blind, and deaf, and dumb, to the demands of the hour. More than twenty-five hundred years ago an inspired writer photographed them as follows: "His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant; they are all dumb dogs; they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to they own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter." Isaiah 56: 10, 11.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union recently sent an invitation to the Minister's Association of St. Louis for its members to preach on the subject of Prohibition. The invitation was declined. As an excuse for their course one of the ministers said:

"Don't be discouraged because we do not work with you in this reform. Our hearts are with you. It does not require a majority now to turn off a minister. One or two can do it, if they have money. It is unsafe for us to take a higher stand than the lowest in our congregations, for the people say we must be a unit, or the pastor must go. We are like pulling a sled on slippery ice. We have to be careful or our feet will fly."

What a clerical standard is that! "Is it unsafe for us to take a higher standard than the lowest of our congregations!" The religious leader trying to keep pace with the hindmost follower! How can there be any healthy growth in such a church? Such leadership dooms it to eternal stagnation. Such clerical cowards have evidently missed their calling and they should give place to those who have more conscience than backbone.

In a beautiful village in New York, where I lately gave some temperance lecturers, I found a forcible illustration of the subject in hand. A titled minister was recently requested to open a public temperance meeting with prayer. He declined, with this apology: "I have been in the place only a short time, and I haven't yet learned the sentiment of the people!" In other words, he had not yet learned how to set his sails to the popular breeze. How many such clerical cowards and compromisers would it take to make the devil wink? O for a courageous and unctionized ministry, that dare contradict the father of lies, denounce gigantic villainy, and herald the greatest reform of the age!—Rev. A. A. Phelps.

THE DEMAND FOR A NEW THEOLOGY.

Joseph Cook in answering the question, "For what purposes have illigetimate demands for a new theology been made?" says, "1. To make religion easy and fashionable, and lessen the breadth of distinction between the church and the world." If the "easy and fashionable" religion which the new theology would produce would save souls, make men better in this world, and fit them for the world to come, it would be well to have it. But there are very substantial reasons why we should not have this new theology and new religion.

An "easy and fashionable" religion is not the religion of Christ. "Strive to enter at the straight gate." "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us." "Fight the good fight of faith." To "strive," to "run," to "fight" is not easy. To deny ourselves is a difficult duty. But the religion of Christ requires self-denial: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts." "Mortify" and "crucify" do not suggest anything easy and pleasant, and yet they do require a process through which every Christian must pass. An "easy religion" shuns work for Christ and for souls, hates Christian giving, and dispenses with earnest efforts after holiness; but Christ's religion requires us to "work" in his "vineyard," to "win souls" to "bring our tithes into his storehouse," and to "perfect holiness in the fear of God."

A fashionable religion concerns itself chiefly with the æsthetic, the ritualistic, the formal and the outward. It is the shadow without the substance, the form without the power, the shell without the kernel. It is Pharisaic in its devotion to forms; Judaistic in its reverence for traditions; and rationalistic in the statements of its creed. It has but little in common with the religion which James describes: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

If "the breadth of the distinction between the church and the world is not lessened" it will not be because many in the church, as well as in the world, are not doing their best to accomplish this end. Too many professing Christians have made the distinction so narrow already that it cannot be seen six days in the week, and is barely observable on the Sabbath. They have lessened the breadth of it so much that church and world seem to be one in social life and business life; one in pursuit of pleasure, worldly honor, and worldly gain. There is nothing that is less to the taste and inclination of the worldly and carnal professor of religion than a broad, well-defined distinction between the church and the world. The worldly man thinks well of the church just in proportion to its conformity to him in its principles and practices. The church that opens wide its doors to Sabbath-breakers, wine-bibblers, stock-gamblers, the lodge, etc., will naturally be regarded with the most favor by all these classes whom it welcomes to its fellowship and admits to its highest privileges.

If it is for these ends that a new theology is demanded let us content ourselves with the old. Even with it we have quite too much easy and fashionable religion; and already the distinction between the church and the world is not made so wide and clear as it should be by the church's faithful testimony and the holy and upright living of her membership.—The Evangelical Repository.

ANOTHER CHRISTIANITY.

Jesus comes before the Zulu, riding upon a Gatling gun. Of course these poor heathen know nothing about our political combinations, but they suppose the Christians are invading their land—will they, therefore, love Christ? Missionaries, here is a difficulty for you to explain; how will you deal with it? You come from a Christian nation, a nation which enjoys the unspeakable privilege of a national church; a nation which salutes the savages in Christ's name with shot and shell! Will they receive Christianity coming in such a guise? If they do not, small blame can we pour upon them; they will be only acting according to the light of reason and common sense.

If there shall ever come a Christianity which suffereth long and is kind, which doeth no evil, but seeketh good to his neighbor; which teacheth love to God and love to man; which seeketh not its own, but lays itself out for others, then I do not say that an ungodworld will be enamored of it if left to itself, but I do believe that the Spirit of God will go forth with it, and will convince men of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment; and then shall the scattered family of Adam accept the one true faith, and enter into a league of amity with each other; and there shall be glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will toward men.

Love conquers all. Love is the logic which convinces. Notice two passages of Scripture with which I finish. One thing you want the world to know is that you are the disciples of Christ. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Does our lord wish the world to be convinced? How does he himself act? Hear him—"But that the world may know that I love the Father, and as the Father gave me commandment, so I do. Arise, let us go hence." Love, you see again, proves the unity of Son with the Father; and here again in this second text it is the love of the Father to the chosen which is to be the sign unto the world. Therefore let love abound. Let it be all the weapons of our war.—C. H. Spurgeon.

There is one thing Masonry will not bear, and that is light. It is easy to prove that it is not 200 years old. That all its boasted benevolence is only a pretense to induce men to join; whereas it is extremely selfish, a combination of the strong to help each other to the disregard of the weak. It is easy to show that it is a very uncharitable association. That it persecutes all who oppose it with relentless bitterness. If by a systematic distribution of tracts and books these facts could be brought to the attention of the young men of the country, Masonry will soon die. We do not believe it would keep men from joining them. There are many men who will join it all the more eagerly when they know its real character, which accounts for the apparent revival of the institution in places where it has been exposed; but it will keep good men from joining it; and whenever Christian men forsake it, it will be as good as dead. —Midland.

Professor Huxley has declared that in his voyage around the world, and in all his studies of savage life, he found no people so miserable, wretched and degraded as those who exist in the poorer quarters of London. The barbarians who live in a constant state of violence and degradation, and who are exposed to the worst rigors of climate and weather, have more enjoyment and independent lives than these miserable workers and artizans, and he says that if he had to make his choice he should unhesitatingly prefer the existence of the former.

There is more of valuable truth yet to be gleaned from the sacred writings, that has thus far escaped the attention of commentators than from all other sources of human knowledge combined.—Daniel Webster.

REFORM NEWS.

THE FIELD ROUND ABOUT BEREA, KENTUCKY.

BEREA, Ky., May 28, 1884.

DEAR BRO. BLANCHARD:—Recently I went into an adjoining county—Jackson—to meet an appointment for preaching. I went, Saturday evening, to the house of a friend, a professing Christian. He was absent attending a meeting of a lodge of Freemasons. During the next morning I had with him an extended conversation on the subject of Masonry. After other replies he said, "Bro. Fee, if I had not joined the Masons I would not."

We went to the church house. I found a house full of people. I selected as a text, "The poor have the gospel preached to them." Among other points I made this: Christianity is not mere humane feeling and human acting. It is more—trust in Jesus as a personal Saviour from sin. But I said, Christianity includes humane feeling and humane acting; and any institution that shuts out the poor, "the halt, the lame, the blind," as Masonry does, is anti-Christian; and Christian men ought not to sustain such. After sermon, the brother referred to came to me and asked me to go home with him. He will hear and read.

In this same congregation was Robert Jones, a man who, as a colporteur, was with me at that memorable appointment at Lewis Chapel, in this county, in 1858, at which time he was most cruelly whipped, on his bare body, in my presence, and with a threat that I should have "five hundred times as much if I did not then promise to leave the county and never come back." I said, "I will take my suffering, but not promise." I knelt down. One, and then another, cried out, "Don't strike him." Bro. Jones lives yet, and so do I; and we have as much liberty as you do in Wheaton, Ill.

Tell Philo Carpenter this brother is just as eager to get and distribute tracts against secretism as he was twenty years ago to distribute tracts against slavery. I had some tracts with me and distributed them. A son of this Bro. Jones is now preaching the Gospel in that county. I said, go into the field, I will secure to you one hundred dollars toward support. I have thus far secured eighteen dollars toward that sum. A man who, in what are called mountain counties of Kentucky, will preach a gospel of impartial love and bear his testimony against sectarianism, secretism and intemperance will not meet a bountiful support—almost none.

Another brother in the same county, doing the same work, with a larger experience, is without any certain support. There is the expectation that some friends about Wheaton and Chicago will give to him some aid—I hope sufficient.

Two other brethren, colored, are preaching, as the above are, but to colored people in the "Blue Grass." These are without any promised help. Bros. Hinman, Brown, and I have agreed to solicit help and faithfully disburse. Who will help? The fields are white; faithful laborers are few; and if we pray the Lord to send forth faithful laborers into the field we must be faithful to help feed the wives and children whilst the fathers, who are poor men, go to preach a gospel that will save men from sin—all sin.

If such a gospel shall be here proclaimed help must come from abroad, and there are men and women who gladly respond to calls to send a less definite gospel to Western Indians with less prospect of efficiency. The Lord guide and help. JOHN G. FEE.

FROM THE WISCONSIN AGENT.

YORKVILLE, Wis., June 5th, 1884.

You may think I have been swallowed up by the Masons, but I am yet alive and well and fighting them with the best I have. I will make you a short report now, so you may know that I have not given up the ship, and wait till I come down to Chicago for the rest.

My report will begin with April 28th, and end with May 31st, inclusive, making thirty-four days in all. During that time I have traveled 451 miles; have made 485 visits, and have delivered 11 sermons or addresses. I have always either sold or given away tracts or books to every family I have visited, if they could or would read them. I do not lecture much on week-day evenings, as the evenings are so short I cannot get out much of a congregation. I can do better to visit and preach a little and leave some of our literature. I expect to be at our nominating convention on the 20th and go from there to Springfield to attend to some business, and may have to stay some time. I have spread my work rather thin, as I have in the time I report for visited Sauk, Columbia, Dodge, Jefferson, Dane, Waukesha and Walworth counties, and spent about a week in each one.

I am in good health and spirits and enjoy my work; have many very interesting confabs in my work: sometimes the Masons think I am selling the books for Masonry, and give themselves away before they know it, and that pleases me; and then sometimes they say Doesburg is a perjured villain, and I catch them on that, and that pleases all around, and so I make my own off them and am satisfied. Yours in haste, I. BANCROFT.

THE TOLEDO BLADE.

Mr. D. R. Locke, editor of the Toledo Blade, better known as Petroleum V. Nasby, opposed the Prohibitory Amendment during the Ohio campaign last fall. Since that time he visited Maine for the purpose of examining into the actual operation of the Prohibitory law. The result of his investigations he gives in letters to the Blade, which are naturally commanding wide attention. He confirms all that ever been claimed by judicious advocates of Prohibition as to the effect of such legislation. The law is obeyed as well as the laws against burglary, theft and murder. There are occasional, and in some places frequent, violations, but no one urges these as a reason why the laws should be repealed. According to Mr. Locke, prohibitory laws do remove the greatest evils of intemperance. Although some liquor may be sold in Maine, the sale is attended by such labor and hazard, and can be retailed only under such precautions, that it removes nine-tenths of the temptation to drink that is found at the open bar. He describes the course that has to be followed by certain parties who have set out to introduce liquor into the villages. "They go away," he says, "and buy a jugful of rum. They leave their wagon in the open country, at the outskirts of the village, and wait till long after nightfall and make their way across lots to their homes with the contraband stuff. Their customers drop in, one at a time, and take their drinks in the kitchen, where it is concealed. There are no crowds of men about a bar, one to invite another. The men go for the drink alone, and their drinks they take by themselves. In the very nature of the case, they dare not go in parties. Two dare not go in the house together. To separate, to isolate the drinkers, is to kill drinking for anybody except those in whom the appetite is too strong to be resisted." Under these circumstances, it is plain that the race of drinkers will soon die out. Mr. Locke and his paper constitute a powerful reinforcement to the temperance cause in Ohio and throughout the nation.—Christian Statesman.

BAPTISM AND LODGERY.

A tract under the title, "What is Baptism?" published in Kentucky for Sunday-schools, etc., preaches the following peculiar doctrine: "It (baptism) is a symbol of Christ's government. The United States flag is a symbol of this government; the three links is a symbol of Odd-fellowship; the square and compasses of Freemasonry. Would one who is loyal to his country sneer at the flag? Would the loyal lodge-member sneer at its symbol? Would a loving mother ridicule the photograph of her dead child? So will not the man who loves Jesus speak lightly of baptism? It would be difficult to gather more rubbish into a few words than has been done in the above. It is certainly a theological curiosity to illustrate our respect for baptism by respect paid the silly symbols of secretism. Baptismal grace, the great blessing of this sacrament, taught by the word of God, is passed by as unworthy of notice.—Lutheran Standard.

The Standard will with us congratulate Bro. Thomas Hodge of the N. C. A. Board for a good bit of work in this matter. He discovered the objectionable sentences, sent for the plate of the tract and had it changed, Mr. Carpenter also contributing to bear the expense! The new tract will honor Christ alone and give no share to his rivals.

—The second session of the Southern Christian Institute at Edwards, Miss., near Jackson, closed May 30. This institution is of interest to the Cynosure, as it was founded by Elder R. Faurot, well known in Indiana and Michigan, and whose death some two years ago in Mississippi was widely lamented. During the session, which lasted eight months, 130 males, 102 females—total, 232 persons—have been in attendance. Average daily attendance, 76. Four were studying for the ministry; one of these is the Methodist minister in charge at the village. The daily Bible class consisted of about twenty members. Sunday-school was held each Lord's day. The twenty boarders were constantly present; the attendance of others was fitful and irregular; some times as high as seventy-five were present. The members of the faculty met regularly to break the loaf. During the greater part of the session an hour each Sunday evening was spent in the study of the lesson for the next Sunday, under the lead of Sister Faurot. She assisted the pupils also in organizing and conducting a temperance society, with weekly meetings. Their pledge requires the members to abstain from the use of all intoxicants and tobacco of every form. The same pledge has been introduced by the members of this society into the Sunday-schools of Edwards.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

CALL FOR NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The National Convention of the American Party will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20, 1884, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, to revise the platform of the party, and transact such other business as may be brought forward.

Each State will be entitled to as many delegates as there are Congressional Districts in the State, and two delegates at large. These delegates may be chosen in such manner as each State shall determine, and they shall be furnished with credentials signed by the chairman of the State Committee, or by the member of the National Committee for that State.

Persons friendly to the cause, who are not delegates, or who are elected to represent organizations friendly to the party, will be admitted to all the privileges of the Convention except that of voting, and this privilege may be extended to them by the Convention provided the delegation of the State from which they come is not otherwise full. Signed— F. W. CAPWELL,
President.

E. D. BAILEY, Eastern Secretary.
J. P. STODDARD, Western Secretary.

THE IOWA DELEGATION.

CLARENCE, Iowa, June 7, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I send you the names of the Iowa delegates of the American party to the National Convention to be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20:

W. Pitt Norris, Van Buren Co.
J. M. Kent, Cedar Co.
H. M. Woodford, Bremer Co.
J. W. Rogers, Fayette Co.
H. T. Curtis, Johnson Co.
A. Aultman, Jasper Co.
—— Yant, Sen., Polk Co.
W. H. Layton, Ringgold Co.
S. C. Dodd, Fremont Co.
T. C. Groenveld, Hardin Co.
E. S. Bunce, O'Brien Co.

Delegates at Large:

Dr. J. N. Norris, Van Buren Co.
S. E. Starry, Cedar Co.

Rev. J. A. Preston, Cedar Co., Rev. Geo. Warrington, Van Buren Co., James Furguson of Cedar Co., Samuel Heaton of Linn Co., and many others expect to be at the Convention. If from any cause a vacancy should occur in the Iowa delegation the chairman is authorized to fill the same at the Convention.

Iowa Americans, let there be a grand rally from our State to the National Convention. The meeting in Chicago is too important to be neglected. Let all who are straight on this question come. Those who are not surely ought to be there, for it will be a good place to get straightened and strengthened. J. M. KENT, Chairman.

—Rev. George Warrington of the U. P. church, Birmingham, Iowa, and Dr. W. Pitt Norris, are the delegates from that stirring reform center to the American Convention. They will be here.

—As the time for our Convention draws near I feel more and more anxious for it to be a success. The weal of this nation and of the whole world largely depends on the triumph of the God-given principles couched in our American platform. I feel that God is stirring the hearts of the pure and patriotic on this subject.—REV. N. E. GARDNER, Streator, Ill.

—Bro. Gardner hopes to bring with him from Streator, Dover and Mendota, a goodly company to the convention.

GENERAL BUTLER'S CLAIMS TO THE PRESIDENCY.

He is a Grand Sovereign Inspector General of the 33d degrèe of Freemasonry, and probably understands how to work the lodge better than "any other living man."

He so conducted the military service in New Orleans as to render a statue there to the chief of rebels not only possible, but probable. He may be said to have laid the corner-stone of General Lee's monument.

The most popular and most successful generals during the war were Democrats, and no one has ever doubted General Butler's Democracy; while, at the same time, no other general of the war received more constant favor, partiality and affection from the Republican administration than he.

Honored by Republicans, worshiped by Democrats, delighted in by Greenbackers, honored by Anti-monopolists, respected by Prohibitionists, confided in by high tariff men, the hope of women's rights and of contraband transfer to the free-list; and, crowning every other merit, supreme worker and controller of the lodge—why should he not hope to be President?

I, myself, shall vote for him—when I cease to be

AN ANTI-MASON.

WHY ANTI-MASONS CANNOT VOTE THE REPUBLICAN TICKET.

Because the Republican party is the corruptest party since the formation of government.

Because it favors Freemasonry.

Because while the governments of Europe have been struggling against the assassins of secret societies, and have been justly accusing the United States of being a nest of such societies, our government has never sought to discountenance the wrong and put itself in a dignified attitude before the world by sending to some or all European courts as ministers men of character who especially represent anti-secret sentiments and principles. A party that has thus belittled itself and ignored our American party ought to be ignored by every man of character.

We offer the clergy of the United States another opportunity to assert the dignity of their profession, by either voting with us against every Freemason or Masonic minion set up for office by any party, or else by exercising a little self-respecting self-denial in not voting at all.

AMERICAN.

HOW SHALL A PARTY WIN?

The absence of great philanthropic ideas from politics always marks a period of decadence. We can only attract the best characters in the community to caucus and convention by the assurance that living issues will be discussed, and efforts made for human betterment. What subject brought out the votes of three hundred thousand of Ohio's noblest citizens? It was constitutional prohibition.

A party shouldered that question of constitutional amendment; a party sent representatives to the Senate and the House who voted to submit the great question of outlawing the liquor traffic. In Ohio the party that submitted the constitutional amendment lost its grip, went back on prohibition and was defeated by the "Christian in politics" who voted an independent ticket, or having cast his ballot for the amendment, declined either to bolt his party and vote the independent ticket, or to accept the candidates of his party knowing they were pledged to license. But in Iowa a party has gone further, and after submitting prohibition has stood by it through cloud and sunshine until it is a fact accomplished, and the party is triumphant.

The groundswell of the people's wrath is rising steadily. A new element has entered the political arena and it has come to stay. The nation must go out of partnership with the liquor traffic. This is an issue that will not down. It is Banquo's ghost, and all the noisy incantations about a "Solid South" and "tariff reform" will not suffice to "lay the ghost."

Good men are waking from their lethargy. The North and South are rapidly becoming allies in a new anti-slavery war. It is no longer regarded as a Christian act to "keep temperance out of politics." Wherever the Goliath of the liquor power sends forth his challenge, there the temperance Davids rally; and since the doughty giant is to-day the chief figure in the political arena, "Home versus Saloon" is the war-cry; and as the temperance soldiers rally for the fray it will be seen ere long that no party can win in America unless it frankly and earnestly espouses the cause of Home.—By request of the W. C. T. U.

FOR GOVERNOR OF ILLINOIS.

We do not know that it is true that Gen. Oglesby, the Republican candidate for Governor in this State is claiming a temperance record, but rumor has something to that effect. A German landlady, however, in one of the towns of Northern Illinois, where Governor Oglesby spoke a few weeks ago, says: "Governor Oglesby is no temperance man. He brought a basket of wine to the hotel here the other night, and I drank with him till midnight."

It is pitiful, or would be if it were not worse, that temperance voters are called upon year after year, campaign after campaign, to come at the beck of party and elect men who flaunt their unwisdom and disgrace in the voters' faces. Gen. Oglesby's magnificent services as a soldier, and his magnetic and noble qualities as a man are eclipsed by the record of to-day. He is no conqueror who does not conquer himself. He who is endowed with power to attract and hold the masses is a more dangerous ruler than any other if his example be a dangerous one. Christian voter, watch your boy's enthusiasm for these so-called "splendid heroes." Do not let him see you support the man whose practice you warn him to shun.—Union Signal.

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

The general interest in the Republican convention of last week makes its platform a document which every voter will wish to read, whether or not they approve:

Republicans of the United States, in national convention assembled, renew their allegiance to the principles upon which they have triumphed in six successive presidential elections, and congratulate the American people on the attainment of so many results in legislation and administration by which the Republican party has, after saving the Union, done so much to render its institutions just, equal and beneficient, the safeguard of liberty, and the embodiment of the best thought and highest purposes of our citizens.

The Republican party has gained its strength by quick and faithful response to the demands of the people for the freedom and equality of all men, for a united nation assuring the rights of all citizens, for the elevation of labor, for an honest currency, for purity of legislation, and for integrity and accountability in all departments of the government; and it accepts anew the duty of leading in the work of progress and reform. We lament the death of President Garfield, whose sound statesmanship, long conspicuous in progress, gave promise of a strong and successful administration—a promise fully realized during the short period of his office as President of the United States—and his distinguished success in war and peace have endeared him to to the hearts of the American people.

In the administration of President Arthur we recognize a wise, conservative and patriotic policy, under which the country has been blessed with remarkable prosperity; and we believe his eminent services are entitled to, and will receive, the hearty approval of every citizen.

It is the first duty of a good government to protect the rights and promote the interests of its own people. The largest diversity of industry is most productive of general prosperity and of the comfort and independence of the people. We therefore demand that the imposition of duties on foreign imports shall be made not "for revenue only," but that, in raising the requisite revenues for the government, such duties shall be so levied as to afford security to our diversified industries and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer, to the end that active and intelligent labor as well as capital, may have its just award, and the laboring man his full share in the national prosperity.

Against the so-called economic system of the Democratic party, which would degrade our labor to the foreign standard, we enter our earnest protest. The Democratic party had failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus.

The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicious and indiscriminate process of horizontal reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the tax-payer without injuring the labor or the great productive interests of the country.

We recognize the importance of sheep husbandry in the United States, the serious depression which it is now experiencing, and the danger threatening its future prosperity, and we therefore respect the demands of the representatives of this important agricultural interest for a readjustment of the duty upon foreign wool, in order that such industry shall have full and adequate protection.

We have always recommended the best money known to the civilized world, and we urge that efforts should be made to unite all commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard which shall fix for all the relative value of gold and silver coinage.

The regulation of commerce with other nations and between the States is one the most important prerogatives of the general government, and the Republican party distinctly announces its purpose to support such legislation as will fully and efficiently carry out the constitutional power of Congress over inter-State commerce. The principle of the public regulation of railway corporations is a wise and salutary one for the protection of all classes of people, and we favor legislation that shall prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges for transportation, and that shall secure to the people and the railways alike the fair and equal protection of the laws.

We favor the establishment of a national bureau of labor, the enforcement of the eight hour law, a wise and judicious system of general education by adequate appropriation from the national revenue, wherever the same is needed. We believe that everywhere the protection to a citizen of American birth must be secured to citizens by American adoption, and we favor the settlement of national differences by international arbitration.

The Republican party having its birth in a hatred of slave labor and a desire that all men may be truly free and equal, is unalterably opposed to placing our working men in competition with any form of servile labor, whether at home or abroad. In this spirit we denounce the importation of contract labor whether from Europe or Asia, as an offence against the spirit of American institutions, and we pledge ourselves to sustain the present law restricting Chinese immigration, and to provide such further legislation as is necessary to carry out its purposes.

Reform of the civil service, auspiciously begun under Republican adminisitration, should be completed by the further extension of the reform system already established by law to all the grades of the service to which it is applicable. The spirit and purpose of the reform should be observed in all executive appointments, and all laws at variance with the objects of existing reform legislation should be repealed to the end that the dangers of free institutions which lurk in the power of official patronage may be wisely and effectively avoided.

The public lands are a heritage of the people of the United States, and should be reserved, as far as possible, for small holdings of actual settlers. We are opposed to the acquisition of large tracts of these lands by corporations or individuals, especially where such holdings are in the hands of non-resident aliens, and we will endeavor to obtain such legislation as will tend to correct this evil.

We demand of Congress the speedy forfeiture of all land-grants which have lapsed by reason of non-compliance with acts of incorporation in all cases where there has been no attempt in good faith to perform the conditions of such grants.

The grateful thanks of the American people are due to the Union soldiers and sailors of the late war; and the Republican party stands pledged to suitable pensions for all who were disabled and for the widows and orphans of those who died in the war. The Republican party also pledges itself to the repeal of the limitation contained in the Arrears Act of 1879, so that all invalid soldiers shall share alike and their pensions begin with the date of disability, and not with the date of application.

The Republican party favors a policy which shall keep us from entangling alliances with foreign nations, and which gives us the right to expect that foreign nations shall refrain from meddling in American affairs. A policy which seeks peace and trade with all powers, but especially with those of the western hemisphere.

We demand the restoration of our navy to its old-time strength and efficiency, that it may in any high sea protect the rights of the American citizens and the interests of American commerce. We call upon Congress to remove the burdens under which American shipping has been depressed, so that it may again be true that we have a commerce which leaves no sea unexplored, and a navy which takes no law from superior force.

Resolved, That the appointment by the President to offices in the Territories should be made from the bona-fide citizens and residents of the Territories wherein they are to serve.

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress to enact such laws as shall promptly and effectually suppress the system of polygamy within our Territories and divorce the political from the ecclesiastical power of the so-called Mormon church, and that the law so enacted should be rigidly enforced by the civil authorities, if possible, and by the military, if need be.

The people of the United States, in their organized capacity, constitute a nation, and not a mere confederation of States. The National Government is supreme within the sphere of its national duties, but the States have reserved rights which should be faithfully maintained, and which should be guarded with jealous care, so that the harmony of our system of government may be preserved, and the Union kept inviolate.

The perpetuity of our institutions rests upon the maintenance of a free ballot, an honest count, and correct returns. We denounce the fraud and violence practiced by the Democracy in Southern States, by which the will of the voter is defeated, as dangerous to the preservation of free institutions; and we solemnly arraign the Democratic party as being the guilty recipient of the fruits of such fraud and violence.

We extend to the Republicans of the South, regardless of their former party affiliations, our cordial sympathy, and pledge to them our most earnest efforts to promote the passage of such legislation as will secure to every citizen of whatever race and color the full and complete recognition, possession, and exercise of all civil and political rights.

The question to be asked of candidates this year is not, Were you a good soldier in the war of twenty years ago? but, Are you loyal to the true interests of the country to-day?

MASONIC LAW IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 31st, 1884.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER:—Capital punishment is the Masonic penalty for Masonic thieves when they rob a brother Mason. "Justice,—inflexible justice,—she holds as among the cardinal virtues; and the Mason who can knowingly or wilfully defraud a brother of a single cent is justly liable to all the pains and penalties of his degree." See Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota, 1853 to 1869. Address of W . ' . Bro. S. Y. McMasters, D. D., L. L. D., Grand Chaplain, page 9, Appendix.

The words in italics indicate that the third or Master Mason's degree is the one referred to. The pains and penalties of that degree are as follows: "My body severed in twain, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes, and these scattered to the four winds of heaven, that no more remembrance might be had among men or Masons of so vile a wretch as I should be, should I in the least knowingly or wittingly violate or transgress this my Master Mason's obligation. So help me God, and keep me steadfast." See "Ecce Orienti," page 150.

When the State chartered the Masonic lodge it did not contemplate such a traitor's flag as the above to be flaunted in our faces. Washington, who was in a position to know the above to be Masonic law, might well warn the nation to beware of chartering such institutions.* And General Grant did well to say, as quoted in the St. Paul Dispatch: "Every State should withdraw the charters from all secret societies." How can we as citizens look with confidence in the eyes of Masons while knowing them to be confederate in another government; and that a government more despotic than the one from which America sprang and which in former times hung a man for stealing a sheep? The word of God is, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers; for there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God." Romans 13: 1.

Here arises a very pertinent question. Which power is ordained of God, that of the United States government or that of the Masonic government? The two are not alike. When Masonry executed its penalty in the case of Morgan the whole United States government was aroused, and grappled with Masonry to deliver the murderers of Captain Morgan to United States justice. Then Masonry proved itself to be a traitor to the United States, if proof outside of its own lodge-promulgated law were needed. We are well assured that the Masonic power, with her lying, mythical religion through which she promises her votaries felicity in the world to come, is no more ordered of God than is the kingdom of Satan itself.

HELP THE CONVENTION AT HOME.

In the Cynosure of May 29, the General Agent says he "scarce dare look forward to the approaching convention where so many difficulties and obstructions hedge up the way;" and he might have added, and where such grave responsibilities will rest upon us, and such weighty interests are at stake—interests which affect not alone this reform and the American party as such, but the moral well-being of our nation with its unborn millions is in a measure under God committed to our care, and "who is sufficient for these things?" No wonder the leaders shrink back and need to hear the voice of the Almighty saying to them, "This is the way;" now "go forward," for "lo! I am with you alway." But if this work is of God, and the leaders are called of him "for this purpose as was Abraham, Samuel, Paul and Luther, and many others, will he not stand by them to the end to impart needed strength and wisdom?

If to glorify God be the ruling principle of our efforts in this direction, help will come from on high in the right time and way, for God will take care of his own cause. Having laid all on the altar, go forward and fear not.

To the urgent appeal that all friends of this reform be present at the convention, let me say that God hedges up the way of some, both earnest and honest friends, so that they cannot attend, but perhaps they can aid more by their prayers at home than by their presence; and let such devote much of the 19th and 20th days of June to silent prayer to God that he would purify and strengthen those who are in the van of this national reform movement.

"THE TRUTH SHALL MAKE YOU FREE."

CLEARFIELD, Iowa.

Many of us have different callings; in business some are called to be lawyers, doctors, farmers, and some have a calling for several different pursuits. All should be in harmony, for the lawyer cannot do without the doctor, farmer, etc. In religion some are called to work in a part of the Master's vineyard which is and has been neglected, and the weeds have grown so rank that it is unpopular to root them up, and is thought by many to be a useless task. Others are called into different work, but all should harmonize while doing different kinds of work. All are commanded to let their light shine. Some have more light on a certain subject than others. Truth is light, and the Truth of God on every neglected subject when set free is that which makes you free. Our forefathers were called to utter the truth contained in the Declaration of Independence that, "All men are born free and equal;" that truth has made us free and has given us a constitution and government that are destined to move forward. The truth of God pertaining to vital questions is held in bondage, but she does not stay there. "Truth crushed to earth shall rise again."

But a short time ago the truth on the slavery question was held in chains of Masonic darkness, but she burst her chains asunder and set the bondman free. God called such men as Wendell Phillips and others to educate the people on that neglected subject. Iowa has taken a step forward and has passed a good law on the temperance question. Other steps are to be taken, giving fresh life and vigor to the principles contained in the Declaration of Independence, the truth of which is not now free, but will burst her chains and set us free from lodge bondage. People do not feel free to speak on the secrecy question, and it is nonsense to say that Freemasons feel free to raise Hiram in the light of the noonday sun and say Mah-hah-bone out loud: but the truth will make them free.

*Secrets are to be kept, not because they are evil

"Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." That is, as love delights in the happiness of its objects, it effectually prevents us from injuring those we love, and, consequently, leads us to fulfil all the law requires, because the law requires nothing which is not conducive to the best interests of our fellowmen. He, therefore, who loves his neighbor with the same sincerity that he loves himself, and consequently treats him as he would wish, under similar circumstances, to be treated by him, will fulfil all that the law enjoins; hence the whole law is comprehended in this one command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Hodge.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

RUM AND THE LODGE ENEMIES TO LAW.

1. The duty of subjection to law. V. 1. Magistrates and rulers derive their power from God and therefore resistance to the civil authorities is resistance to him. "Rulers are not a terror to good works but to the evil." Rum and the lodge show that they are evil works by their continual resistance to law. Saloon-keepers, brewers and distillers are persistent violators and evaders of their country's statutes. The docket of the criminal court in a small western city showed over fifty cases against saloon-keepers:—for selling liquor on Sunday, selling liquor without license and keeping billiard and pool tables without license. The liquors captured in the attempt to evade the payment of tax during the year 1870 amounted to 762,081 gallons of spirit and 10,310 barrels of fermented liquors. Of course we know there was a great deal more in the country which was never captured, just as there are a great many illicit distilleries that manage to carry on their business without molestation from the officers of the law. It is computed that there are about as many unlicensed drinking places in the country as there are licensed. If there was no liquor drank there would be proportionately little crime. United States District Attorney Wharton is reported as saying in allusion to the rapid progress of the temperance movement at the South: "I can see from what it springs. We would have no homicides in Kentucky but for liquor. All the killings there come from the passions engendered by hard drink." The lodge power resists secretly and silently and is the more dangerous on that account. John C. Spencer, who conducted the prosecution of Morgan's murderers, wrote in 1830: "I consider Freemasonry in direct hostility to the government in all cases where it cannot control it." The great Masonic authority, Mackey, tells us that a Mason convicted in the courts of his country of treason and rebellion can still keep his "good and regular standing" in the lodge. Morris in his Jurisprudence tells us substantially that a Mason can withhold evidence in court against a Master Mason, and if he is sent to jail for contumacy, or a fine imposed, "bids him glory in the strength of his Masonic integrity." That these must be the true principles of Masonry is proved by the fact that men who never read Mackey or Morris are every day shielding criminals; and this is the chief reason why it is so hard to arrest and convict saloon-keepers who are nearly all Masons or Odd-fellows.

2. Law is God's minister to us for good. V. 4. The design of law is to protect our life, property and personal freedom. The right to pass prohibitory laws is founded on this principle—that legally constituted authority is "God's minister to us for good." If it can protect us from the burglar and assassin, it can and ought to protect us from the rum traffic which is a system of robbery and murder on the most gigantic scale. On the same principle is founded its right to put down secret lodges. Masonry planned our terrible civil war, and has been at the bottom of all the various revolutions which have convulsed France. Every secret society is a menace to free government. Grand Army posts and even temperance lodges manipulated by ambitious, unscrupulous men are capable of working terrible mischief to our republican liberty; and we cannot be truly "subject," i. e., truly loyal to our government while indifferent to such a deadly foe.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What were Christ's teachings on this point? Matt. 22: 15–21. What miracle did he once work in order to carry out this principle? Matt. 17: 24–27. What was Paul's example? Acts 23: 1–5.

OBITUARY.

JACOB C. LUKENS departed this life at his residence in Deersville, Harrison Co., Ohio, on May 27th, 1884, in the eightieth year of his age.

The subject of this memoir was born in Hereford county, State of Maryland, A. D. 1805. Mr. Lukens has been a resident of Franklin township, one mile from the present village of Deersville, since A. D. 1826, until four years since, at which time he left his farm in care of his youngest son and came to Deersville to spend the evening of life in retirement from manual labor. He married Miss Sarah C. Bliss in 1830, with whom he lived until the day of his death. They were the parents of eight sons, six of whom are now living, and engaged in active and respectable business. Mr. Lukens with his companion embraced Christianity in early life; and since the organization of the Wesleyan Methodist connection of America, have been active and zealous members of the same, heartily espousing and advocating all the principles of reform which are the distinguishing characteristics of that infant denomination. By persevering industry they converted a portion of the unbroken wilderness into a productive farm, which has been to them a source of profit which placed them in early life in easy circumstances. In his death the family, the community, and especially the cause of Christianity and reform have lost a strong advocate and liberal supporter. A. D. CARTER.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1884.

READ in the last Cynosure, everything about the Saratoga General Assembly. You will find it wonderful. Go back to it by all means, if you have not read it.

We are assured on the most reliable information, that Prof. Currier of Oberlin Theological Seminary, has renounced all connection with the Masonic lodge. This acknowledgement is due to the Seminary and to the gentleman referred to.

Many a man says, "I think the Masons whom I know are about as good as those who are not Masons." The curse of curses in the lodge is, that it bewitches and blinds good men. The men who helped kill Morgan were almost all good men, who believed they were right.

We have had many important meetings; but to the human eye, the Chicago Convention June 20th, is far the most important of all. Let us do two things—Pray for and attend it. Mr. Bailey of the American says, "The meeting is too important to be neglected." Never were truer words.

Houghtaling's Handbook of Useful Information, sold everywhere on the cars, puts down William Wirt as Whig candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Mr. Wirt was nominated by Anti-masons in the first national nominating convention ever held in the United States. He was never nominated by Whigs. His vote, 228,000, was drawn about equally from the Whig and Democratic parties. A book so inaccurate is unfit to be trusted.

R. H. MCDONALD of San Francisco, is now East. He is a Mason and is fully resolved to go with the lodge. John B. Finch is lately elected "Grand Worthy" head of a secret temperance order. These are leading Prohibitionists. The Grand Master of Masons in Massachusetts is a leading liquor-seller; and the head of the Milwaukee Brewers Association is a high Mason. These men are sworn secret brothers, who approve of their oaths and believe in Masonry, which binds them to stand by each other.

Mr. H. Hull writes us from West Union, Iowa, that "decoration day" was kept with much spirit in that place. The souls of the dead patriot soldiers were comforted by a dance at night, preceded by a grand procession and bands of music playing "The girl I left behind me," "Yankee Doodle," etc., etc. And Mr. Hull notices that only the soldiers who belonged to the "Grand Army," which was enlisted after the fighting was done, were invited to join in the procession; while soldiers who did the fighting for the country were left out.

The eyes of all the thousands of Prohibitionists, who are not secretists as well, will be on our Chicago convention, both men and women. The only reason why they are not all with us to-day, is their weak and un-Christian fear of the lodges, who have persuaded them that we shall "die out." The Abolitionists were said to be "dying out," from their 7,000 votes in 1840 to 62,000 in 1844; to 291,000 in 1848 and so on to 1,341,262 for Fremont in 1856. All that time we were "dying out;" and Abolition was "going down." Let us now show the American people what the establishment of permanent headquarters in Chicago and Washington means. Come, if you have to bring mattrasses and sleep on floors. Let those who stay at home raise money to send others.

OBERLIN; PAST, PRESENT, AND TO COME.

The Cynosure editor and wife spent a delightful Sabbath (June 1st), and were the recipients of much Christian kindness in the beautiful city of Oberlin. He gave a Bible-reading on secret societies, in the venerable First Church, in the afternoon, and preached for the pastor, Rev. Mr Brand, to a good congregation in the evening in compliance with the temperance women's request for a sermon on "God in Government."

Pres. Fairchild, Hon. Prof. Monroe, and other members of the faculty attended the Bible-reading, which was damaged by the hurry of the speaker to compress it within the hour allotted. But the principal points of the lecture were made and understood.

The lecturer said: I stand here on a great vantage-ground. The sainted President Finney, whose name and memory are sacred, joined the Masons while an impenitent young lawyer; and quit them as soon as converted to Christ, before the Morgan, or any other attack was ever made on the lodge in this country. He has told us just what Masonry is; and whoever dares to dispute or question his veracity here in Oberlin will be justly set down as weak or wicked.

Mr. Finney tells us in substance:—

1st. That it takes twenty-eight oaths to make a Mason, beginning, "I promise and swear," and ending with "So help me God." These in the face of that Saviour who said, "Swear not at all." This is enough, if there was nothing more, to cast every unrepentant Mason out of the church.

2d. That Masons swear to conceal each others crimes.

3d. They swear young husbands to life-long concealment from the wives of their bosoms and the mothers of their babes.

4th. That they practice a religious service, creed, prayers, ritual, funeral rites, etc., with Christ left out; which religious services, the Bible calls sorcery, seeking knowledge or power, as Saul did, from the unseen world, not from God through Christ, i. e., from anti-Christ.

5th. In brief, Mr. Finney expressly and fully endorses and confirms the ordinary Masonic exposes. And the secret lodge system, including Irish leagues, Commune, Socialism, Nihilism, Masonry and Ku-Klux, are all aliases of the same thing—packing men in layers; pledging the upper to conceal from the lower, and the lower to obey the higher; thus making the masses "sworn underlings to unknown superiors," a constitution which would turn angels into devils! And this is Masonry.

The speaker then showed from Lev. 5th chapter, that the Mason who stands in the lodge and "hears" such sinful swearing, is guilty before God of all the crimes which it covers and includes, unless he renounces it.

2. He showed from Deut. 32: 17, and 1 Cor. 10: 20, that Christless religions are demon-worship. While they omit Christ or use him as a tool of incantation and falsehood, the Holy Spirit will not inhabit their worships but evil spirits do.

3. And that these false man-invented worships multiply oaths till men neither know nor care what to swear witnesses by; and thus undermine property, marriage, and every element of Christian civilization.

4. He showed, at large, that the infiltration of such lodge-religions sunk the Hebrew Commonwealth, and is sinking our court houses, as in Cincinnati, into popular contempt, and bringing certain ruin on the Republic.

THE IMBROGLIO IS PAST.

When A. H. Quint, D.D., called and organized the National Congregational Council at Oberlin, the Cynosure objected to its Masonic head. Mr. Quint is a Knight Templar and Mason of the thirty-second degree, and the only Congregational clergyman in the world probably, who ever boasted of his Masonry, and bid those who objected to his being Grand Chaplain of Masons, to "help themselves." He had already drawn twelve New England pastors into the lodge after him. President Finney and the Oberlin brethren were not aware of these and other worse facts. The Cynosure objected to the Quint movement as a blow aimed at reform.

The effect was as foreseen. The Oberlin city officers became Masons. Why should they not? The only permanent officer of the great Puritan Council was a Knight Templar, and had drunk the "cup of devils" out of a human skull! And the Oberlin Christians sat down with that great Council to the Lord's table and drank "the cup of the Lord" with that brother, who, with his Commandery had drunk "the cup of devils."

The consequence of this false step can never be fully estimated. Five new secret organizations have come into Oberlin beside the Masons; and members of these secret orders have found their way into both the Congregational churches, after months of agitation and earnest protest by those churches against the dark Christless system.

No reform ever was carried without jarring and misapprehension among the friends of Christ. Witness Luther and Zwingli; and Paul and Barnabas: but they loved each other still.

The course of the Cynosure is justified. We have a letter from the late Dr. Leonard Bacon, who was among the most prominent men who formed that Council, in which he says:

"My position in reference to that Council has been acquiescence under protest; and the more I see of its workings the worse I like it."

At the last meeting of the National Congregational Council, Dr. Quint was dropped from the post of managing secretary, and Rev. Mr. Hazen, a non-Mason, was put in his place. Mr. Quint had but two votes!

On our arrival at Oberlin on Friday (May 30th), we found that President J. H. Fairchild was to speak in the First Church on secret societies. The golden shower of tongues which fell on the disciples, has been falling ever since Pentecost. The tongue of "evangelists" fell on President Finney; that of a "teacher" on President Fairchild. He put the odious features of secret societies under a shower of philosophic sunbeams; and Hon. James Monroe of the College, endorsed President Fairchild, and the rule excluding secretists from both College and church.

THE ERRORS OF OBERLIN

have been two: 1, Inadequate conception; and 2, Inadequate method.

Pres. Fairchild is a philosopher. He approaches the secret lodge system in its relations and workings in society. If one should treat Unitarianism, Deism, or Universalism thus, much may be said in their favor; while the principle of the denial of Christ is fearfully fatal. It cuts the earth loose from God. And the lodge is organized Deism—"that anti-Christ which is even now in the world."

Then inadequate method follows inadaquate conception. Moses ordered the inventor of a Christless religion to instant execution. Joshua sifted out Achan and his gold; and Ezra made the church stand in the rain till they arranged to put away idolatrous marriages. And the apparent severity of those leaders was justified by the nation's history. Aaron's calf-worship was no worse than an Odd-fellow's ball. Achan's gold and the stuff of the Babylonish garment were good enough; and some of the Canaanitish women were doubtless loving companions. But the false worships brought in by these three forbidden evils would have swamped, and afterward did swamp that glorious nation and its moral code with it. Christ gone, all's gone. And we see before our eyes, in every Masonic funeral, that this secret lodge-system dispenses with Christ; and, with harlot impudence, claims to send its members to heaven, drunk or sober, when they die. Ignoring Christ, it ignores God, and is "the accursed thing" if there ever was an "accursed thing" on earth!

SUNRISE AT OBERLIN.

It is not wonderful that a National Council in which such men as Leonard Bacon were leaders; sitting down with Knight Templarism at its head, with its double-damnation invoked in the horrible "Fifth Libation," should stagger and divide opinion at Oberlin. National Congregationalism, with its record of glory, sat down at that communion table, and that mighty moral avalanche did stagger, and stun, and divide sentiment for a little there. But "the day is at hand." On Sabbath, June 1st, 1884, in the First Church in Oberlin, there may have been some trivial diversity of views, but there was only one opinion of the lodge. The good evangelist Clark opened the Bible-reading with prayer; and the pastor, Rev. Mr. Brand, had Rev. W. Burr to assist him in the pulpit at night; and those two brethren have insisted on cleansing the church from the leprosy of the lodge. President Fairchild has excelled as an administrative officer. The man who succeeded President Finney has had a grave and difficult task, and well has he performed it. He has carried Oberlin over from the time when the nation was a hissing, bubbling cauldron of reform, to the still waters below the rapids. Let there now be a day of fasting and prayer for the cleansing of the sanctuary as Christ cleansed the temple, and liquor and the lodge, now so brazen and impudent, will quail away before the revival of God's work. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord."

THE REPUBLICAN NOMINATION.

The names of James G. Blaine for President and John A. Logan for Vice President of the United States, have been given by the wires to the world. It is the strongest nomination which the Chicago convention of June 3d–6th, could have made. Both are men of strong, not to say brilliant powers, and it has been said that such men, by reason of the envy their superior parts excite, are not hereafter to be nominated for our Presidents.

Mr. Blaine's nomination is otherwise exceptional. He is a civilian without a military title. When popular enthusiasm follows the civilian John Quincy Adams; and when minute guns are mourners at the burial of Thurlow Weed who lived and died a private citizen, the pomp and hateful glory of war are dimned, and the glory of citizenship, American citizenship, receives new lustre.

Mr. Blaine's life will now be put under the popular microscope; his Catholic parentage; his Protestant profession; the vigor of his years; his early struggles; and his life's success; his Southern ardor in a cold Northern State; and his marriage for love without means; these already attest the industry of the press.

But we, who are Americans, and shall vote for the American party, have another and better consolation, if Mr. Blaine should chance (as we think surely he will not) to be elected. Mr. Blaine's body and soul have not been dishonored and degraded by Masonic oaths and rites. So his private Secretary assures us. And if he should become our President, the lodge can not use him as a lure to draw Americans into it.

BUT HE CANNOT BE ELECTED.

1. The Religious Telescope, the conservative organ of 170,000 church members, and perhaps twice as many people, says:

"Mr. Blaine is a man of great strength, statesmanship, literary ability, and personal magnetism; but his nomination by the Republican convention is to ensure the election of a Democratic President."

2. The Chicago Times, which is surely not deficient in worldly penetration, says of the convention which has nominated Mr. Blaine: "It is eomposed of two elasses, those who hold offices, and those who expect to get them," and "neither of these classes represent the mass of the American voters."

3. The moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly composed of 600 ministers and elders, gathered from ocean to ocean and from Oregon to the Gulf, said to 1,200 people in the town hall, Saratoga Springs, "the party lash cannot whip us Republican ministers and elders into voting for liquor with the distillers, brewers and saloon-keepers, and if Republican leaders think they can do so, they will find among us Presbyterians something of the 'Perseverance of the Saints' left yet. Before we will vote for a man whose personal habits and principles are not in harmony with the prohibition temperance movement, we will nominate our own candidate; and though we may not get votes enough to elect our man, we will get votes enough to defeat yours. I solemnly declare that I would rather have a drunkard or a Democrat in the Presidential chair, than a half-breed whom no one knows where to find." Dr. Hayes was applauded throughout a whole speech of this tenor.

Miss Frances E. Willard, the Deborah of the temperance host, said to the Republican platform committee: "The party which deelares for Prohibition in 1884, will be the one for which the temperance women in this land will pray and work." And Gov. St. John has said over and again, orally and in writing, "If the Republican party at Chieago, June 3d, does not put an out and out Prohibition plank in our platform; though I never yet scratched a Republican ticket, I shall go with the party which does put in such a plank."

Now the Republican party has no "prohibition plank;" or even permission to the people to vote for or against prohibition." Mr. Blaine's public dinners, last winter at Washington, had more liquor-glasses than plates: and if Moderator Hayes, and Gov. St. John do not vote against him, if they and Frances E. Willard eat their words and go back on us, we may hereafter expect water to run up hill. If left to do so, it will be fatal to them; and if they and their associates keep their pledges, the Kansas, Iowa, and Maine and other Prohibition battalions will certainly defeat Mr. Blaine.

5. The Democrats have now the House of Representatives, one half of the Senate and governor of the State of New York chosen by 200,000 majority; and the country hangs between the parties like the scale of a balance—wavering. The distillery, brewery, and saloon distrust the Republicans, and the Prohibitionists have been snubbed by the Chicago convention, and if the Republican party can carry water on one shoulder and whisky on the other without spilling; if they can yoke Prohibitionists and distillers together, and make them draw Mr. Blaine into the White House, they must get the frogs of the Apocalypse to "work miracles" for them.

BUT WHO WILL THE DEMOCRATS GET?

If their good genius does not forsake them, they will elect Gen. Butler. They are office-hungry, and they would vote for the ghost of Horace Greeley if they eould get office by him. Gen. Butler has the nomination of two popular, wide-spread conventions, the Anti-monopolists and Greenbackers, either of whose platforms are far better than the Republican platform, which is a very weak stump speech made up of politieal platitudes; and if the Democrats, July 8th, nominate General Butler, every saloon, every brothel, and every gambling hell in the country will go for him. The Demoeratic press, as a whole, goes for "Personal Liberty" to make, sell, and drink liquor; and from 100 to 500 Masonie oaths, solemnly sworn by Gen. Butler, have made his conscience like the liver of an old calomel patient, incapable of being affected by medicine.

Trades-unions, the "Bread or Blood" communists, dynamiters, sand-lotters, and all prodigals who have spent their living among harlots, and come back for another division of the home goods gained by industry and economy,—all these will hurrah for Gen. Butler, and also all the deeent Democrats who voted for Polk, Frank Pierce and Buchanan. Besides, there are thousands of sensible men who think Butler would make as good a President as Blaine or Logan, who have proposed Logan to run education on the liquor-tax, and Blaine to run the States and eounties by the same liquor—in short, Blaine proposed to make the distillery and brewery, the two main permanent pillars of the Republic! The Prohibitionist who votes for Blaine will be a moral curiosity; and without their votes he cannot be elected.

—Secretary Stoddard spent the Sabbath in Shcffield, Ill., where he preached in the Free Methodist church.

—Spccial attention of friends in New York, western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio is called to the railway arrangements made by Mr. Capwell and State agent Stoddard. It will be an opportunity to visit Chicago and and see the wonders of our growing city such as is seldom offered. Do not delay an hour to write for a place in the excursion.

—Pres. J. Blanchard is to speak this week in Central Hall, Wheaton, on the reform and especially its influence and object in the political campaign.

—Rev. J. B. Shay, who was selected to build up a church that should help the lodges of Streator, Ill., against the Independent church of that city has reached his level. The church he organized, though fostered by the Illinois Home Missionary Society, was refused fellowship by the Fox River Congregational Association, but was finally received into another in the center of the State. The moderator of the latter body has now preferred charges of heresy against Shay and a council is to meet to try him for heresy.

—Last week the English Grand Lodge of Freemasons voted their regrets for the pope's late encyclical against the order. The Italian Masons denounce him through all their papers.

—A pleasant call on Saturday from Rev. I. D. Crawford of the News of Sandy Lake, Pa., began a pleasant acquaintance with the editor of one of our best local exchanges. The News makes itself valuable to the community it represents and is also faithful in its testimony for Christ in reforms popular or otherwise.

—The lodges of Galesburg sent an invitation to the W. C. T. Union to join their parade on "decoration day." The matter came before the ladies, and one, whose cheerful enthusiasm has been felt in every good and Christian work until now over eighty years have passed over her head, with righteous indignation cried out, "How can two walk together except they be agreed! How can we walk with those sons of Belial!" The ladies did not walk in that company.

—An effort is being made to raise $10,000 from the "non-resistant" sects in this country to pay for the passage of the Russian Mennonites to this country. A remnant of this people yet remain in the old country, and endure great privations on account of their conscientious opposition to the evil of war. They desire to remove to our country where they may enjoy religious liberty in this respect. Cornelius Jansen of Beatrice, Nebr., is raising this fund, which deserves assistance from all who love the cause of peace.

—Noticing our challenge to Dr. Lorimer on the late occasion of his scorning the pope's letter against Freemasonry, Rev. S. Wardner of the Wesleyan Methodist says: "We have many times personally and in public prints, challenged the boastful secret fraternities to make good their arrogant claims in a public debate, and they have chosen to slink away behind the tyler's sword. We are still ready to meet any representative of the lodge worthy of consideration, in such open comparison of views; but we have no fears that we shall be crowded with such opportunities. Secrecy is a coward in any open relation."

—The Good Templar lodge has with a greedy and proselyting spirit attempted to seize upon the good work now being done by Francis Murphy among the intemperate thousands of Chicago. Mr. Murphy emphasizes the need of a Christian faith in getting rid of the drink curse and the natural result of his work should be to bring the men who are moved by his eloquent appeals into the church of Jesus Christ. To further this end most of his meetings have been held in churches. But a circular is sent, we presume to every one who signs the pledge at Murphy's meetings, inviting them into the Good Templar lodge. Such an invitation from "Pure Fountain lodge, No. 148," is before us with the names of Prof. Walter Lyman, Mary Weeks Burnett, M. D., and others appended, craftily worded with an appeal to join and thus become connected with "the largest and most influential body of temperance workers in the world." This attempt to make the Christian temperance work of Murphy a breeze for this lodge kite deserves a just and severe rebuke.

—Bro. Dorcas, member of the national committee for Dakota, writes that two delegates and their alternates have been chosen to attend the American convention June 20th. The delegates will be in their places, God willing.

—In an old copy of the "Northwestern Liberty Almanac" for 1847, edited by the late Zebina Eastman, there appears an interesting table of the election returns in Illinois for 1846. The vote for Birney on the Presidential ticket in 1844 was 3,577. In 1846 the State ticket received: for Eells, candidate for governor, 5,147 votes; for Smith, candidate for lieutenant governor, 5,133; for Congressmen, 5,217 votes. Owen Lovejoy was a Congressional candidate, and his popularity ran the Abolition vote up to 3,531 in his district, where Birney had received 1885 four years before.

—The Cincinnati Enquirer tells of a handsome woman who has been tattooed in that city by a "professor of the art." Upon one arm are these singular designs: a Masonic emblem, the three links of Odd-fellowship, a badge of the Grand Army of the Republic, etc. Here is a new field of discovery for the champion relic-hunter of Masonry. Rob. Morris must not yet retire to the shades of of La Grange. Freemasonry has need of his services. This stage lady must have descended from Solomon or Hiram of Tyre. Let him search out her genealogy, and print another book. He surely can invent another as good as his Morgan story.

—The Secretary of the N. C. A. addressed a letter to the United Presbyterian General Assembly at St. Louis, and to the Reformed Presbyterian Synod at Northwood, Ohio, calling attention to our reform and asking for an expression of each body upon it. The Synod adopted an encouraging resolution the text of which has not been sent us. The St. Louis body voted:

That the position of our church on secret, oath-bound societies as set forth in our testimony and as expressed in past deliverances of the Assembly, is sufficiently clear and definite; therefore no further action is required. Also, with reference to questions of reform, former actions of the Assembly are deemed sufficient, and no further action is required.

—These letters suggest the utility of addressing a note to all the church bodies, whether testifying against the lodge or no. Why should not we expect the ultimate good from such a letter sent to a Baptist State Convention or a Methodist conference to be as great as from the United Presbyterian brethren, who have always been known as opposed to the anti-Christian lodge? The action of the Illinois State Association at Sparta, contemplating memorials on the lodge to church bodies of every name meeting in the State, was wisely planned; but we do not learn that its executive committee has carried the resolution into effect.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet pro vides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Pro claiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cyno sure.

5 Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C A., to the amount of 25 cents.

THE HOME.

THE DOOM OF SODOM.

Away from the ruin—oh hurry ye on
While the sword of the angel yet slumbers undrawn;
Away from the doomed and deserted of God;
Away, for the Spoiler is rushing abroad!

The warning was spoken, the righteous had gone,
And the proud sons of Sodom were feasting alone;
All gay was the banquet, the revel was long,
With the pouring of wine and the breathing of song.

'Twas an evening of beauty—the air was perfume,
The earth was all greenness, the trees were all bloom;
And softly the delicate viol was heard,
Like the murmur of love or the notes of a bird.

And the shrine of the idol was lifted on high,
For the bending of knee and the homage of eye;
And the worship was blended with blasphemy's word,
And the wine-bibber scoffed at the name of the Lord.

Hark! the growling of thunder--the quaking of earth—
Woe, woe to the worship, and woe to the mirth,
The black sky has opened—there's flame in the air—
The red arm of vengeance is lifted and bare!

And the shriek of the dying rose wild where the song
And the low tone of love had been whispered along;
For the fierce flames went lightly o'er palace and bower,
Like the red tongues of demons to blast and devour?

Down, down on the fallen, the red ruin rained,
And the reveler sank with his wine-cup undrained!
The feet of the dancer, the music's loved thrill,
And the shout of the laughter, grew suddenly still!

The last throb of anguish was fearfully given,
The last eye glared forth in its madness on heaven,
The last cry of horror rose wildly and vain,
And death brooded over the Pride of the Plain?

And so it will be when the Lord comes from Heaven,
When the wicked to anguish and darkness are driven.
O, list to the warning; prepare for the day;
The Saviour is calling thee, turn not away.

TEARS VS. THE POCKET.

The last step in sanctification, we are inclined to think, is the conversion of the pocket. You may convert men from profanity, from intemperance, from the theatre, from fashion and frivolity in their varied forms, to attending meetings, distributing tracts, exhorting, singing, and praying, but the hand is still unclasped from its gains.

It is not sometimes very difficult to move audiences to tears while an earnest man pleads the cause of the poor and needy. But, not infrequently, the speaker is surprised to see the large amount of tears people will shed over the poor, and the small amount of money they will contribute to relieve them.

One of the most effective speakers in behalf of this Association, furnishes this striking illustration of the point:—

"On a Sabbath afternoon in the autumn of 1867, I presented our cause to a crowded house in the town of ———. In the course of my address I noticed, in front of me, a fine-looking, well-dressed man, bearing all the marks of wealth and high social position. His eyes, riveted on the speaker, were brimming with tears, rendering necessary the frequent use of his handkerchief. Indeed, he seemed so moved and interested that I almost forgot the great auditory around me, and talked and pleaded with him alone. When I reached the home of the good deacon with whom I stopped, I described my auditor, and found that he was what I expected, a leading citizen, wealthy, and of high social standing.

"The deacon, too, noticed his emotion, and said, 'I know how much he gave; how much do you think?'

"I replied, 'I should not suppose that a man in his circumstances could afford to be moved as he was for less than ten dollars.'

"'Ten dollars!' was the reply; 'he gave three cents!'

"Tears, I have since learned, ofttimes flow from very shallow springs. But I still wonder how a man could weep so much for 'three cents.'"—C. L. W.

We copy from the Congregationalist a similar story:

"STIRRED TO THE BOTTOM."

A pastor of a church in one of the pleasant country towns of New York has lived on a pinching salary for four years. Not many Sabbaths ago, when the chronic pinch had made the sore places too hard to bear any longer, he stated the case fully from the pulpit, compared his means of livelihood with that of his average parishioners, and showed that he was working on little more than half pay, and was hampered in his work among them by poverty.

This fair statement indorsed by the known economy and faithful, loving ministry of the pastor, had its effect, and bore fruits as follows:

A leading man in the church and the community, well-to-do farmer, remarked to some friends, "What an eloquent sermon! There is no getting away from it. We have not done our duty. That sermon stirred me as I never was stirred before—stirred me to the bottom."

It was suggested that a subscription be started, and the impressed brother be invited to head it. He took the paper, took time to weigh well what he was doing, and put down opposite his name—twenty cents! Starting out with this beginning, in the course of a few days, the deacon brought to the pastor, as compensation for the unpaid half service of four years, a purse of fifteen dollars!—Am. Missionary.

KEEP IT BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

On the front of the Royal Exchange, in the business centre of great London, stands the motto, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." Many do not read it; many do not understand it; many do not believe it; yet it stands as a solemn witness in the midst of a hurrying generation, and doubtless multitudes receive its testimony.

Such testimonies are needed. The Israelite was commanded to write the words of God's law upon the posts of his house and upon his gates. Deut. 6: 6–9.

"On the front of a business block on one of the busiest streets of Albany is boldly inscribed in large letters of stone, 'The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.' What a noble motto to keep before the eyes of men! Would that the multitudes that pass up and down before it every day made it the guiding principle of their lives. The beginning of wisdom. Mark that! Not the last thing, but the first. All depends upon the beginning. As a general rule, 'all's well that begins well.' 'The fear of the Lord' is the foundation-stone of the temple of wisdom. To build on anything else than that is to build on shifting sand. 'The fear of the Lord,' is the true starting point on the royal road of learning. It marks the spot where you must begin to search for the hidden treasures which, once gained, are yours forever."

Let Christians uplift their testimony for God and his truth. God hath promised to honor those who honor him; and he hath magnified his word, above all, his name.

EGYPTIAN TESTIMONY.—Rev. Dr. C. L. Goodell, writing from Cairo to the Advance, describes what he has seen in these words:

In Egypt we look upon the massive witnesses that have stood for four thousand years on the banks of the Nile, and kept fresh in remembrance important scenes in history which Providence has charged them with communicating through buried centuries to the ages to come. In Rome we saw columns and structures upon which the eye of Paul and the early Christians rested; but in Egypt we gazed upon those familiar to the sight of Abraham and Jacob and his twelve sons; and passed among those where Moses once walked, and the children of Israel sojourned. It is something to see objects which these patriarchs —their eyes long sealed in death—have seen.

And the heart is thrilled when in the Museum of Antiquities in Cairo, one is led to the mummy of the very Pharaoh of Moses' time, and to Pharaoh's daughter, who discovered Moses in the bulrushes, on the banks of the Nile. They lie in perfect preservation in their gigantic stone coffins, as they were found only a few years ago. The king rests in state beside the queen; and in the sarcophagus of the daughter there is a little infant embalmed. Near by, also, is the Pharaoh who pressed the children of Israel to make their brick and provide their own straw. He is pictured with a scourge in hand, a rod with four lashes. There is not the least question concerning the identity of these relics of the by-gone ages. Their tombs up the Nile, whence they were exhumed, we visited, and found the interior as fresh and brightly colored as they could have been in the days when they, in royal state, were first committed to the stone. It has been God's pleasure to keep Egypt as a reserved witness to the truth of his revelation, till the time it should please him to call for testimony, and then bring it forth and read to the world the unshaken evidence, written by enemies themselves on tables of stone. These are the truths that cannot be shaken.

POMPEII.—The old Pompeians had folding doors and hot-water urns; they put gratings to their windows and made rockeries in their gardens; their steel-yards were exactly like those your own cheesemonger uses to weigh his Cheddars and Glosters. Their children had toys like ours—bears, lions, pigs, cats, dogs, made of clay, and sometimes serving as jugs also. People wrote on walls and cut their names on seats, just as we do now. They kept birds in cages. In Naples to-day, as you walk along the Chiaja, you may find yourself in the midst of a herd of goats, with bells around their necks, exactly like those in the museum. They gave tokens at the doors of the places of entertainment,—the people in the gallery had pigeons made of a sort of terra cotta. They put lamps inside of the hollow eyes of the masks that adorned their fountains. They even made grottoes of shells; vulgarity itself is ancient. They ate sausages, and hung up strings of onions. They had stands for public vehicles, and the schoolmaster used a birch to the dunces. They put stepping stones across the roads, that the dainty young patrician gentleman and the pursy old senators might not soil their gilded sandals. It was never cold enough for their pipes to burst; but they turned their water on and off with taps, and their cook-shops had marble counters. They clapped their offenders into the stocks; two gladiators were kept there for eighteen hundred years! When there crockery broke, they riveted it. At Herculaneum there is a huge wine-jar half buried in the earth. It has been badly broken, but is so neatly riveted—with many rivets—that it no doubt held the wine as well as ever. Those rivets have lasted eighteen hundred years. It is a strange thing to think about. What would the housewife have said, if some one had told her that her cracked pot would outlast the Roman Empire?—Interior.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SWEET FLOWERS.

BY JAMES HOMER KENNEDY.

Gay flowers are blooming everywhere,
All beautiful and bright;
And earth's green mantle, shines as fair
Heaven's rosy love and light!
Like sunny youth and manhood's prime,
Lent to rejoice the heart,
Green spring-time and warm summer-time,
Life, health and joy impart.

Sweet flowers spring up in every path,
In every dewy dale;
The summit drinks their fragrant breath,
Their beauty marks the vale:
The field and meadow, lawn and grove,
The garden and the wild,
Are radiant with the bloom and love,
That erst in Eden smiled.

Welcome meek, lowly, cherished flowers,
Let laughing sunbeams fall
Around you, while glad childhood's hours
And memories ye recall;
Fancies, remembrances, delights,
Enchantments, hopes and loves,
Thoughts, musings—all the Muse incites—
Ye shine in happy groves.

To garland sacred home and cot,
Toil's Sabbath-peace to glad;
To decorate the holy spot
Where rests the sainted dead;
To teach affection's eloquence,
Love, union, gratitude,
Humility, faith, innocence,
Your forms are heaven-imbued.

Thank God for your pure teachings!—while
We walk in sorrow's shade,
May flowers around our footsteps smile,
In His dear light arrayed.
The blessings from His throne that shine,
In all His works declare,
Immortal amaranths divine
The saved in Christ shall wear!

SEA. Read Matt. 14: 22–33.

But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. Isa. 57: 20.

1. The troubled sea a place of danger. Luke 8: 23.
2. Man has no control over the storm. Jonah 1: 13.
3. God rules the sea. Job 38: 8, 11; Psa. 76: 10.
4. His word calms the storm. Psa. 107: 29, 30; 65: 7.
5. Sometimes this change is sudden. Mark 4: 39; Acts 9: 6.
6. It is wonderful. Luke 8: 25, 35; Gal. 1: 23, 24.
7. The stormy sea causes shipwrecks. Acts 27: 41; 1 Tim. 1: 19; Rev. 21: 1.

THE QUAIL.

The last sketch written by Ivan Turgeneff's pen before it dropped forever is given below. It is a remembrance of his childhood, tender, simple and touching:

I was about ten years of age when what I am about to relate occurred. It was summer time. In those days I lived with my father on a farm in Southern Russia. My father was passionately fond of hunting. Every moment that he could spare from his work—provided the weather was fine—would see him take down his rifle, strap his pouch about his waist, whistle for his old dog Tresor, and start to hunt quail or partridge.

In following the banks of the ravines you would encounter at every step little hollows in the dry ground where they love to squat. Old Tresor would then come to a sudden stop, his tail wagging furiously, and his forehead gathering in wrinkles, while my father, pale with excitement, would cautiously raise the hammer of his gun.

At times, to my great joy, I would be permitted to accompany him. I used to tuck the legs of my trousers into the tops of my boots, hang my little flask over my shoulders and so equipped, would imagine myself a true sportsman. Though perspiration might cover me from head to foot, and gravel and dust enter my shoes, I never felt the least fatigued, and never in a single instance allowed myself to drop behind. At each report of the gun, and as soon as the bird fell, I bounded forward with a joyous shout—I felt so happy! The wounded quail might struggle, flap its wings, sometimes on the ground, at others in Tresor's mouth, its blood flow—I only became enthusiastic; I never felt the least sentiment of pity!

What wouldn't I have given to be able to fire a gun myself, to kill quail and partridges with my own hand! But my father had repeatedly explained that I was not to have a gun until I had reached the age of twelve.

One day I started with my father to go hunting. It was on the eve of St. Peter's day. At that season of the year the young partridges are still very small, and my father would not shoot any. He therefore entered a patch of oak trees situated on the edge of a rye field, where you were always sure to find quail. As it was rather difficult to cut the grass in this piece of wood, it had been allowed to grow freely and had attained a great hight. Myriads of flowers, vetch, clover, harebell, mouse ear and sweet williams throve there in abundance. Whenever I came to this spot with my sister or the maid-servant I carried home whole armfuls; but when in the company of my father I did not think of picking flowers —I considered that occupation unbecoming a sportsman.

Suddenly Tresor came to a stop. My father made a signal to me to be cautious. Right in front of Tresor a quail-hen rose and flew away. But she flew in a strange manner, turning and tumbling over and over again in the air, and then falling to the ground as if she had been wounded.

Tresor made for her as fast as possible—a thing he never did when the bird flew in the usual manner.

My father could not take aim for fear of hitting the dog. Presently the dog made a sudden dash, and, before we knew it, he had seized the quail and brought her to my father. My father took the bird from him and laid it on its back on the palm of his hand. I ran up to him.

"What's the matter," I cried; "is she wounded?"

"No," replied my father; "she must, however, have her nest with her little ones close by. She acted as if she were wounded so that the dog might think he could catch her easily—"

"Why did she do so?"

"In order to divert the dog's attention from her little ones; after which, if she had succeeded, she would have flown away. But this time she missed her little game, and Tresor has caught her."

"Then she is not hit?" I inquired again.

"No—but she won't live—Tresor must have injured her with his teeth."

I stepped nearer to have a better look at the quail. She rested motionless on the palm of my father's hand; her head was dropping and her black eye looked at me sideways. All at once a feeling of pity overcame me. It seemed to me as if the poor little bird regarded me and thought, "Why must I die? Why? Have I not done my duty? I tried to save my little ones, to draw the dog's attention away from them, and here I am, a captive! Poor me! This is not just; no, no, it is not just!"

"Papa, perhaps she will not die," I cried, trying to caress the little bird's head.

My father answered: "She'll die. Look! In another moment her legs will stiffen, her body will tremble, her eyes will close."

Indeed, that is what did happen before long. When her eyes had closed I began to cry.

"Well, what's the matter?" my father exclaimed, almost laughingly.

"I pity her," I replied. "She did her duty and she has been killed. It is not just!"

"She wanted to play a deceitful game," my father answered, "but Tresor was too much for her."

"Bad dog!" I thought (at that moment I even thought my father himself was not a good man). There was nothing deceitful in her action. It was the love of her young that prompted her to do it. Because she was forced to dissemble in order to save her brood it does not follow that Tresor had to seize her.

My father wanted to put the quail in his game bag, but I begged him to give her to me. I placed her in my two hands and warmed her with my breath, hoping to bring her back to life again; but she did not stir.

"You waste your time," said my father. "You can't revive her. Don't you see how her head is drooping?"

I tenderly raised her head by the bill, but as soon as I let go it would fall back.

"Do you pity her so much?" asked my father again.

"Who will feed her young?" I replied.

My father looked at me attentively.

"Don't worry about that," he said; "the male bird, the father, will feed them. But listen! There's Tresor pointing again. Perhaps it is the nest! It is."

In fact, among the stalks of some tall grass two feet in front of Tresor's snout, I perceived four little quails nestled close together and with outstretched necks. They breathed so quickly I thought they were trembling all over. They had already little feathers, only their little tails were still very short.

"Papa! papa!" I cried, "call back the dog; he'll kill them, too!"

My father recalled Tresor, and prepared to sit down a little way off under a bush to eat some lunch. I remained close by the nest and refused to eat. I pulled from my pocket a white handkerchief upon which I placed the quail. "Look, poor orphaned little ones. There's your mother! She has sacrificed herself for you." The young birds seemed to breathe more rapidly when I said it, and their little bodies seemed to tremble still more violently.

I went to where my father sat.

"Will you make me a present of this quail?" I asked.

"If it gives you any pleasure, of course. But what are you going to do with her?"

"I am going to bury her."

"Bury her?"

"Yes, there; right close to the nest. Give me your knife, so I can dig her little grave."

"You expect the young to go and pray on the grave, I suppose?" suggested my father, in astonishment.

"No," I replied; "but the thought pleases me. She belongs there close to her nest."

Without adding another word my father looked for his knife and handed it to me. I set to work at once to dig the little hole. I pressed a kiss upon my quail's breast, and placed her gently in her grave, and then I filled it with earth. I cut two sticks, and after removing the bark I made a cross by tying them together with some dry blades of grass; and this I placed upon the grave.

We started soon afterward to go home. At each step I turned to look back. The cross was white, and I could see it far off.

That night I had a dream. It seemed to me I was in heaven, and there, perched upon a tiny little cloud, I saw my quail—the very same quail I had buried in the morning, only she was all white, like the cross on her grave. Around her head a halo of gold spread its lustre; no doubt, I thought, a reward for what she had suffered for the sake of her children.

Five or six days after I returned in company with my father to the grave. The cross had become a little more yellow, but had remained in its place. The nest, however, was empty; not a trace of the little ones was left. My father assured me that the male bird had carried them elsewhere. Indeed, at that very moment, only a few steps from where we stood, the little male flew out of a bush, and my father forbore to fire at him, and I—I said to myself, "No, no; papa is not bad!"

Strange to say, from that day my love for hunting left me completely, and I never even thought of the gun which my father had promised me.

TEMPERANCE.

ALCOHOL AS A REMEDY.

There has been a great advance in public sentiment in regard to the supposed utility of alcohol.

Sixty years ago the use of alcoholic liquors was supposed to be a necessity, in order to health. One of the first questions raised, when the reform began, was whether it would be possible for men to maintain good health if they desisted from their use entirely. It was supposed to be necessary often to resort to them. They held complete sway in all fields of labor, and no man was supposed to be of much value in the field or shop, as a laborer, without them; and it was held to be impossible to withstand severe heat or cold without their aid. They filled a large place in materia medica, and were freely resorted to for every kind of illness, as a sovereign remedy.

The quaint superstitions of Theocritus in the ancient Hollingshed chronicles overlapped the first quarter of the present century, ascribing to alcoholic drinks the following remarkable virtues: "It sloweth age: it strengtheneth youth; it helpeth digestion; it cutteth phlegm; it abandoneth melancholy; it relisheth the heart; it lightneth the mind; it quickeneth the spirits; it cureth the hydupsia; it healeth the strangurie; it pounceth the stone; it expelleth the gravel; it putteth away ventosity; it keepeth and preserveth the head from whirling, the tongue from lisping, the mouth from snaffling, the teeth from chattering and the throat from rattling; it keepeth the weasen from stifling, the stomach from wambling and the heart from swelling; it keepeth the hands from shivering, the sinews from shrinking, the veins from crumbling, the bones from aching and the marrow from soaking."

Sixty to eighty years ago public sentiment had advanced a little, and but little, beyond these superstitions of the olden times, in regard to the virtues of alcohol. Thirty years ago an old man approaching his ninetieth birthday said: "A kind Providence and good New England rum have spared my life so long." "Black strap," made of rum and molasses, or a rum sweat were indispensable remedies for a cold. "Rum, seasoned with cherries, protected against cold." "Rum, made nutritious with milk, prepared for the maternal office; and under the Greek name of Paregoric rum, doubly poisoned with opium, quieted the infant's cries." "Females or valetudinarians courted an appetite with medicated rum, disguised under the chaste name of 'Hexham's Tincture' or 'Stoughton's Elixir.'" In some sections of the country it was customary to take whisky flavored with mint soon after waking in the morning; and so essential was it regarded to health that scarcely any person of any age or sex was exempt from it.

Can alcoholic drinks be safely dispensed with was a question seriously and conscientiously pondered when this reform was in its incipient stages. Even Dr. Benjamin Rush was some time in settling this point; others were longer still in reaching a conclusion. To dispense with them altogether, it was felt, would make men weak and puny, the sure victims of exhaustion and disease. These ideas were current. These mischievous delusions, relics of darker ages, have now been dispelled from multitudes of intelligent minds. How great the change! How seldom we meet such notions now, only among backward-looking people, who are unpardonably loitering behind the march of mind, held back by the subtle delusious of appetite.

As early as 1850 the use of alcoholic beverages had been condemned by the best medical authorities in Great Britain and the United States, as not only needless, but positively injurious. Prior to that time alcohol had been demonstrated to be a poison in a healthy body. Two thousand of the best medical and surgical gentlemen in Great Britain declared, over their signatures, that "the most perfect health is compatible with total abstinence from all intoxicating beverages," and that "total and universal abstinence from such beverages would greatly coutribute to the health, prosperity and happiness of the human race." One hundred and twenty-five of the first physicians in New York City united in declaring that "alcohol should be classed with other powerful drugs, and when prescribed medicinally, it should be with conscientious caution and a grave sense of responsibility." Soon after the publication of these views an article appeared in the Westminster Review advocating alcohol as food. Some French investigators, however, of a high rank, quickly exploded this pernicious theory, and the Westminster Review magnanimously retracted it. Ex-Governor Andrew, before a legislative committee of Massachusetts, reasserted the theory that alcohol is food, or at least an assimilator of food, and the effect of it has been a reaction of sentiment in some circles of society. But the battle has been fought over again, and the demonstrations of the ripest science are against alcohol at all as a beverage, and also as a medicine, except in exceedingly rare cases. In the language of the sanitary editor of the Independent: "Every gain in sanitary knowledge and in the study of the conditions of perfect health tends to drive alcohol from use."

The employment of alcohol in medicine is immeasurably reduced in the practice of the most scientific physicians; and in the London Temperance Hospital, after eight years of thorough trial, it has been fully demonstrated that it can be dispensed with altogether in the treatment of all diseases.—D. Dorchester, D. D. in N. Y. Independent.

A NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

The latest beneficent effort of which we have knowledge is the incorporation of a National Temperance Hospital and Medical College association, whose object is the practical demonstration of temperance principles in the administration of medicine, and the introduction of temperance truth in medical education. Its incorporators are Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, Mrs. Evelyn N. Peters, Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert and Mrs. A. P. Kelley. These trustees are known as temperance women of energy and perseverance as well as of ideas of firmly rooted principles. Their purpose in this movement is to aid in founding an institution which shall do for America what the London Temperance Hospital is doing for the medical temperance reform in Great Britain.

The customs and climate of Great Britain differ so greatly from ours, that the statistics of this institution cannot be accepted by us as more than a general estimate. We should have the most carefully compiled statistics of medical practice in the conditions of our own country.

The need of physicians who prescribe alcohol only as other poisons are used, or not at all, is the crying need of our reform. More often than in any other way American men and women are led into the regions of intemperance through the gateway of the alcoholic medical prescription. Demonstration of the needlessness of alcohol preceding and accompanying the training and education of the physician will establish temperance doctrine as few other agencies can, and the hospital and college together will contribute to a hitherto unfilled want. The constitution of the organization forbids incurring debt in the furtherance and maintenance of the enterprise, and no steps will be taken toward "materializing" the project until the funds are in hand or reliably pledged thereto.

The hospital is intended for the treatment of all forms of disease and will be open to applicants from all parts of the United States, with wards for paying and non-paying patients, the treatment to be in all cases non-alcoholic.

A large advisory board will be made up from the best material this country affords, among men and women, medical and otherwise. The college faculty and hospital superintendents will be drawn from the ranks of men and women of ability, and a broad plan and outlook will, it is thought, characterize all the plans and operations of the new society.—Union Signal.

According to the annual statements of what is called the English "Drink Bill," as given in the London Times, it is favorable. England spent $3,750,000 less in drink in 1883 than in the year preceding. Since 1876 the cost of liquors in England has diminished by the sum of nearly $107,000,000.

The Crump Label Company at Montclair, N. J., which employs between three and four hundred hands, has concluded to show its regard for the temperance cause, by refusing to print labels for liquor, wine, beer or cider. The decision, it is said, will cost the company about $20,000 a year.

Statistics show that in Germany where Sunday liquor selling is open and untrammeled, 53 per cent of the crimes are committed between Saturday and Monday morning.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. W. T. Meloy, D. D., of Chicago, was chosen to give the anniversary address next year at Xenia Theological Seminary. Rev. E. B. Graham is his alternate.

—Seven years ago, a correspondent at Union City, Michigan, writes us, the Congregational church at that place voted not to allow adherents to the Masonic lodge in their church fellowship. The action roused the Masons of the place who brought such a pressure upon the church that the vote was reconsidered and several members of the order have since been received. The effect of such a retreat in the face of the enemy must be extremely damaging to the spiritual life of the church. Where was the faith of these brethren?

—Rev. Wm. Chandler of Dover rejoices in the favor of God upon his labor. He baptized sixteen converts on the first Sabbath in June and can count nearly forty conversions since his conference. The church under his care (United Brethren) maintains a godly testimony against Satan worships.

—The Congregational church at Cortland, Ohio, with which Bro. John D. Nutting of Oberlin Seminary labors, is almost a unit against the secret lodges.

—Their friends at Wheaton last week welcomed home at the end of another year's study, brethren Hiatt and Nutting from Oberlin Seminary. The former on account of the failure of his health from overwork in the powerful revival at Gustavus, O., last winter, has been constrained to cease preaching for the present. The latter returns, after the N. C. A. annual meeting, of which he is recording secretary, to Cortland church.

—The Rev. E. C. Oggel, for three years pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church in this city, preached his farewell sermon to that people June 1st, and in a few weeks will sail from San Francisco to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, where he goes to take the pastorate of the Presbyterian church.

—The Rev. W. M. Blackburn, D. D., having resigned his pastoral charge in Cincinnati, has accepted the presidency of the University of North Dakota, at Grand Forks, and entered upon the work of organizing this new institution. Dr. Blackburn was for a number of years professor in the Northwestern Theological Seminary Presbyterian in this city. In 1870 he delivered the annual address at Wheaton.

—The annual conference of general secretaries of the Young Men's Christian Association of the United States and British Provinces will be held in Montreal, Canada, June 11 to 15. It is reported that there will be 200 or more present.

—Miss Edna Cole, who has just returned from Chieng Mai, Siam, was at the last meeting of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions, and spoke about her work as missionary to the people of the Laos country. She was associated with Mary Campbell, who was drowned three years ago. She gave the ladies an account of her reception at Chieng Mai by the little band of missionaries and the few native Christians, and spoke of the opening of the schools. Five years ago, when she went to this work, there was one church with thirty members in the Laos country. Now there were four churches and more than two hundred members.

—The Seventh Texas State Holiness Camp Meeting will begin at the Association grounds near Bremond on the H. & T. C. R. R. in Robertson county, Texas, on Thursday evening, July 3, 1884, and continue ten days or longer, as the Lord may direct; all who love or want to love Jesus are invited to come.

—Among the one hundred and fifty Catholics who have united with the Presbyterian church in Valparaiso, South America, one-third have said that the turning point in their religious experience took place while witnessing our celebration of the Lord's Supper. Is not the promise fulfilled, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

—The Board of Foreign Missions reported to the Presbyterian General Assembly receipts of $693,122.70, and the Board of Home Missions $620,428.22, making a total of $1,313,550.92 for the last fiscal year. This statement should call forth gratitude to God through the entire bounds of the church, and renewed exertions for the prosecution of the work next year.

—At a meeting of the Presbytery of Los Angeles, in California, the organization of a Chinese church in Los Angeles was reported. The sum of $1,450 has been raised by the Chinese themselves, for the purchase of a lot and the erection of a building.

—Rev. Dr. Marshall W. Taylor, elected editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate by the Methodist General Conference, is a colored man. He is probably the first colored man in that church who has received an office at the hands of the General Conference.

—The total issues from the Bible House during the year ending March 31 were 1,357,051 volumes of Bibles, Testaments, and portions; and when to these are added 451,164 volumes issued in foreign lands, the aggregate, 1,808,215 copies, represents the entire circulation of the year. Of this large number 499,379 copies were complete Bibles. The expenditures of the year, $762,106.17, for manufacturing and general purposes, exceeded the receipts by $117,637.10.

—At the Methodist General Conference a lively discussion sprung up over a resolution introduced by Rev. T. B. Neely, of Philadelphia, as follows: "Resolved, That we re-affirm the doctrine of the fathers of our church that the bishopric is not an order but an office, and that in orders a bishop is merely an elder or presbyter." It was opposed by those who thought the points stated so well known as to need no restatement, and by those who did not want to say anything about it. It was, however, adopted by the conference.

—During the last year the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian church received to carry on its work $591,282.07. Of this $227,620.60 came from churches, $151,696.33 from legacies, $22,191.27 from Sabbath-schools, $97,167.00 from woman's missionary societies, $81,595.16 from individuals, and $11,011.71 from interest on permanent funds. The same Board employed during the year 1,458 missionaries, and reports an addition of 6,216 on confession of faith. The Board of Missions for Freedmen employed during the same time 91 missionaries, and reports an addition of 1,199 on confession of faith.

—The Board of Missions for Freedmen has never had so many applications to open new missions as at the present time. Besides those from the territory already occupied we have earnest and urgent appeals from Mississippi, Indian Territory and Kansas. Some of these appeals come from brethren in the Southern church, who offer their hearty co-operation in the work. One Presbyterian evangelist, in a State where there are over 650,000 freedmen, among whom we have not a single mission, after touchingly describing their condition, says: "Send us an educated colored minister or teacher and then command my services to help him in his work."—Presbyterian.

—By a vote of 53 to 21 the Acton Camp meeting Association (Indiana), of the M. E. church, declined the proposition of the Cincinnati, St. Louis and Chicago railway company to discontinue the running of Sunday excursion trains during the progress of the camp-meeting. This running of Sunday trains is in violation of the civil law of the State as well as the sacred law of God. And this action of the association places that camp-meeting enterprise in a very unfavorable light, and leaves room to suspect that money rather than piety is the chief aim of the organization. Methodists everywhere should rise up and repudiate the Sabbath-breaking and other demoralizations involved in those Sunday excursions. While they are doing this it might be well for them not to forget to condemn the Sabbath parades which secret orders practice (with drums and fifes and swords and banners), and in which so many Methodist preachers and members participate. We think the Methodist Episcopal church has a conscience yet as to Sabbath railroad excursions; but how long will it keep it if it continues to have none on Masonic Sabbath parades? Alas, for a dying conscience!—Richmond Star.

—The death of David Louding, a native of Africa brought to America four years ago to be educated, is announced. He died of quick consumption in Dayton, O., May 10th, 1884, aged about eighteen years. His mother was a daughter of Stephen Caulker, the African chief of the Shebro country, who first sold the missionaries a piece of land at Shengay. He seems to have inherited much of the talent of his grandfather, who was of great native ability, though a wicked man in all his life till his conversion to Christianity at the advanced age of eighty years, under the labors of Joseph Gomer. David was for some years a pupil in the United Brethren mission school at Shengay, where he was known as a very bright student and a most reliable boy. He was just closing his second year in the high school in Dayton. The principal there had pronounced his mind equal to that of any in the school, and his grades for the year were showing this fully. He was converted and joined the church a few years ago, and ever after was an active Christian worker.

WYCLIFFE.

The five hundredth anniversary of the death of John Wycliffe, the Bible translator and the earliest English reformer, was celebrated in England during the last week in May. Special services were held the first day in St. Andrew's church, Blackfriars, London, the site of the monastery where the pope's bull against Wycliffe's writings was read. A memorial sermon was preached by the Bishop of Liverpool from the text 2 Peter 1: 13: "Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance."

A conference was held at the Mansion House on the same day, over which the Lord Mayor presided. Addresses were made by the Mayor, by Professor Montague Burrows, of Oxford University, Canon Pennington, Canon Girdleston, Rev. A. Moule and others. Subscriptions were promised to a fund to be used in giving greater publicity to Wycliffe's works. A meeting was held in Exeter Hall on the second day over which the Earl of Shaftesbury presided.

A motion was carried instructing the Memorial Committee to appeal for £10,000, to be used in the publication and circulation of Wycliffe's writings, and for the erection of a memorial statue on some suitable site in London, and about £400 was immediately subscribed.

CHICAGO FRENCH MISSION.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—It affords me pleasure to announce that at last I have found a convenient room where to preach to my French countrymen of this city the Gospel of Christ.

Maskell Hall, corner of Desplaines and Jackson streets, is the place where I ought to be permanently to do this evangelizing work among the French settled in that section of the city. Nobody, till now, has thought to do that work among them. Every day we hear that there is a great deal of corruption in Chicago, but nobody dares put his fingers to the handle of the plough. The priest passes by, the Levite passes by the poor, ignorant and corrupted multitudes of this city and do nothing to alleviate the burden of their miseries and sins. How long shall it last? As long as Protestants will forget that if once they received liberties, rights and freedom, it was through reformed priests, as Luther, Calvin, Knox and others. It will last as long as they will forget that the Bible is our bulwark.

For three months I have tried to get the Protestants of Chicago interested in a work which they have themselves pronounced important and necessary. To reach more easily the French Roman Catholic element I have issued a French semi-monthly paper, with two columns in English, in order to get the English speaking people interested in the work, and because I am not a slave of sectarianism or of denominations. Nobody has dared come forward in a practical way. They always tell me, "Go forward," and that is all their religion, the religion of the priest and Levite of the Gospel. If reformation is needed among the Catholics on account of their doctrines, I have seen, since four years ago I came on the right side, that reformation is as much wanted among Protestants, on account of their apathy, indifference concerning their own souls and the interests of the reformation.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

MASONIC MORALITY.

[Tune, Comin' thro' the Rye.]

If a Mason cheat a body
Of his property,
Other Masons join in with him,
Swearing to a lie.

CHORUS.

Every Mason is a partner
To these deeds of wrong,
For when the order covers crime,
He joins the wicked throng.

If a Mason rob a lassie
Of her purity,
He's not punished, if no Mason's
In her family.

CHORUS.

If a Mason kill a Morgan,
Will he need to die?
Masonry corrupts the jury,
Shuts the judge's eye.

CHORUS.

Sons of Freedom! Are ye worthy
Of the noble name,
When your silence is conniving
At these deeds of shame?

SECOND CHORUS.

Rouse to action! By your voting
Ne'er connive at wrong,
And since the order covers crime
Condemn the wicked throng.

Heroes be, and do not falter,
Though ye are but few;
Principles will gather voters,
To the right be true.

SECOND CHORUS.

Masonry has been enslaving
Men on every hand,
From her thraldom let us rescue
Our beloved land.

SECOND CHORUS.

Let us greet the day approaching,
Day of jubilee,
When the right shall be victorious,
Every man be free.

SECOND CHORUS.

PROOF.

Oath of Master Mason: "Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will not give the grand hailing sign of distress, unless I am in real distress, or for the benefit of the craft when at work; and should I ever see that sign given or the word accompanying it, and the person who gave it appearing to be in distress, I will fly to his relief at the risk of my life, should there be a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own. Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will not wrong this lodge, nor a brother of this degree, to the value of one cent, knowingly myself, nor suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it."

Who is to be the judge of the distress? It is the man himself, and it may be when he is pursued by the officers of the law for his crimes; he who secs the sign is to fly to the rescue, if there is the appearance of real distress. Which oath will the officer of the law keep? The oath to the lodge or the oath to the government? Let the facts show.

"Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will not speak evil of a brother Master Mason, neither behind his back nor before his face, but will apprise him of all approaching danger if in my power. Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter, I knowing them to be such, nor suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it."

Oath of Royal Arch Mason: "Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will aid and assist a companion R. A. Mason, when engaged in any difficulty; and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same if in my power, whether he be right or wrong. Also that I will promote a companion R. A. Mason's political preferment in preference to another of equal qualifications. Furthermore do I promise and swear that a companion R. A. Mason's secrets, given me in charge as such, I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as his own, murder and treason not excepted."

Obligation of Knight Templar: Fifth Libation: "This pure wine I now take in testimony of my belief in the mortality of the body and the immortality of the soul; and may this libation appear as a witness against me both here and hereafter, and as the sins of the world were laid upon the head of the Saviour, so may all the sins committed by the person whose skull this was be heaped upon my head in addition to my own, should I ever knowingly or wilfully violate or transgress any obligation that I have heretofore taken, take at this time, or shall at any future period take, in relation to any degree of Masonry or order of Knighthood. So help me, God."

That these obligations are not mere empty sound we can see from the case of Capt. Morgan, the trial and acquittal of Dukes, and many other instances recent and remote. GEORGE WARRINGTON.

GUIZOT'S

HISTORY OF

FRANCE.

From the Earliest Times to 1848.

Eight volumes, small octavo, large type, over 400 fine illustrations. Price reduced from nearly $50 to only $6.00 per set. Volumes I. and II. now ready; others at intervals of ten days. Sample volume sent postpaid, with privilege to return, 65 cents.

"This is another wonder of the publishing business. It is well printed, substantially bound, and abundantly illustrated with spirited pictures. The price is astonishing. Guizot was a writer too well known to need praise from us."—EPISCOPAL RECORDER, Philadelphia, Pa.

"The marvellous cheapness of these profusely illustrated and handsomely bound volumes must provoke comment everywhere."—JOURNAL, Indianapolis.

"The only really good and complete history of France ever written."—CHRISTIAN LEADER, Boston.

SEVEN GREAT

MONARCHIES of the Ancient Eastern World. By GEORGE RAWLINSON. Best American edition. Complete in three volumes of over 2,000 pages, and over 700 illustrations and maps. Price reduced from $18 to $2.40. NOW READY.

"Its position is well established as one of the greatest of modern histories, a monument to the erudition and capacity for work possessed by its author. The edition is in every way a satisfactory one, while its cheapness is something marvellous."—EPISCOPAL RECORDER, Philadelphia.

"It is amazing to see what valuable books he is now publishing at prices which are within the reach of the poorest. The best work he has yet done is that great and notable work by Professor Rawlinson."—GOLDEN RULE, Boston, Mass.

"It is, of course, the publisher's risk, and not the purchaser's, when a book like this is offered for the price of this one. We can only hope and believe, since he knows what he is about, that the publisher will get his money back."—STANDARD, Chicago, Ill.

LODGEDOM.

—The Odd-fellows of Coldwater, Mich., lately fitted up an old bank building in a lavish manner for a hall, and dedicated it to their peculiar religion, with the aid of other lodges from Hillsdale, Reading, Quincy, Brenson, Burr Oak and Sturgis.

—The Pennsylvania Odd-fellows claim a membership of 80,504; number of Past Grands, 19,759; present number of working lodges, 904. The relief report shows that $379,531 was paid for various reliefs.

—The Knights Templar of Pennsylvania met May 28 at Erie. They claim 59 commanderies and a membership of 7,000, an increase of 400 during the year.

—Dr. S. B. Hubbell, of Medford, Wis., committed suicide iu his office a few days ago on account of the discovery of a criminal intimacy with Mrs. Keeler, the wife of the postmaster, who threatened to kill both unless they left town at once. Hubbell was a member of several secret societies.

—At the late anniversary of Union Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F. in this city, one speaker said that this particular lodge had received during the forty years of its existence $60,004.70, and paid out in charities $17,527.19, initiated 1,140 members, and admitted 193 by card from other lodges, making a total of 1,333. When the lodge was started there were only five other lodges in the State, with less than 200 members. To-day there were 750 lodges and 35,000 members. In Chicago alone there were forty-five lodges, with over 5,000 members.

—The bank at Newton, Iowa, failed a few weeks ago. The books show a deficit of $30,000 besides the $3,000 first discovered. The bank is closed, and it is thought by many that the losses will reach $75,000. Cotton, the defaulting cashier, was a Board of Trade gambler. It is noted now that the defaulting cashiers at Bloomfield and Oskaloosa, as well as Cotton, were all prominent as Knights Templar.

—Among the late Chicago court records is an item on the so-called "Order of Mutual Aid." Frank Rudolph filed a petition for mandamus in the circuit court against the Grand Lodge of Illinois of the Independent Order of Mutual Aid, to compel that association to receive him as a member in good standing. Rudolph says that the constitution of the Grand Lodge provides that on a branch organization becoming defunct its members may, by a payment of dues, become members of another branch or of the main body. He was a member in good standing of the Robert Blum Lodge, No. 122, which suspended a few months ago. Although he has tendered his dues and assessments as required by the constitution, the president and secretary of the Grand Lodge refuse to receive him as a member, and as a mortuary benefit of $2,000 is paid to the heirs of deceased members of the order, besides other benefits, all of which he does not wish to lose, he asks the court to grant him the necessary relief.

—Rob. Morris, the veteran Masonic lecturer, writer, slanderer and falsifier, announces that with the present season he closes his work as Masonic lecturer. Let men rejoice! His forty-four appointments in Illinois closed May 27 at Carmi. He had addressed fifty-nine lodges previously during 1884. The programme of each evening was as follows: A sketch of English Masonry, a sketch of the Morgan affair, a minute description of the ceremonies of his initiation into Oriental Masonry in the city of Jerusalem. To these will be added a few recitations of his Masonic poems and anecdotes of personal experience; the whole occupying one hour and a half. The programme being completed, a recess of thirty minutes is taken, which is followed by the communication of the Oriental rank of the Palm and Shell, which takes thirty minutes more. The Oriental Masonry part of the affair Morris advertised as connected with a bloody sacrifice but it was regarded as an advertising dodge by those well versed in lodge tactics. If the whole performance was of a piece with Morris' lying book on the Morgan murder the lodges of Illinois and Iowa have had a large amount of chaff blown over them of late.

—The Ancient Order of Hibernians was received with great favor a few years ago by Archbishop Purcell. This year they asked an address from Bishop Gilmour of Cleveland, who scolded them roundly and urged them to put themselves in communication with some prelate, so that their case which would come up in the forthcoming Romish council, might be favorably considered. The action of the order, printed lately in the Cynosure, puts them on good terms with the church. The Catholic Review gives them this admonition: "A grave responsibility now rests with the leaders of this society. They have an opportunity that will never come again of convincing the church that they are what they claim to be, a safe and Catholic society. If they do not, if they resist or ignore or avoid a decision of a claim that they so frequently put forth, and that every one desires may be answered in the affirmative, they must prepare for ultimate even if it be prolonged and delayed dissolution. As their declared friend Bishop Gilmour says, 'It behooves you to place yourselves properly before the Council, and see that the truth be told. If action is taken against you it will be to your great disadvantage and final ruin. Societies composed of infidels or non-Catholics may and do exist without and against the will of the church; but societies composed of Catholics cannot and should not exist against the will of the church.' "

—Fitzgerald and ten other Fenians were arraigned at Sligo, Ireland, May 5, charged with being Invincibles and with murdering landlords and others. Thomas Moran, an informer, and a friend of Sheridan, testified that when he joined the Invincibles he was sworn on a knife, and the terms of the oath pledged him to secrecy, implicit obedience to the leaders, to act when called upon, and to deal death to all tyrants. He connected Fitzgerald with the Tubbercurry branch of the Irish Republican Brotherhood by swearing that Fitzgerald came to Tubbercurry from London to settle some differences. The prosecutor stated that James Lyons and Patrick Reynolds, now in America, were local leaders of the Invincibles. Moran deposed that P. J. Sheridan visited Tubbercurry in the garb of a priest and formed an "inner circle."

—Patrick Delaney's testimony in the case of the Sligo conspirators gives the utmost satisfaction to the detectives. They have all along claimed that the Sligo conspirators are a band of "professional murderers." They now declare that Delaney's testimony will prove that the officers in arresting these villians have "unearthed a nest of vipers, engaged in plots of wholesale slaughter." This boast is sustained by the fact that a large number of small artisans and shop-keepers, alarmed at the suggested exposures to be made by this witness, have suddenly left Dublin. In many cases these men have left their business affairs in confusion, and it is evident that they had some pressing need for immediate departure. It is evident also that the whole truth has not yet come out regarding the connection of Patrick N. Fitzgerald with the Sligo conspiracy. Patrick Delaney, when in the witness box, was very respectful in all his references to Fitzgerald, and this furnishes additional proof that the latter held a high official position among the organized agitators of Ireland.

—A London dispatch of May 27th says that the Russian Nihilists have renewed their activity, and begun a new campaign of terrorism in the province of Moscow. They have placarded that province and its capital with hundreds of copies of a manifesto conveying a threat of death to the Czar. As these placards were all posted on the same night, and as each man engaged in the work could have posted but very few of them, owing to the necessity of dodging the police, it is evident that the Nihilists must count among their members a large number of men willing to risk their liberty in the prosecution of such an enterprise. The proclamations are well printed on good paper, and are headed: "The Executive Committee to the Emperor Alexander III."

They have neither date nor signature, but each copy bears the usual seal of the Executive Committee impressed upon the paper after it had been printed. The proclamation reminds the Czar that he was warned in May, 1881, that if he would avoid the fate which had befallen his father two months before he must grant a constitutional form of government, and organize a Parliament composed of representatives of the people. During the three years that have followed this warning, the proclamation says, the Revolutionists have suspended their agitation, but now that their warning has been so long wheedled they inform the Czar that he must prepare to be dealt with as pitilessly and removed as suddenly as his father and predecessor.

The police tore down the placards before most of the citizens were stirring, and have made strenuous efforts to find the persons who printed and posted them. Many students of both sexes have been arrested on suspicion, and a thorough search has been made of the offices of all newspapers and printers suspected of disloyalty. None of the peculiar type used in printing the placards have been discovered, however, and the police believe that it was melted up immediately after being used.

FARM AND GARDEN.

FARM WORK FOR JUNE.

The best time to kill weeds is when they are very small. Most of this work should be done by horse labor. Keep the cultivator running through the corn field, using the hand hoe only close to the hills. Much of the cost of tillage should be charged to the succeeding crops, otherwise figures will often show that it does not pay to grow corn, or any hoed crop. Sow a quantity of fodder corn to supply an abundance of wholesome food when the pastures get short. Sow in drills three feet apart, and at weekly intervals, that there may be a long and continuous supply. A field from which winter rye has been removed may be manured, plowed and sown to fodder corn.

Sow Swedish turnips now in drills two and a half feet apart. Use at least two pounds of seed per acre. It is essential to have the soil rich and mellow. When the second leaf appears, thin the plants to about fifteen inches in the rows.

Haying begins this month, and every implement should be in readiness for this pushing work. Cut only as much grass as can be well cared for, otherwise the quality of the hay will be injured by exposure. The hay tedder, next to the mowing machine, is the most valuable haying implement. It hastens the curing and makes the hay of uniformly good quality. Hay caps made of stout cotton are excellent to protect hay while in the cock. They often pay for themselves in a single season, and if properly cared for, will last for several years.

Buckwheat may be sown in June, and is a good crop for new land. It may profitably fill up a place where some other grain crop has failed.—American Agriculturist for June.

WATERING STRAWBERRIES.

Growing strawberry plants need a generous supply of water. From the day when the first blossoms appear, until the well developed fruit is ready to be plucked, the soil where strawberry vines stand should be kept very moist. The crop of fruit is often damaged seriously by one or two days of hot and dry weather when the plants are in blossom, or soon after the berries begin to grow. If one has an abundance of straw, old hay or coarse manure it will pay to spread such material between the rows and close around the hills, for the purpose of keeping the soil moist. Coarse hay or straw can be spread most advantageously when they are wet.

An ordinary sized strawberry plot will require only a few minutes' labor with a large watering-pot, to give the plants a generous supply of water every evening. Sawdust, tan-bark and chip-dirt when spread over the ground keep the soil moist, and will greatly retard evaporation.

Those who succeed in producing mammoth berries use manure unstintedly and keep the soil well watered. It is a good plan to keep the ground between the rows of strawberry vines covered with litter, so thickly and evenly that grass and weeds are all smothered. Then to apply water every evening, when the weather is not wet and lowery. Where salt hay can be obtained, nothing is better for mulching, as it is always clean and free from weed seeds, is not easily blown off by the wind and after the bearing season can be dried and stored away for another year.—American Garden.

ORCHARD AND FRUIT GARDEN.

Indications point to an abundant fruit year, though the peach crop may be injured by late frosts, or a long, cold rain while the trees are in blossom may diminish the "set" of apples and pears. These disasters are likely to be local. In years of abundance, while common and poor fruit hardly pays its carriage to market, really fine fruit brings about the usual price. It is in such years that the grower, by care in producing fine specimens, and packing them in an attractive manner, finds fruit-growing profitable, while his indifferent neighbor declares that "fruit don't pay." To produce fine specimens the number borne by the tree must be reduced; this might have been done in the winter by pruning, but now the orchardist must rely upon thinning the fruit. If we give a single specimen the nourishment that would have been divided between three or four the result will be seen in the extra size and beauty of the one thus favored. In no fruit is there such a difference in price between the common and extra as in the peach, and it is a well established fact that with peaches thinning pays. It will also pay with pears, and especially early apples, to the production of which fruit-growers should give more attention.

Strawberries.—See that the pickers do not mix over-ripe berries with those to be sent to market. While the berries at the top of the basket may be turned to show the best side, the fruit should be the same all through.

Currants, when nearly full grown, in some markets, bring a higher price than when ripe. If green currants are marketed, thin the crop so that that which is left to ripen may be benefited.

Gooseberries are generally sold green. Look out for the worm on both these and currants, and use white hellebore, a tablespoonful of the powder in a pailful of water. Apply with a syringe or garden engine.

Tents which the insects pitch in the heads of trees, should be removed early in the morning. The hand, with or without a glove, is the best implement yet invented.

Grape-vines.—Tie up the young shoots. Pinch out the ends, leaving two or three leaves beyond the last bunch. Each shoot usually bears three clusters. If these are reduced to two, or even one, the fruit will be all the finer. The rose-bug is very destructive to the grape—shake it off in early morning, and catch in a pan in which is a little kerosene.—American Agriculturist.

ENCOURAGE THE BIRDS.

War is being waged by farmers against all birds except a few popular songsters, and most boys are taught that birds and birds' nests are their rightful prey. These little creatures do some damage, it must be admitted. They will pick up seed that has not been well covered, but that ought to teach the farmer to sow his seeds more carefully. They will feast upon the ripe grain, and sometimes destroy more than they eat; but the farmer seldom considers that he might not have had any grain to harvest were it not for these same feathered intruders. During the time between sowing and harvesting birds must live upon something besides grain, and I fancy that farmers seldom think that that something is principally insects and the eggs of insects. They rear their young on these, and one can hardly estimate the immense number of insects thus destroyed. Were it not for this safeguard that nature has kindly furnished us in the form of the feathered race, the world would, according to the best calculations, be completely overrun in a few years of uninterrupted propagation, with crawling, stinging pests. Birds have an important work to do, and we should aid them with all the means at our command; certainly we cannot afford to destroy our protectors. Every farmer should teach his children to cherish and protect their feathered friends. Encourage the birds, and children too, by building bird houses about the farm buildings. Teach the boys to build these houses, and thus serve two purposes at once—accustoming them to the use of tools and imbuing their minds with humane sentiments. Many a farm home knows naught of music but that which floats on the air from nature's own orchestra. Let us have all the sweet sounds we can, to soften and lighten our rural toils.—W. D. BOYNTON, in American Agriculturist.

IN BRIEF.

One hundred and twenty ocean-going steamers are now laid up on the Tyne and the Wear rivers and at Leith, in consequence of the depressed state of the shipping trade in England.

Hiram Sibley, who is erecting the great seed warehouse upon the river and Clark street, Chicago, has just made an additional donation of $80,000 to Cornell University.

Among the steerage passengers of the steamship Nevada were 318 Mormons. Half of these Mormons were English and Welsh and the other half Scandinavians. They were accompanied by seventeen Mormon missionaries returning home with the fruit of a two years' proselyting tour.

The Russian province Kostroma has received a bequest of four millions of dollars for a school fund from a merchant, who began his career as a very poor lad.

Eleven thousand dollars' worth of ink was used by the Post Office Department last year in stamping and cancelling letters. An economically disposed person thinks that if the government would permit cancelled stamps to be re-used, much of this expense might be saved; but the government never did go very strong on economy.

A farmer who raises a good many hogs attended a State fair in Ohio, and wrote the following letter back to his neighbor: Dear Friend: Yesterday I inspected the live stock department of the fair. You will be interested to know that the display of hogs was unusually large. Among the hogs I saw some of your breed, and was very much surprised at not seeing you there yourself.

Cincinnati is superstitiously interested in the case of a woman, who, falling asleep in a railroad train, dreamed vividly that her child at home had been seriously hurt. She was so deeply impressed by the vision that on arriving in the city she drove directly to a physician's office and carried him hastily to her residence, where the youngster was found to have been thrown from a swing at precisely the time that the mother had dreamed. The story is told circumstantially by the persons concerned.

Colonel Prejevalsky, a Russian explorer, who is making his second attempt to penetrate the dark and mysterious region of Thibet, with a strong escort of Cossacks and attendants, has safely passed the desert of Cobi, in spite of the curses of the Thibetans, who prayed heaven to rain down storms of stones upon the intrepid explorer and his companions. The summer is to be spent in exploring the country lying between Kuku-Nor to the north and Batang to the south. If Colonel Prejevalsky fails to penetrate into this mountainous region, he will then turn his attention to the Eastern part or the north Thibetan plateau.

The British are beginning in a vague way to realize the magnitude of India and to comprehend that it contains some fifty millions more people than all Europe west of the Vistula. Few, however, are quite aware of the number of its cities or believe that it includes sixty-two with more than 50,000 people, and twenty-two with more than 100,000, namely, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Hyderabad, Lucknow, Benares, Delhi, Patna, Agra, Bangalore, Umritser, Cawnpore, Lahore, Allahabad, Jeypore, Rangoon, Poona, Ahmedabad, Bareilly, Surat, Howra and Baroda. We give them in order of population; but properly speaking, in the British way of counting, Howra, the Southwark of Calcutta, should be included in the capital, which with it contains above 866,000 souls, and is the greatest, as it is by far the wealthiest, city in the Empire. Below the limit of 50,000 the towns become much more numerous, and there are hundreds with populations above 20,000. The majority of the latter are quite unknown to Europeans, an active magistrate or two excepted. So far as we are aware, there is no book in English which gives the slightest account of their organization, or of the life and people in them. Yet many of them have histories of two thousand years, and in all flourish families which think themselves noble and have long pedigrees and stirring tales to narrate. We hear every now and then much of Indian princes, who in India are hardly mentioned, and of "educated natives," a scarcely perceptible class, but of the true British India as little is known at home as of the eastern provinces of Peru.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—Congress did little last week, many of the members being in Chicago attending the Republication. As Edmunds. Logan, Sherman, Hawley and Harrison of the Senate were candidates for the nomination, that body lost its interest in business until the question was settled.

—In the Senate, Monday, with Messrs. Edmunds, Sherman, Logan, Hawley and Allison in their seats, the greatest day's work of the session was performed. Among the forty bills passed were those to bridge the Wisconsin, Chippewa and St. Croix rivers; making the cities of Tacoma and Seattle ports of delivery; for the relief of the Protestant Orphan Asylum at Natchez, and to enlarge to four ounces the newspaper limit of weight for penny postage to the general public.

COUNTRY.

—For playing base ball on Sunday at Green Bay, Wis., six men from the competing nines were arrested and held in small bail to the circuit court.

—In William Lethers' mine, near Dubuque, Iowa, a valuable lode of lead was struck Monday at a depth of eighty feet. Mr. Lethers is a Chicago commission merchant.

—A mass meeting to ratify the nomination of Butler and West was held at Joliet, Ill., Monday night. Workingmen, Greenbackers, Anti-monopolists, and Independent Democrats were out in force.

—Aaron Roger Crane, a Harvard Senior, the strongest man, and the best general athlete in college, was found dead in his room Wednesday. The inquest this afternoon shows that his death was due to heart disease, and was brought on by over-exertion in the gymnasium.

—A tornado funnel-cloud passed over Sycamore, Ill., Wednesday evening. Rain fell in torrents, and a few trees were leveled.

—The schedules of James D. Fish, ex-President of the New York Marine Bank, show $4,230,281 liabilities, while the actual value of his real and personal estate is estimated at but $582,594.

—The Palisade Mountain House, on the Hudson, ten miles above New York, burned Tuesday morning. Loss on building and furniture, $130,000; insurance, $100,000. The house was to be opened for the season next Saturday. Some twenty-five servants asleep in the upper stories had narrow escapes with their lives.

—Near Miss Nivison's Children's Sanitarium, at Hammonton, N. J., was found buried, Wednesday, the remains of twenty-one children, incased in rude pine boxes. Recently the death-rate in the institution, which is a purely charitable one, has been excessive, the manageress ascribing it to the use of Irish moss as food. The discovery caused much excitement, and the positions of the bodies showed that but a hasty interment was given the little victims. An inquest condemns Miss Nivison, and it is feared that investigation will show a fearful crime.

—The assignee's report of the condition of the Penn Bank of Pittsburg shows that $1,466,205 is due depositors, and that the overdrafts aggregate $1,250,954. Most of the directors withdrew their accounts on the day that the bank closed for the last time.

—John C. Eno, the defaulting and absconding president of the Second National Bank, was indicted by the grand jury for forgery in the second and third degrees. Eno is under arrest in Canada.

—President Riddle, of the insolvent Penn Bank, of Pittsburg, made a statement Monday to the effect that the directors were members of the oil pool, which wrecked the concern. The statement created intense excitement. Some of the directors made indignant denials, but Riddle states that the books, now in the assignee's hands, will substantiate his statements.

—The resumption of business by Fisk and Hatch, the New York bankers, has given much financial reassurance in that city.

—In the Cleveland Rolling Mills Monday, in tapping a vast caldron of molton iron, holding fifty tons, too large an orifice was made, and the seething fluid speedily covered the casting-room floor. All the employes escaped save two, who were compelled to wade through the hissing mass, which an explosion sent flying in all directions, stripping the men of their clothing, and literally cooking their flesh. Their injuries are fatal.

—Another rainstorm has swept through the eastern section of Texas, embracing an area as large as Illinois and Indiana. Crops have been washed out and railway tracks and bridges wrecked. Thousands of acres of wheat ready for harvesting have been prostrated, and cotton has been completely ruined. The Brazos, Trinity and Sabine rivers are swollen to an extent never before known, the former stream being out of its banks for a distance of 200 miles. The loss to agricultural interests will reach hundreds of thousands of dollars.

—The St. Louis municipal legislature has passed an ordinance giving permission for the construction of an elevated railroad from the western limits of the city to the centre, with branches to the northern and southern limits. A number of New York capitalists are concerned in the enterprise.

—Five hundred laborers employed by contractors in the construction of the South Pennsylvania railroad struck Thursday. They have assumed a threatening attitude. They got into a fight among themselves last evening and one man was killed. The contractors say they will employ Italian laborers instead of the strikers.

—Lieut. Rice, of the United States army, while asleep, walked off a train in motion near Mexico, Mo., Wednesday night, and was killed. He was a somnambulist.

—A strike of the Philadelphia and Camden (N. J.) shoemakers is threatened on account of the refusal of the manufacturers to advance the wages of the hand-sewers. The strike will affect 7,000 persons.

—Losses by fires in the United States during the first five months of the present year are estimated at $46,750,000. The losses for the month of May aggregated $9,200,000, being the largest for any May since 1875.

—For the second time in their history, the Reading railroad and the Reading Coal and Iron companies have passed into the hands of a board of receivers. The bill asking for the appointment of receivers was filed last week Monday by Henry C. Kelsey, secretary of state of New Jersey, and a director in the Jersey Central railroad company, one of the Reading's lines.

—For the year ended March 31 there were deposited in New Hampshire saving banks $43,000,000. The tax on the banks this year amounts to $415,000.

—A. N. Perrine of Hillsboro, Ill., was attacked by a swarm of bees near that town Thursday, his horse being stung to death and himself narrowly escaping.

—Gen. O. E. Babcock, who was Gen. Grant's private secretary, Col. Levy P. Lucky, who was his assistant at the time, and who has been his chief clerk, and B. P. Sutter, a resident of Washington, were drowned off the coast of Florida Monday, where they were superintending the construction of a lighthouse.

—Near Akron, Ohio, Saturday evening, the boarding-car of a gravel train jumped the track, the other cars piling on top. In the boarding-car were several Italians, seven of whom were shockingly mangled and others were slightly wounded.

—A bill was filed May 28th at St. Louis for the purpose of placing the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway in the hands of receivers and thus prevent a foreclosure under its mortgages. Judge Brewer, United States Circuit Judge for the Eastern District of Missouri, made an order appointing Solon Humphreys of New York, former president of the road, and James Tutt, of St. Louis, receivers, on filing a bond in $500,000.

FOREIGN.

—There was a violent earthquake May 19, on the island of Kishm, near the mouth of the Persian Gulf. Twelve villages were destroyed, two hundred persons killed, and many wounded. Kishm is the largest island in the Persian Gulf. The population is estimated at 7,000, chiefly Arabs.

—The French parliamentary committee of inquiry into the importation of American salted meats has agreed to make a report allowing such imports after the meat is minutely examined by microscope or otherwise. The report at the same time urges the prohibition of the importation of fresh meats from countries where it is known trichinosis exists.

—A dispatch from Odessa says the crops in that vicinity are suffering seriously from continued drought.

—The Commission of the German Reichstag has approved the bill for the insurance of working people against accidents.

—It is rumored at Cairo that the Mahdi has gone to Khartoum. His surrender is shortly expected.

—A group of Liberal members of Parliament have notified Gladstone of their intention to vote against the government if it surrenders to France or Europe the position England has won on the Nile.

—A train from Salisbury, England, was precipitated down an embankment on the 3d, at a point between Creamore and Downton. Five persons were killed and thirty injured.

—The car of a captive balloon at Lille, France, containing twenty persons, became detached, Sunday, June 1, and fell over a hundred feet. Three occupants of the car were killed, and the remainder severely injured. The car was built to carry only ten persons. The ascent was made to visit a horse race.

—The Nile is rising rapidly and it is expected that General Gordon's armed boats will now be able to drive the rebels from the banks above and below Khartoum, and open communication with Berber and Cairo. Indeed, it is rumored that the rebels have already withdrawn from around Shendy.

—A new Mahdi who is stated to have appeared in the Soudan, claims the power of becoming invisible at will. The story is told by the natives that the Mahdi sent soldiers to capture the new prophet, but when the soldiers had surrounded the divan in which he was sitting he suddenly vanished in the air.

It is a time of the turning of the hearts of the fathers to the children with fondness and pride. A thousand schools are closing, and a million young hearts are turning hopefully to the days of relaxation from study. No time is better to ask the attention of parents to the fact that the mere cultivation of intellect will not benefit the life, there must be united to it the education into right affections and principles of action, and when choice is made of academy or college next fall, let it be in favor of one where is taught that fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom.

Like priest, like people. Capel, the Romish proselyter has secured a convert—an excellent convert—one altogether worthy of himself. He has baptized into Romanism George Bliss, the politician and lawyer, whose notorious connection with President Arthur, when the latter was loosing his good name among the ward bummers of New York, is wholly surpassed by his management of the Star Route cases in Washington. While Bliss with one hand pocketed enormous fees from the government, with the other he was drawing up indictments which he knew were inadequate to the cases of Kellogg, Dorsey and the rest, and on which he no doubt intended they should escape a just punishment. If the late reports of Capel are true the two form an interesting couple to go through the forms of religion.

Masonic prints have of late been boasting of the patronage of several of the leading members in the reigning family of Germany, who are not only patrons but, like the Prince of Wales in England, at the head of the order. But last week the corner-stone of the new Parliament buildings was laid in Berlin and it does not appear that the favored lodge had the least part or lot in the performance, but was very unanimously snubbed. The presence of the notables of the Empire, the speech of the aged William, and the details of the ceremony give no place to the mighty men of Masonry. It is good to read that the Emperor spoke longingly for the prevalence of peace about the new hall of legislation.

The preparations for the Democratic nominating convention proceed in this city. The Exposition building is to be re-arranged so as to accommodate several thousand more spectators than were struck crazy with the enthusiasm over the name of Blaine. The Palmer House, which is Democratic headquarters, is preparing to entertain 3,500 guests. The local committee advertise tickets for sale at $25 each or ten for $500 in order to meet expenses. They do not promise, however, an entertainment that can be called an equivalent, and depend on party zeal for contributions. The letter of Tilden declining a nomination has unsettled many plans, and opens the door of hope for Bayard the Delaware Senator, Gov. Cleveland of New York, McDonald of Indiana, Carlisle of Kentucky and Payne of Ohio.

Sabbath desecration by base ball games becomes worse week by week. But as Sumner said of slavery, "The worse it gets, the better it gets;" for an end will come to it when it becomes intolerable. The action of the Green Bay, Wisconsin, authorities foreshadows that end. A committee of citizens warned the players but were disregarded, and an arrest followed of seven men by the sheriff, and on trial next day they were held to answer before the circuit court for violation of State law. Such measures foretoken the end. And it will be a heaven-sent blessing if the blow that destroys the defiance of Sabbath law and the peace of society shall also wreck the base ball league system with its gambling, betting and drinking associations.

☐The folly of workingmen in following their lodge leaders into strikes has had further illustration in the case of the spinners at Fall River, Mass., who have wasted much time and money and return to work at last only to find, many of them, their former places filled and employment not to be had even at reduced wages. The cigar-makers of New York also were ordered by their union to quit work, and 1,200 obeyed, although they had been treated exceptionally well by their employers, and were without any just grievance. They remained out four months, attempted boycotting, lost $150,000 in wages and consumed $18,000 of the union's funds, and then offered to return to work. But only 60 of them were taken back, the places of the remaining 1,140 having been filled by others.

A few weeks ago Prof. R. T. Greener of Washington, a colored man, made a public attack upon Hon. Frederick Douglass, to which the latter replied, denying the charges one and all. The reason of Greener's action has not been given, but some surmised the marriage of Douglass must explain it, as that step was resented by the colored people with some bitterness, and the papers construed the colored prejudice to be fatal to Mr. Douglass' long and deserved popularity, insomuch that they published him as out of society and politics. But there was a deeper reason and darker. Mr. Douglass was in Chicago at the Republican convention and was everywhere received with his wife with esteem and popular favor. His name was among the few called out for a speech during the intervals when convention business lagged, and made the leading address at a great meeting of the colored people the evening before the convention met. He was neither out of society or politics on account of his marriage. But he had spoken in the American convention in Washington and taken part with men opposed to the lodge giving them the benefit of his influence and testimony. Greener, on the other hand, appeared as thirty-three degree Mason, along with R. B. Elliott of South Carolina and J. H. Lewis of New Orleans, of the same lodge rank, in a banquet given by the "Grand Consistory of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," thirty-second degree, colored Masons, in this city during the convention. The colored delegates were the guests of the lodge and Greener among the most honored. This explains why Douglass was villified.

Gen. Swaim, the Judge Advocate General of the army, will be tried by court-martial. Secretary Lincoln and the President realize that the charges found by the board of inquiry are too serious to be put aside. The report says: "The court is of the opinion that, while it is not prepared to say that any specific act developed by the evidence is actually fraudulent, yet the evidence does show a series of transactions discreditable to any officer of the army and which especially demands the severest condemnation when engaged in by an officer holding the high position and peculiar relations to the administration of justice held by Brigadier-General Swaim." The transactions referred to are the gambling habits of Swaim and his associate Morrow. This investigation has brought to light many disagreeable facts respecting our army officers. Gen. Drum says their gambling is the curse of the army and all the stealing by duplicated pay accounts and defalcations could be attributed to that evil. A bill was some years ago presented in Congress against the evil, but did not pass. The peculiar and responsible position of Swaim makes his sin more odious, as his duties add to the work of an attorney general in civil courts, the judicial function of reviewing the proceedings of military courts. As Swaim is a high Mason he may have a Star-Route indictment fixed up for him.

The North American Review published not long ago an article that should have the attention of every true American. The writer showed how the second nomination of Abraham Lincoln hinged on one or two speeches before the national meeting of the Union League and how the action of the nominating convention was simply a ratification of the resolution of that secret lodge. Its decision was right, but it might have been wrong, and was nearly made so by political managers. But right or wrong it was a desperate day for our country when such issues lay in the power of an irresponsible and secret society. The same attempt at President-making was nearly made at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Union League in this city during the Republican convention. A member was about to make a motion endorsing Gen. Logan for the Presidency, but on consulting he found a majority of the committee against him. The Illinois members of this committee are all but one Masons or Odd-fellows or both. Among the other secret orders that are openly taking part in the campaign is the Grand Lodge of Orangemen. The report that the order would oppose Blaine is officially denied.

THE GOSPEL OF "I DON'T KNOW."

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

It seems to be the tendency of the human mind to go from one extreme to the other. The movements of history are like the oscillations of a tremendous pendulum, that no sooner descends one arc, than with equal energy it rises on the other. There was a time, when in religious matters, men claimed to know everything. To-day with equal unreasoning vehemence he declares that he knows nothing.

I have carefully read the Five Points, and the Seven Points, that separated the Netherlanders in the days of Maurice of Nassau and Barneveldt, and can scarcely see a footing for an honest difference. Yet the whole people were arrayed in two hostile camps, and after just passing through the fires of a forty years' war, and at the very moment when their old enemy was gathering his strength to make a new assault. For hair-splitting differences in theological controversy, these Christians were furnishing a spectacle of party rancour and discord that must have moved the very fiends to laughter. There were no infidels in those days, oh no! Every tailor and cobbler was a learned theologian, a master of the purposes and decrees of God; knew he was right, and was determined that no means known to persuasion or force should be neglected to save others, by the same truth.

A little later we see the same sad spectacle in our own mother Britain. What rational difference was there between the Independents and Presbyterians in the days of Cromwell? And yet it was their insane hostility that destroyed the Commonwealth and delivered Britain over to the tender mercies of the Stuarts.

But it must ever be better to believe something, even when that belief is mixed with a good deal of error and incased in the iron coat of intolerance, than to believe nothing. These very days of religious intolerance and fanaticism, were the mothers of our present liberty and civilization; for looking back through the gloom and fire of that eventful period, we can all see the grand proportions of the temple of liberty looming up in its wonderous beauty before the world. Now, however, there is a large class of educated men with a very considerable following from the common people—who do not know there is a God or heaven, and is pretty sure there is no hell. It must be admitted this is ingenious, it is a position much more easily taken to say I don't know, than to say I know there is not. Yet the fatal results on individual character and social life must be the same. But is their position tenable? Paul says, "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse." But as they do not know that there ever was a Paul, and if there was, do not know if there was any scientific bases for his statements, anything that he has said can have but little weight. Yet if what Paul has said be true, the existence and power of God must be facts, not only fairly, but plainly deducible from his creation.

If it were to be asked how they knew that two and two made four, these gentlemen would probably promptly reply, that the whole must be equal to the sum of its parts, and that this reason must be sufficient, because it was a self-evident fact that commended itself to every man's mind; very well, we admit it. But is it not an equal self-evident fact, that nothing could not create something, and that the Creator must be even greater than the thing created. It would seem that these statements are as self-evident as any axiom in Euclid, and yet they lead us directly to God, not a visionary abstraction, an impalpable First Cause, but an individual and governing intelligence, for if this something that is the Creator, be greater than his greatest creation, then as mind is greater than matter, or if the scientists must have their way, if it be matter most highly developed, then still the mind of the Creator must be superior to all other minds in the wide universe of his works. But mind in its higher developments has ever acknowledged the validity of moral laws. There exists no happy and prosperous community whose laws were not made by the superior minds; and "He who stretched the north over the empty space and hung the earth upon nothing" must of necessity, either to prevent chaos or out of chaos to evolve order, have stamped both upon mind and matter the impress of his divine law.

What then must be the mind of God? Superior to that of all human intelligence as the great light of the sun is to the feeble flickerings of the smallest star But a creative, governing, and reasoning intelligence, constitutes an individual—and behold God. Not his love, mercy and forgiveness—these are only fully revealed in the Scriptures and by Christ—but all that Paul said, "even his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse."

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—Believeth thou this?

MY BRETHREN:—When one is standing by the cold, gaping grave, in which his nearest friend is about to be laid away to return to dust, does not the question always occur to him whether it can be possible that such is the end-all and the be-all of one that he had loved so warmly here? Is man but mere animated dust without a soul? Does not the Master always meet one at the grave and question him closely as to his belief? And what other answer can come from the trembling lips but this—"Yea, Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world?" What other moment in human affairs could so appeal to human dignity, or could be more solemn and sacred than this?

There, at the grave of his friend stood the Master. Nature around was doubtless smiling as brightly as it ever smiles; the hills of Bethany looked on with silent, eternal serenity; the sisters and friends of the dead stood weeping, while professional mourners, following the custom learned in Egypt, were going through their artificial, heartless mockery of woe. The corpse had been dead four days, and corruption of the flesh had already set in; but to the voice of the Master the dead came forth, and walked once more a living spirit.

My friends, believest thou this? Or will you go with a set of men claiming to belong to "the most moral institution that ever subsisted," who teach slyly, and clandestinely in the dark that one Hiram Abiff, a Phœnician, and doubtless, therefore, a worshiper of Venus, was murdered by his enemies for keeping a secret, or something of the kind; that he was secretly buried but was accidently discovered by the token of a shrub whose name meant innocence, growing at his feet, or head; that he had been dead not only four days but even fourteen days when found; that he was dug up and prayed over by his friends as the son of a widow; that the Master of a lodge was finally brought forward to try the virtue of his own power, all other means having failed, and in response to this Masonic Master's strong, lion-like grip the dead arose upon his feet and was restored to life?

This infidel sarcasm on the Christian belief of the resurrection is enacted over and over again by a set of men often made up of rumsellers, whoremasters, ministers of the Gospel, bank thieves, horse jockies, Jews, etc., every time a young American is cajoled or intimidated into the third degree of Freemasonry. There can be but one impression left by this scene upon a candid mind of ordinary intelligence, and that is the original contrivers of it designed to bring a secret contempt upon the Christian faith in the resurrection of our Lord, and that it must chill, even if it does not entirely destroy, the religious fervor of Christian faith of every one who becomes subject to it. The initiate becomes suddenly so perverted that he would not be ashamed to confess Hiram Abiff before the lodge; but he would not venture to confess Christ there; and if not there, where else would he confess him except as a show for policy's sake? He might, indeed, bear a figure of the cross upon a sword-hilt, or on a gauntlet, or some such place, but no where else; not upon the heart, surely.

My brethren, the men who practice the infidel blasphemy of resurrecting Hiram Abiff, rule this Christian country; and men who thus despise your religion will despise you and your interests. It is your interest that truth, justice and mercy should prevail; but under the rule of the lodge these great interests are rendered impossible. The men who make a mockery of our Lord will not hesitate to make a mockery of the virtues which he died to establish. Men who trifle with the sacred oaths and sanctions of your religion will not fail to trifle with your interests whenever they are left alone in the dark with them. The interests of republican government are hardly less sacred than those of humanity; and the higher interests of humanity can be served only by the Christian religion. They who make an indecent mockery of that religion ought never to be invested with the powers of political office. SO MOTE IT BE!

"MOSES' HANDS WERE HEAVY."

The people of God were engaged in a most fearful conflict. The question in dispute was God or Satan supreme. Sin or holiness to rule. Eternal life, or eternal death to triumph.

Israel led by Joshua devoted to God and holiness and eternal life, fought as they were filled with the Holy Spirit. The resolute determination to conquer in the name and by the power of God, the consecration of every power of soul and body to the battle depended upon their being infused by the Holy Spirit with a clear knowledge and full appreciation of the question in dispute, God supreme; holiness to rule the world. Eternal life to flow without obstruction to a perishing world.

Amalek, inspired by sin and Satan was desperate and determined; fought fearfully. He was bound to conquer. Hatred to God, to holiness, and eternal life inspired him. He was resolved on victory or to die in the effort, and O, how he fought. The battle wavered. The carnage was terrible. The result was doubtful. Sometime Amalek prevailed. It seemed that victory must be his. Israel would shrink before his terrible assaults. And when all seemed lost, a divine afflatus would come upon Israel and fill them with irresistible power. It was God, supreme holiness to rule, eternal life to flow for which they fought, and O! how they fought! Nothing could stand before them. The struggle lasted the whole day. It was not a skirmish, it was a battle. It was not decided in a moment. It took the whole day. Victory seemed trembling in the balance. Now Amalek was in the ascendant, and was flush with the prospect of victory. Then Israel inspired by an unseen power turned back his cohorts and carried devastation into his ranks.

Though the struggle was long and fearful, and varying, it had an end. A glorious victory was given to Israel, and Amalek was conquered, wholly subdued, and God and holiness and eternal life triumphed. What was the secret of this wonderful victory? What element of power was at work and decided the result of this dreadful battle? What gave victory to the question of God supreme, holiness to rule and eternal life to flow.

It was answer to prayer.

The whole weight of the battle lay on Moses' hands, for "Moses' hands were heavy." What a weight there was upon them. The glory of God, the destruction of sin and the eternal life of men rested upon Moses' hands; and well they might be heavy. He could not hold them up alone, and the good and true Aaron and Hur stood by him and lifted at his heavy hands and kept them extended high in mighty prayer until the glorious answer to victory was given.

The same battle is raging on now. Is Moses planted on the rock of ages the Lord Jesus? Are Joshua and the people of God on the field of battle? Are the Aarons and Hurs all over this land holding up the hands of Moses in mighty prayer? If not, Amalek will prevail. If they are, Israel will prevail and victory will be given to the people of God.

AN OLD SOLDIER.

JOHN WYCLIFFE.

BY PROF. A. B. HYDE, D.D.

Wycliffe! Now half a thousand years are sped
Since to the music of our English tongue
Thy thin white fingers cunningly did wed
What holy men of old have said or sung!

First Protestant! First scholar for the poor!
The first to tell in modern, fireside speech
To homely folk in their own cottage door
What living truths those sacred lips did teach.

As swims into the sky the early star
To lead from shades the brightness of the day,
So through the centuries thou art seen afar,
Clear, when our dawn was misty, cold and gray.

Hard was thy task, O scholar, struggling on
Against the bitter hate of monk and priest,
Worried and sick; and yet thy work, full done,
Still follows thee now entered into rest.

Bend from thy rest, if it be given, O saint!
Pale, worn and baffled in thy toil no more.
Hark! how thy language, tuneful, clear and quaint,
Tells the glad tidings upon every shore.

What though thine ashes in their feeble wrath
Thy foes upon the wandering waters flung?
The waters, conscious, smoothed for them a path
O'er all the tides where lands and isles have sprung.

And when thy work's millennium shall be,
Can that millennium yet linger long
When o'er all nations Truth hath victory,
And Peace lifts up her sweet and endless song?

—Zion's Herald.

AN ARTICLE FOR YOUNG MEN.

[Mr. E. F. Cragin's large Bible Class of young men in the Chicago Avenue Sabbath-school publish a small monthly, to which they lately asked Pres. C. A. Blanchard to contribute an article on secret societies. He responded with the following:]

Secret organizations in a country like this and a time like the present are needless. Every good end may be openly proposed, advocated and carried into effect. To bury friends, to feed orphans or provide shelter for the homeless, to do these or other like acts requires no secrecy. It is also to be observed that when secret societies are doing work of this kind they take pains to make it as generally known as possible. Brass bands, orations, papers and books celebrate all the (so-called) charity of the lodges. The oaths, ceremonies, penalties, and plans of aggrandizement are the secrets of these fraternities.

Being needed for no good end, they are in their very nature adapted to evil purposes. If men should desire to combine for any unlawful purpose a secret organization would be necessary. Plans to overthrow government, defy law, protect criminals or commit crime would be powerless unless secret. It is not affirmed that Masonry, Odd-fellowship and other like societies are used for such purposes, but it is claimed that they may be and that there is danger that they will be. If an organization is needless and ill adapted to good ends and is at the same time well adapted to evil purposes there is danger that it may be used for these evil purposes.

A third fact which requires the attention of all Christians is, that God has established three institutions on earth: The family, the church, and the state. All men are by birth members of the family and citizens of the state and all men should become members of the church. All the time, money, and strength of a Christian man, belongs to these three divine institutions. Secret societies are not divine in origin. The Lord Jesus never established a society to be composed of good and bad men, bound together by oaths and using grips, signs, pass-words and tokens. If this be true then the millions of dollars collected every year by these lodges and spent in uniforms, dances, banquets and liquors is so much taken away from the organizations which God has ordained. The time spent on them is misspent and the strength used in their maintenance is taken from the work to which the law of God assigns it.

We conclude this article by saying that while we can see how unconverted men can unite with and sustain such societies for social, political and business reasons, it seems clear that all Christians should nave no fellowship with secret organizations, but should on the contrary oppose them as hostile to that Saviour who spake openly to the world and in secret said nothing.

FOR THESE THINGS IS SECRETISM RESPONSIBLE.

[The Herald of Life prints the following powerful article from J. C. Day in response to the question: "Can a Christian be justified by the Bible in joining or belonging to any secret society, as the Odd-fellows, Masons, etc.?"]

"They have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger." (Ezek. 8: 18.) This is the last count in the grand indictment of the secret false worship which Ezekiel saw in the hole in the wall. Please read the chapter. Human nature has not changed, nor has the nature and influence of secret combinations. Some more than half a century ago the people of these United States were shocked at the murder of Wm. Morgan by the Freemasons. The committee chosen by the Senate of the State of New York reported that, "It has been fully established by the testimony in the various trials that have been had, that a great number of Masons have been concerned in the abduction and subsequent fate of Morgan." But notwithstanding the publicity of this transaction, still no record tells us whose hands have been stained with the blood of this Masonic victim. This illustrates the spirit, power and tendency of an oath-bound secret order. But this was but a single instance of murder. To-day they have filled the land with violence and murder. Explosions and assassinations are of almost daily occurrence. All over Europe this malign power threatens the life of rulers, the stability of governments and the peace of society. Nihilism, Socialism, Fenianism and every other ism owe all their power to their sworn secrecy, and they plot and execute their assassinations in spite of the powers of the strongest governments in the world. How to suppress them and to make legitimate government the paramount authority is the great European problem of to-day. Nor is the evil in our own land less real, or the danger less manifest. In all our mining and manufacturing districts, in all places where large numbers are employed, assassinations, murders and unlawful combinations of various kinds are increasingly frequent and of almost daily occurrence. Innocent workmen are waylaid and shot; a negro's house is blown up, and himself, wife and little children are killed, police officers and military men are fired upon, and death is the result. This is only a specimen of the terrorism which the secret trades-unions exercise over the laboring people. There is seemingly nothing more innocent and appropriate than a trades-union. Men of common craft meet for mutual instruction and aid. Such was the origin of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship. It was simply an operative art. Secrecy becomes the leading factor, and secures immunity from public criticism and a large measure of irresponsible power. Until human nature is essentially different its possession will be characterized often by the exercise of unbridled despotism and malignant wickedness. The sources of evil in all instances are the same. It is in the irresponsible power of secret combinations; and the remedy is not in joining, but in suppressing, these combinations. History continually repeats itself. Ezekiel's vision is substantially enacted in every Masonic lodge, and Christless worship and irresponsible combinations do and will bring forth the same results.

They have already filled the land with violence, and national and domestic safety demand their suppression, which can never take place until Christ comes to take his throne and kingdom, and institute a righteous, peaceful reign for all his subjects. What! shall a Christian become a pagan? shall a Christian become identified with the worshipers of Baal? What concord hath Christ with Belial? "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord." It is the tares that are first to be bound in bundles just before Christ comes to gather his wheat in the garner. Truth seeks the light, while error loves the darkness.

Men slay the prophets; fagot, rack and cross
Make up the groaning record of the past;
But evil's triumphs are her endless loss,
And sovereign beauty wins the soul at last.
—James Russell Lowell.

There is no harm, says Sir Walter Scott, but, on the contrary, benefit in presenting a child with ideas beyond his easy and immediate comprehension. The difficulties offered—if not too great or too frequent—stimulate curiosity and encourage exertion.

READINGS FROM RUSKIN.

JUSTICE.

Men are enlisted for the labor that kills—the labor of war: they are counted, trained, fed, dressed and praised for that. Let them be enlisted also for the labor that feeds: let them be counted, trained, fed, dressed, praised for that. Teach the plow exercise as carefully as you do the sword exercise, and let the officers of troops of life he held as much gentlemen as the officers of troops of death; and all is done; but neither this nor any other right thing can be accomplished—you can't even see your way to it—unless, first of all, both servant and master are resolved that, come what will of it they will do each other justice. People are perpetually squabbling about what will be best to do, or easiest to do, or advisablest to do, or profitablest to do; but they never, so far as I hear them talk, even ask what it is just to do; and it is the law of heaven that you shall not be able to judge what is wise or easy, unless you are first resolved to judge what is just, and to do it. This is the one thing constantly reiterated by our Master—the order of all others that is given oftenest—"Do justice and judgment." That's your Bible order; that's the "service of God." . . . .

The one divine work—the one ordered sacrifice—is to do justice; and it is the last we are ever inclined to do. Anything rather than that! As much charity as you choose, but no justice. "Nay," you will say, "charity is greater than justice." Yes, it is greater; it is the summit of justice—it is the temple of which justice is the foundation. But you can't have the top without the bottom; you cannot build upon charity. You must build upon justice; for this main reason, that you have not, at first, charity to build with. It is the last reward of good work. Do justice to your brother (you can do that, whether you love him or not), and you will come to love him. But do injustice to him because you don't love him, and you will come to hate him. It is all very fine to think you can build upon charity to begin with, but you will find all you have got to begin with, begins at home, and is essentially love of yourself.

You well-to-do people, for instance, who are here to-night, will go to 'Divine service' next Sunday, all nice and tidy, and your little children will have their tight little Sunday boots on, and lovely little Sunday feathers in their hats; and you'll think, complacently and piously, how lovely they look! So they do; and you love them heartily, and you like sticking feathers in their hats. That's all right; that is charity, but it is charity beginning at home. Then you will come to the poor little crossing-sweeper, got up also—it, in its Sunday dress—the dirtiest rags it has—that it may beg the better; we shall give it a penny and think how good we are. That's charity going abroad. But what does Justice say, walking and watching near us? Christian Justice has been strangely mute and seemingly blind; and, if not blind, decrepit, this many a day; she keeps her accounts still, however—quite steadily—doing them at nights, carefully, with her bandage off, and through acutest spectacles (the only modern scientific invention she cares about). You must put your ear down ever so close to her lips to hear her speak; and then you will start at what she first whispers, for it will certainly be, "Why shouldn't that little crossing-sweeper have a feather on its head as well as your own child?" Then you may ask Justice in an amazed manner, "How she can possibly be so foolish as to think children could sweep crossings with feathers on their heads?" Then you stoop again, and Justice says—still in her dull, stupid way—"Then, why don't you, every other Sunday, leave your child to sweep the crossing, and take the little sweeper to church in a hat and feather?" Mercy on us (you think), what will she say next? And you answer, of course, that "you don't, because everybody ought to remain content in the position in which Providence has placed them." Ah, my friends, that's the gist of the whole question. Did Providence put them in that position, or did you? You knock a man into a ditch, and then you tell him to remain content in the "position in which Providence has placed him." That's modern Christianity. You say—"We did not knock him into the ditch." How do you know what you have done, or are doing? That's just what we have all got to know, and what we shall never know, until the question with us every morning is, not how to do the gainful thing, but how to do the just thing; nor until we are at least so far on the way to being Christian, as to have understood that maxim of the poor half-way Mahometan, "One hour in the execution of justice is worth seventy years of prayer."

FROM OUR NEIGHBORS' GARDENS.

Two seceding Masons denounced the lodge at a large Advent camp-meeting in New Hampshire, and other Masons visited the speakers to inquire how they might honorably leave their lodges.—Free Methodist.

I am well pleased with our position on the secret society question. Any organization that will ignore the name of Jesus in their lodge-prayer should make no claim to the Christian church. "He that denieth me before men, him will I deny before my Father, and before his angels." I have been free from a desire to unite with any secret, oath-bound order since the abduction and murder of William Morgan in 1826, and was much confirmed in my freedom by the mysterious disappearing of the Rev. Ensign P. Hill from the itinerant ranks of our annual conference. He had been a Mason of three degrees, and being convinced of the evils of Masonry seceded, wrote a revelation of Masonry as far as he had gone in it; then took his manuscript, his horse and buggy, and left his family to go a few miles to make an arrangement to have it published. and was never heard of afterwards, neither by his family nor by the Allegheny annual conference. I heard his name called two successive years at the roll-call of the conference; but no answer and no information, either from the members of the conference, or from his bereaved family. What is the rational conclusion?

This secret, with all others of like character, shall be fully revealed when God shall judge the secrets of men, by him whose name has been ignored in the lodge-prayer. —Thos. W. Stephens, in Wesleyan Methodist.

In a college where some excitement prevailed in respect to secret societies—"fraternities," they are euphemistically called—it became noticeable that as young men connected themselves with them and were absorbed by them, they lost their interest in other better things to which they had given attention. Boys who carried to college the practices of their early homes attended church and the prayer-meetings and seemed hearty in their interest in religion, but so soon as they leagued themselves with the college guilds these commendable practices and dispositions were given up. The societies absorbed them. They seemed, also, to feel that they had backsliden from their faith and former good habits and cut off from previous obligations. It might be hoped that this, along with other youthful ways, would be overcome, and that the subsequent life would, after all, be free from so unhappy a perversion. Sometimes this is the case, but usually the taste for such affiliations, having been stimulated and indulged in college, it increases afterwards, and instead of the Church and religion claiming the man, he is nothing better than a devotee of the lodge. Colleges cannot do a better thing than to rigorously prohibit these means of youthful perversion. —United Presbyterian.

As for Mr. Butler, the would-be President, the contradictions in his character and conduct would take a Dickens or a Hugo to describe, but, generally, we may say, he is a successful lawyer of the unscrupulous kind, and a demagogue of the first water. His war record, however, is much to his credit, and his protection of fugitive negroes under the ingenious name of contrabands, was a master-stroke, as also was his government of New Orleans; and he has a keen scent after time-honored abuses. His views of the currency question, if reduced to practice, would convulse the nation, and his Jack Cade-like promises to laboring men would fail if brought to actual trial. Nevertheless, the Greenback and Labor party, especially the latter, could make him President if the Democratic party should nominate him. And then he could cry, like Louis XV., "After me the deluge." We may add that Ben Butler was an object of far greater interest to the crowds on Broadway than either President Arthur or ex-President Grant.—N. Y. Witness.

Rev. Mr. Shaw, of Madagascar celebrity, writes that the British nation sends with one hand missionaries and Bibles to its people, and with the other introduces into the country that which crushes out the moral and religious life of the natives. Ten thousand barrels of rum are imported in one year on the east coast at so cheap a duty as to be retailed at twelve cents per quart. Frequently at sundown whole villages are drunk, and even little children stagger around.

The Bishop's address to the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, now in session in Philadelphia, contained the following paragraph on temperance: "On the great moral questions of the day the tone of our periodicals has been earnest and uniform. Especially have we been gratified with the fact that in all parts of the church our ministry and membership, with scarcely an exception, have been firm and aggressive in their devotion to the cause of temperance."

Professor Scott, of Chicago, who has had extensive opportunity for observation in Germany, is reported as saying: "Germany is probably sinking in crime and immorality more rapidly than any other nation in Europe. In some of the cities half the births are illegitimate. In ten years saloons have increased by 50 per cent, and the people are fast becoming sodden with their beer drinking."

Dr. Livingstone testifies in the following words: "I have acted on the principles of total abstinence from all alcoholic liquors during more than twenty years. My individual opinion is, that the most severe labors or privations may be undergone without alcoholic stimulants, because those of us who have endured the most bad nothing else than water, and not always enough of that."

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

REMARKS OF J. BLANCHARD TO HIS NEIGHBORS IN WHEATON, ILL. REPEATED BY GENERAL REQUEST, TO THE NATIONAL NOMINATING CONVENTION, FARWELL HALL, CHICAGO, JUNE 19, '84.

FELLOW CITIZENS:—We are in the quadrennial whirlpool of American politics. Three national nominating conventions have already been held—Anti-monopolist, Greenback and Republican. The first two represented some thirty States. The Republican convention represented all the forty-eight States and Territories. The American convention now present is the fourth. The Democrats meet in Chicago July 8th, and the Prohibitionists in Pittsburg, July 23d. Let us descend into this whirlpool and see if we can find rock.

Four of these six parties strike at great and manifest public evils. The Anti-monopolists denounce class legislation, and oppressions of labor by capital The Greenbackers condemn two sorts of money, gold-gambling and bank-dictation of legislation. The Prohibitionists antagonize the liquor crime, with its brood of unmixed sorrows, sufferings and crimes: while the American party condemns and resists all the wrongs opposed by the Greenbacker, Anti-monopolist and Prohibitionist, with two fundamental additions, viz.: we insist that ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the Bible is its standard of law and morals; and we object to those secret, heathen substitutes for true religion and government which suck out the life from and undermine all religion and government but themselves.

Freemasonry is the modern mother and type of this organized secretism. As a system, changing its names and shapes, it has come down from Egypt, before the date of the pyramids, to the United States and the present day and hour. And the secrets of these mysteries, as our Saviour said they should be, are all known and come abroad; that is, are secrets no longer.

As Charles G. Finney, the saint and evangelist of his age, is so well known in Europe and America that a man who should question his veracity would only discredit his own, we make our statements concerning Masonry on his authority and that of a multitude of holy and upright men who stand with him, thousands of whom have quit the lodges and testified against them, and all agree in their revelation of the thing itself. They give us, among others, the following facts:

1. That every Mason has sworn twenty-eight oaths in the face of Christ who forbids all such swearing.

2. All Masons swear to conceal each other's crimes; all but "murder and treason" in the third, and all, without exception, in the seventh degree.

3. The lodge swears husbands to life-long concealment from their wives and children; and

4. The lodge packs its members in layers, or degrees, the upper sworn to conceal from the lower and the lower sworn to obey the higher, and all sworn to concealment from the outward world. And this constitution is copied more or less closely by all the secret orders, which are children of the Masonic lodge; a constitution so dark, despotic and vicious that it would turn angels into devils, if they should accept and practice it. And the history of the lodge is as revolting as its constitution.

Against this system the American party presents the protest of its platform; and insists that its charters, given by Congress, shall be withdrawn and its oaths prohibited; and we take this case to the American people, who, we believe, never consented to those charters and never intended to. The craft came to Congress when the war was raging, when eleven States had seceded from the Senate, and that body was weak and wished to conciliate the Masons of the District. And the good Senator Grimes, chairman of the District committee, himself an Anti-mason, allowed the charters of the ten lodges of the District of Columbia to be smuggled through, as a simple joint stock company to own and rent a "hall." Senator Grimes disowned the authorship of the bill; said that he was not himself a Mason; that he did not understand the lodge, but that Masons had drawn up the bill as it stood. That bill makes each lodge in the District, and all hereafter formed there, sub-corporations. It thus, while seeming to create a single corporation, incorporates ten or more sub-corporations and incorporates lodges not yet in existence down to the end of time. Thus those very lodges whose halls were council chambers of treason and secession in our hour of weakness obtained fraudulent charters from the government they sought to destroy!

The American party insists on the repeal of those charters because they were unfit to be made; because they were obtained by fraud, as the face of the bill shows; because those lodges initiated the rebel general and Masonic Sovereign Grand Commander Pike's Indians to scalp our troops at Pea Ridge. Those Indians would not fight against the flag that sheltered and the government that had fed them, till sworn by blood-curdling oaths to obey their Masonic superiors; and sworn, too, at our seat of government, of which their ignorance might deem the lodges to be a part.

The American party insists that those charters shall be withdrawn; not merely because a bad use has been made of them; not only because rebellion and secession were taught in their lodge-rooms, but because the lodge is itself treason and rebellion, undermining religion by counterfeit worships, and justice by counterfeit oaths.

Some of the reasons are thus apparent why we cannot vote and act with any political party but the American in the impending election, though we are in accord with their principles of reform. We concede the patriotism of their motives, and are proud of some of their candidates; but we cannot go with them as yoked with the lodges which, in theory and practice, tramples on every American principle.

The other five parties, all of them, include members of secret lodges, with whom they cannot act as equals, but only as serfs act with lords. When their open conventions adjourn, their secret lodge wings retire behind tyled doors and consult under oaths of secrecy. Such political parties, like the legs of the lame, are not equal. We are Americans, equals before the law. We cannot act with such parties. The bearing of these secret "orders" on the laboring classes are simply disastrous. In the Washington City Directory there are 190 secret orders, and they are almost wholly sustained by laborers and men of small means, who pay their lodge dues though families and churches starve.

But are not some distinguished statesmen non-Masons? Yes; but the lodges will support no non-Mason who does not practice mean and man-degrading compliances, as outside supporters of the lodge. Bishop Simpson never joined a secret society, not even the Sons of Temperance; and the reasons which have kept him out should have kept out others. But he never objects to others joining lodges. There are fourteen large Methodist churches in the city of Washington, and thirteen of their pastors were, last winter, Masons. Bishop Simpson, being there, was applied to for his moral aid against the lodge. He replied: "I allow others to follow their own judgment," and gave no word or hint against Masonry, though his word would doubtless keep thousands of preachers out of it.

Mr. Blaine, we were rejoiced to learn from his private secretary who was himself a Mason, never joined the lodge. But would the Pacific coast, where doctors of divinity preach Masonry to crowds, and where witnesses in courts refuse to testify against Masons, and are let off, would that coast shout for Mr. Blaine if he should give the public his reasons for not joining the lodge? Nay! would lodge men shout for him if they were not secretly assured of his favor? Why do not these gentlemen join the lodge? They have powerful motives to join it, if it is right. But if the sainted Finney tells the truth, and the lodge is destroying the country and these gentlemen know it, why do they, like the "lawyers" whom Christ condemned, "take away the key of knowledge" from the people?

But there are many other reasons besides the lodge why we cannot join either of the five political parties beside the American.

Unlike the first Declaration of American principles written by Jefferson, which contains four distinct recognitions of God, these parties, except the Ohio Prohibitionists, in their platforms wholly ignore God, morals and religion; whereas the first majority constitution ever written, that adopted off Cape Cod (December, 1620,) and which is to the American system what the unit is to the system of arithmetic, begins, "In the name of God. Amen." By the absence of God, morals, and religion from our party platforms, our Presidential elections have become one-half as demoralizing as war; and the Ten Commandments are becoming obsolete, like laws never cited in courts. In every Presidential canvass every moral cause declines, and drinking, swearing, Sabbath-breaking, and other crimes and vices lift up their heads.

This is particularly inexcusable in the Republican party, which began in an appeal to God in behalf of the slave, and which fasted and prayed to God at the request of President Lincoln in the dark hours of the war.

The parties which profess to champion labor and laborers are far worse. They excite the poor against the rich. Some of them denounce interest as usury, and treat property as a crime, and a few hint dynamite and justify assassination. While they clamor for human rights for themselves, men like Brick Pomeroy and the "sand lotters" have outraged the colored people, Indians, and the patient, laboring Chinese.

These professed apostles of labor assume to dictate to the farmer that his hired man shall work only eight hours a day in haying and harvest, the same as in the short days of winter. They demand week-day leisure for the laborer to visit the saloon, and they deprive him of his Sabbath by resisting all laws securing him the privilege of taking his family to worship his God and greet his neighbors. They demand a division of the land, so that each laborer may "sit under his own vine and fig-tree," while they demand "personal liberty" to leave both farm and fig tree and sit around beer tables in groggeries. These same would-be apostles of labor have filled the land with secret oath-bound trades-unions, run by men who never harden their hands with work, and their ideas of "free labor" are expressed in their motto: "Kill the man who takes your job when you have quit it to get higher wages!" Gen. Weaver and his labor apostles have nominated Benjamin F. Butler as their leader, who is a Mason of thirty-three degrees, and whose first act as a general, after reaching the South, was to offer his command to help Masonic rebel slave-holders, against quiet, loyal blacks, who made a large fortune confiscating cotton in the war, and who now leases his huge stone house on Capitol Hill, Washington, to the government at an enormous rent. There was a time when I had some respect for Gen. Weaver, but no man can be trusted whose political life is full of gross and glaring contradictions; who denounces "rings and monopolies," yet who nominates and votes for the candidate of lodge-and-liquor, the two worst monopolies on earth, always excepting that fearful monopoly which has seized and now runs the holy Catholic Church.

Parties who ignore God and moral goodness, while struggling in a minority against real evils, may think themselves sincere, but once in power they will trample on the very men whose votes elevated them.

"But why not carry prohibition first and then look after the lodge?"

The answer is, because leading Prohibitionists, as R. H. McDonald, the California Prohibitionist candidate for governor, are Freemasons, and defenders of the lodge, and no sworn secret society ever yet did, or ever can, or ever will overthrow a public evil, or establish a public good; and that for the very plain reason that they are sworn confederates of evil men. If McDonald is faithful to prohibition, he must be perjured to his brother Masons, who are distillers, brewers and saloonists!

Nor is this all. The prohibition leaders who are neither Masons or Masons' jacks, are under terror of the lodge; in the words of B. T. Roberts, "under a reign of terror." Gen. Neal Dow, Governor St. John and Gideon T. Stewart have all been asked, and all declined to be voted for by the opponents of the lodge as their candidate; and yet these are good men, and great men, and are opposed to the lodge.

But the brilliant "Jim Blaine" and the glorious old Republican party, we must vote for them just this once! And for what? In the name of all candor, for what?

Eight or nine hundred millions of dollars are now paid by the American people for liquor, licensed by Congress and the States; and Mr. Blaine last winter defined his position on this liquor question, which dwarfs all other political questions to pigmies. Mr. Blaine's proposition was to take the revenue paid by this licensed liquor and run the States and counties by it, and so repeal the State and county taxes and please the people. This, of course, includes perpetually licensing the liquor traffic, which pays the revenue; and thus, in effect, Mr. Blaine proposes to make the brewery and the distillery the two permanent pillars of the Republic! Gen. Logan's proposition differed slightly from Mr. Blaine's. He would educate the American youth by the liquor tax, and thus extinguish illiteracy by a revenue derived from rum. And the Republican convention which has nominated these two gentlemen for our votes refused to insert one word in their long platform concerning the liquor question which rocks Europe and America to-day. They refused even to submit to the people, though they were implored to do so by a bevy of gentle and sensible women, with the silver-tongued Frances Willard at their head. Refusal under such circumstances was a proclamation for licensed rum! And to hope that sincere prohibitionists will vote for such a ticket and such a platform is to hope that they will abandon their reason and self-respect.

THE AMERICAN PARTY

Was born for a day, an hour, and for an occasion like this. It steps into the political arena holding up the American Declaration with Jefferson's four distinct recognitions of the God of the Bible emblazoned on its folds; it stands calm amid a crowd of enthusiasts screaming for partisanship, mistaken for patriotism: and pointing up to that American Declaration exclaims, "Behold the origin of our principles and our name! There is our standard of morals and of law. We have taken them from the furnace which forged out our liberties. We will, with God's help, turn politics back to the God of our fathers. We will not 'justify the rich for a bribe,' or unjustly 'countenance a poor man in his cause.'" We demand for the laborer not the stupor of the saloon, but the sweet rest of the Sabbath. We propose to let loose the American eagle to take and tear the serpent of the still. We propose to keep the Bible in the school, and to keep the priest out of it. We seek justice for the ex-slaves and to keep honor with Indians. In short, we seek and expect "peace on earth and good will to men;" and since we find no command of God that either men or women should vote, we are in favor of giving the suffrage to either or both, when warranted by reason and demanded by the public good. And since God has set our American women in the forefront of this hottest prohibition battle, we propose to give them the only weapon by which political battles are effectually fought.

"That weapon which comes down as still
As snowflakes fall upon the sod;
Yet executes the freeman's will,
As lightning does the will of God."

Is there, can there be, a weapon more adapted to the delicate hands of woman than these snowflakes? And as there is not a just man on earth who would not shriuk aghast from stifling the voices of our mothers, wives, sisters and daughters, forbidding them to utter in words with their lips their share of public opinion; and as dropping a ballot is but speaking with their fingers, we propose to allow women their share of that popular sentiment which takes the shape of law. Nor do we apprehend there will be any more stuffing of ballot boxes, or more chewing, cursing, swearing, spitting and shooting down voters at the polls after our women go to elections with us than there has been before. Neither do we apprehend a deluge of unrocked cradles and buttonless coats. Nature always in the end takes care of herself. Women's fingers will still be smaller and nimbler than ours, and men will be stronger than women when the liquor is kept away; and as God placed the sexes together in Paradise, "to dress it and to keep it," we think their united counsels may not be amiss in removing the political and social thorns and thistles which now infest the earth and bringing back our political "Paradise regained."

Sure we are that our politics must be elevated, or our nation sink. Our earth is rapidly filling up; and Christianity is the only salt which will preserve it. Male suffrage and military rule have failed in Europe, whose populations are anxious to get away from their homes: and, as Moody says, "Christ is what men want;" and what they need is to worship him. This Satan knew when he proposed himself as Christ's substitute; and atheism, priestism, spiritism, socialism, communism, Nihilism, Mormonism, secretism and the rest are all broods of the one serpent which is "the devil and Satan." To hope to purify our politics by alliance with any of these is simple fatuity and folly. Satan is not divided against Satan, nor the lodge against liquor. Let the prohibitionists then meet us in Christ, whose reform methods were all open, nothing covert or concealed, and our ultimate triumph is sure. "For he must and will reign till the Lord's prayer is answered and 'all enemies are under his feet.'"

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

A JUST JUDGMENT.

The Sandy Lake, Pa., News, in an article on the American party and a review of its principles, says with candor and truth:

"No other party takes such broad, comprehensive, statesman-like position on the living issues of the times. This party is young, strong and active, and, though little known by the masses, from whom its doings are concealed by the big and little political papers of other parties, by simply saying nothing about it, is just as sure to make its mark and yet be felt in political circles as that truth is truth or that right will finally reign. It is the only political party that distinctly acknowledges the existence and authority of God, and the duty of civil governments to submit to his law. It takes the side of him who is the Almighty in his controversy with nations that will not recognize his claims upon them. He is a jealous God, jealous of his rights, and has the power and oft exercises it in overthrowing the political parties that will not bow to his scepter and the nations that will not yield him divine honors. He thus may raise up the now unknown American party to sway the politics of America. Stranger things have happened. In fact, there would be nothing strange at all if what we have suggested should occur during the lives of thousands now disposed to laugh at our ideas on this subject, as chimerical and utopian."

BLAINE'S RELIGION.

One of the first inquiries respecting the Republican candidate are his relations to the Christian church. It has been reported that he is a Catholic, and the favor shown him by the Catholic press gives credit to the report; but this is a mistake. He attends the Presbyterian church, but we are not aware whether he is a member of that church and a believer in Christ. In a letter written to Dr. James King, of Pittsburgh, eight years ago, Mr. Blaine speaks of his faith thus:

WASHINGTON, March 10, 1876.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I agree with you that the charge of my being a Catholic is very provoking, considering the motive that inspires it, and very exasperating when I see it connived at, if not in fact originated, by men who sat with me in Presbyterian Bible class when I was a student and you a professor in Washington College. This charge is part and parcel of the tactics of the Cameron gang to rob me of the Pennsylvania delegates, when, in fact, four-fifths of the Republicans of the State desire my nomination. My ancestors on my father's side were, as you know, always indentified with the Presbyterian church, and they were prominent and honored in the old colony of Pennsylvania several generations before the Camerons blessed Scotland by leaving it.

But, while thanking you for what you have done to set my Pittsburgh friends right on this question, I never consent to make any public declaration upon the subject, and for two reasons: First, because I abhor the introduction of anything that looks like a religious test or qualification for office in a republic, where perfect freedom of conscience is the birthright of every citizen; and, second, because my mother was, as you well know, a devoted Catholic. I would not for a thousand presidencies speak a disrespectful word of my mother's religion, and no pressure will draw me into any avowal of hostility or unfriendliness to Catholics, though I have never received and do not expect any political support from them. You are at liberty to show this to the gentleman who urged you to write me.

Many thanks for your kind invitation, but I can hardly promise myself the pleasure of a visit to Western Pennsylvania this spring. You know, however, that a large part of my heart is always in the Monongahela Valley. J. G. BLAINE.

BLAINE'S PLAN

TO PERPETUATE THE WHISKY MILLS.

The position of the Republican candidate on the liquor question is of the highest interest to Christian men who intend voting for him. We therefore print a summary of his letter published in the Philadelphia Press, Nov. 29, 1883, stating Mr. Blaine's objections to the proposed distribution of the surplus revenue of the Federal Government among the States, and proposing, as a substitute, that if the National Government no longer needs a tax on spirits, the entire amount of its yield should be paid to the States.

Three fatal objections, in Blaine's opinion, make the Pennsylvania proposition to distribute the Federal surplus unwise:

1. The utter uncertainty of the size of the redundant revenue. It may be $1,000,000 or $100,000,000, and unless it was steady no State tax could be remitted on account of the receipt of this, while sporadic contributions to the States would be wasted, as was the last distribution of the Federal surplus.

2. The division of this surplus would impose on Senators and Representatives a divided duty. For the sake of their States they would wish the surplus to be as large as possible, which would present a constant temptation to withhold appropriations from the objects really of National character.

3. The assumption of a continuing redundancy of the National revenue is opposed to all sound views of administration, because it is sure to yield to extravagance, corruption, and all manner of schemes for getting rid of money. The time is rapidly approaching, however, when the National revenue, yielding, under the present system of taxation, $100,000,000 beyond the amount required for government expenses, must be reduced. A strong movement is already on foot for the repeal of the entire system of internal revenue, which receives the support of such protectionist as Judge Kelly and free-traders like Mr. Cox, of New York. This conjunction of opposing views in support of the abolition of the same tax gives a rare opportunity to relieve taxation in the States. Of all our taxes, State taxation is the most oppressive. It is direct. It falls on property with crushing force. In a few communities it is less than one per cent, and in most it is over 2 per cent.

Why, therefore, should not the States be permitted to have a tax on spirits for their own benefit if the National Government does not need it? Can it be wise to continue a direct tax on property, and at the same time command a hurtful luxury like spirits to go free—a luxury whose taxation oppresses no one? The customs revenues of the National Government monopolizes. Excise is open in theory to both State and National use in taxation; but in practice National authority alone can levy an excise tax on whisky. No State can guard its borders against whisky from other States, or make an economical collection of such tax within its own revenue. The Federal machinery for the collection of this revenue is in full operation, and a bill of ten lines could direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the whole of it, less the small expense of collection, to the States and Territories in proportion to their population, and continue it permanently as part of the regular annual revenue. Such a plan would give a revenue from such a tax wholly to the States, and would not depend upon a chance surplus or an accidental remainder in the National Treasury. It would make a tax on spirituous and malt liquors a permanent resource to all the States, enabling them thereby to definitely adjust and reduce their own taxation. Each State could most wisely use its share according to its own necessities. The total return tax on spirituous and malt liquors last year was over $86,000,000, an amount which would tend to increase rather than diminish as each State saw the suppression of illicit distilleries was to its advantage. With this revenue State taxation could be remitted, State debts paid, or if the aid were divided between cities and counties, their expenses would be proportionately diminished. In a table annexed to the letter, Mr. Blaine shows the share of the large States on the basis of population to be: $8,893,000 for New York, $7,493,000 for Pennsylvania, $5,285,000 for Illinois, and $5,590,000 for Ohio, the smaller States receiving in proportion.

Philanthropy and politics, now flowing far apart, will meet in one stream in the proportion that philanthropists become conscious of power to deal with sources as well as the results of crime, and so soon as politicians learn that these functions are assigned them for no other than a philanthropic reason.—Union Signal.

A meeting of the Massachusetts Independents, over which Charles W. Cadman presided, condemned at Boston Friday the Republican Presidential nominations, and trusted the Democrats would name men suitable to their views. They also instructed their Executive Committee to call a convention not later than Aug. 1st. President Eliot, of Harvard, in a speech, hoped a new party would grow out of this movement. A committee was appointed to hold a conference with the Independent Republicans of New York, and letters from sympathizers were read.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BAPTISM AND LODGERY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Allow me a corner to say a word or two about the "Baptism and Lodgery" (June 12) extract from the Lutheran Standard and your reference to the change of language in the tract referred to. You give me more credit than I am entitled to, for the real merit of the change belongs to the writer of the tract, the Rev. J. W. Higbee of Madisonville, Ky., whom I have never seen, but have often heard of his active labors. He courteously responded to the suggestion made, for it doubtless was his desire not to weaken his point by illustrations to which any one might object. But I fancy that even the Lutheran Standard might use "the silly symbols of Masonry," as he calls them, to illustrate, if the character of Masonry as an anti-Christ were also given. For example, the character of the "Judge" as "Unjust" was given by our Lord when he used him as an illustration. But brother Higbee is probably not posted on Masonry as well as the Lutheran Standard. Symbols certainly have a most powerful influence upon mankind. It is almost dangerous to regard any of them as only "silly." They bind men to a common cause—be it good or evil—and prompt them to risk their very lives for it. God gave circumcision as a prophetical symbol until the promised seed should come. Our Lord appointed the bread and wine symbols of his flesh and blood. And it would seem scarcely credible that the most important link in the chain of God's plan of salvation—the Resurrection—should have no symbol of really divine authority. It is indeed reasonable to have it. Hence, as an aid to our faith, God has kindly given us this retrospective symbol of the resurrection of his well beloved Son. Immersion is a memorial symbol of the believer's burial and rising with Christ, which no other use of water teaches. The doctrine itself becomes changed by men when the "mode" is! The "baptism IN water," as our American revisers have put it, is also a symbol of the resurrection of the believer's spiritual body, whilst it now testifies death to sin, and that the life spiritual in the flesh is "by the faith of the Son of God who loved us, and gave himself for us."

The Cynosure and Lutheran bear noble testimony against the evils of lodgery and in favor of the supremacy of the risen Lord and Saviour. And in that last they no doubt have Bro. Higbee's hearty support. But I fancy that Bro. Higbee's special mission is to preach the New Testament Gospel and its ordinances as commanded by the Lord Jesus Christ. He has no other creed; but I believe that he must regard sprinkling as most Protestants do the wafer, i. e., a sin against Christ, by making void one of the plain Gospel symbols.

I do not believe that Bro. Higbee is a member of any lodge but there are probably both preachers and members among his people in sections of the country who worship in Freemason lodges without being disciplined for thus having "fellowship" with an "unfruitful work of darkness." (Or is it a fruitful one?)

But, according to a report in the New York Sun, French Masonic lodges begin to compete with Christian sects in their inventions of new "modes" of baptism. This June in New York it baptized eight baby boys by "washing their hands," making them kneel before a fire (fire worshipers, eh?) and then putting on aprons, etc., on them, one so lustily protesting that its mamma had to take part in the affair! But the report says all this is "not intended to interfere with any religious faith!" What next?

Christianity teaches the brotherhood of man in its best sense under Christ as their head and life. Freemasonry teaches of that brotherhood under itself, and degrades Christ to the level of the false prophets in the world.

Oh, for that visible oneness of Christians for which Jesus prayed (John 17). The world seeing it would be converted. This shall be, but we must abide God's time for it. Shall we not believe that just as Jesus shall be honored by his people in his own ordinances and his spirit manifested by their loving unity, the time shall approach?

Yours for the truth,

THOMAS HODGE.

FROM SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

PASADENA, Cal., June 2, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The weather here in this southern clime is beautiful. The farmers are plowing their corn, and cutting wheat, barley and alfalfa for hay. The uplands here are too dry to raise alfalfa without irrigation, consequently around Pasadena, in the orange and fruit-raising districts, they only raise it in small patches for a cow and one or two horses. One half acre will furnish alfalfa hay for the above nearly the year round. For horses they mostly use barley hay. Within the last two years there has been raised a bald or beardless barley which is preferable to the bearded for hay. Corn, what little there is around Pasadena, looks nicely; but as a rule corn raising, except for cow feed, is not a success here. But six to eight miles south, on the San Gabriel river bottoms, they raise a great deal of corn; hogs, cattle and sheep are plenty as a consequence. We are ahead of them in fruit raising, they ahead of us on farming. I have never seen the orange trees as near clear of the golden fruit as at present; being at a high price the crop is nearly all sold, boxed and shipped. But the prospect for this fall and winter crop is very flattering; for two months or more when passing an orange orchard the fragrance from the bloom is delightful, yet there is more or less bloom on some the year round, and it is no uncommon thing to see green and ripe fruit with bloom intermingled on the same tree; and especially so with the lemon, as they have both green and ripe fruit on all the time. The curl leaf has lessened the crop of peaches slightly, yet the crop will be perhaps full an average. The trees bear here a fair crop the second year after planting. I will have several from this year's planting on the late Crawford and Lemon Cling. There is an abundant harvest of grapes before us, yet the fearful use to which the most of them are put is terrible. They load them into wagons, haul them to the winery, and scoop them out about the same as we did oats and corn in Iowa, and they are made into that which leads to damnation. I have about three acres of wine grapes and two of raisin grapes. I intend drying and canning the raisin grape and making jelly of the wine grape. They may rot by the ton before I will sell to the winery. My vines are three years old, and will go perhaps two tons per acre. I will send out when made twenty-five one-pound cans for samples of our grape jelly, to the first twenty-five who send twenty cents to pay postage, as I presume tin cans well sealed will be allowable in the mails.

Well, dear friends of God, they are putting up a Masonic hall here. I saw to-day in the postoffice the bell with the square and compass on, which of course is to use to toll "low twelve" in the Hiram Abiff tragedy, when Jubelo, Jubela and Jubelum meet to bury the body of poor Hiram. Oh, may the cursed idolatrous system be crushed or so brought to its true light that no professing Christian will ever darken the door of a lodge. Pray for us. T. K. BUFKIN.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

CLARENCE, Ill.

The Magna Charta or constitution of civil government for all nations, was given to Moses by the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, upon a rocky mountain in Arabia—the Ten Commands. This constitution is of superlative importance to man. The exceeding great, the infinite value of the Decalogue, is seen in the sublime and terrible exhibitions of Jehovah's power and purity at the time of its promulgation, and the presence and power of God, subsequently, in connection with the ark containing that fundamental law.

From these considerations we see, 1. That the moral and civil law is of the highest importance, that obedience thereto is indispensable, and that Jehovah's saving presence is with those who are obedient. 2. That we need divine aid to understand our whole duty. The Israelites needed the oracle; we need the influence of the Holy Spirit, and all the inhabitants of earth down to the end of time will need the same. Without the Holy Spirit no one can fully understand the Bible or civil government. Hence the command, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally."

Some believers in the Bible doubt the proposition that the Decalogue is the fundamental law for all civil governments. We remark, 1st. As God is the author of civil government, then the government established by him through Moses is, in substance, that government; it is the model, and the only one, given in the Bible; and every one properly educated in government would subscribe to a remark in Kitto (under "Law"): "It is evident that the Mosaical legislation, if truly observed, was more fitted to promote universal happiness and tranquility than any other constitution, either ancient or modern." 2. All governments, as far as they are right and efficient, are governed by the same principles, and all infidels who believe in equitable laws and the punishment of criminals adopt substantially the Mosaic code, as far as that was founded on the second table of the law. (Note.—The Mosaic law, in some of its penalties, has been softened, but every law that has not been modified or repealed in the New Testament is evidently still in force.)

If this divine constitution and the laws founded thereon are of such transcendent importance to man as appears from the above view, then the whole world should be familiar with that constitution and those laws. Hear what the Supreme Law-giver says in reference to the Decalogue and the laws founded upon it—"And these words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign (remembrancer) upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thine house, and on thy gates." Deut. 6: 6–9, and Acts 17: 11. How futile, then, is the remark (frequently made), viz.: "Don't publish these things now, in the present critical condition of the country, lest the predominant party should be turned aside from their course." Turning aside is what is needed in the case of those who are governing contrary to the divine constitution and laws, and it is for want of such teaching, backed by the nation, that we have been so wofully misgoverned of late by the two great political parties. PITH AND POINT.

A MINISTER BECOMES A NOBLE "FANATIC."

He came here from New Jersey about two years ago—knew little about Masonry—in fact, was an apologizer—thought we were going too fast; but so soon as he was clandestinely inducted into its exalted (?) mysteries by the fanatics here, he became as fanatical as the worst of us. He has friends and relatives in N J., some of whom are secretists, and to whom he sends his Cynosure with others quite regularly, and thinks the paper is doing some of them much good. I saw a letter from one of his friends, saying that the paper and tracts sent him had kept him from joining the lodge.—J. N. NORRIS, Birmingham, Iowa.

HE READ EVERETT'S LETTERS.

I would like to do something to help on the good work but am too old and too poor to do much; shall be 81 soon. Was 23 when Morgan was murdered, and lived in Middlebury, Conn. I had a cousin in Miller's office at the time he published Morgan's book, and for some time after he used to send me papers. In 1829 I took an Anti-masonic paper published in Hartford. There were a good number of letters published which were written by Edward Everett to a high Mason in the State of New York. They were very interesting, and would make a valuable addition to our literature.—LEVI MANVEL, Union City, Mich.

FOR PRINCES AND NABOBS, NOT AMERICANS.

A defender of Masonry in a Canada paper very appropriately signs himself "Vanity Phair"; a very fair name for such intelligence as he displays when he affirms that in this "mystery of iniquity" there can be no wrong found in her temples! He claims that the crowned heads rule the craft in Prussia, Sweden and Italy, and three of Queen Victoria's boys wear the lambskin, the dear innocents. Of course a society thus patronized by royalty may be highly esteemed by servile tools, but Americans ought to know better. Perhaps the Dominion may find out at some future day that Masonry has been revealed again and again, and that its "spotless" flag is only spotless in the dark! T. H.

CHRIST OUR EXAMPLE.

Christ, our example, never belonged to a secret society. He belonged to a society which he himself established and which was open to all whether they be rich or poor, high or low, learned or unlearned, young or old, freemen or slaves, an inhabitant of this or any other country, and for the men of all ages, climes and conditions from the hour of its organization onward to the end of time. He made it for no particular class in society, and his language to universal man was, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart and ye shall find rest unto your souls; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Here were the conditions for joining the organization or becoming a member of the society or church which he established. There was no oath of secrecy to be taken on joining this body of men, but only faith that was true in him, and obedience to all his commands and requirements. Nor must any money be paid down before membership could be indulged in and enjoyed. Nor must the doors be kept locked where this society might hold their meetings, to keep out any that were not members, but the way was open to all. The requirement for entering was, the heart, love for the service, acceptance of the word and a life of uprightness and obedience. In this way they would be a benefit to the world—not merely to the members of the society themselves but to mankind at large. And they were commanded not to keep all the sayings and doings of this body of individuals among themselves and consider it a violation of rule to promulgate them, but they were required to go and declare the truth unto others—to let their light shine in word and in act, so that others might come under this influence—that God might be glorified, Christ honored and men receive their reward. Christ said truly, "I ever spake openly and in secret have I said nothing;" and to those connected in heart and life with him, he said as a lasting command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be condemned."

How different all this is from the secret societies of the present day, where you must have a select few to join, where all your doings must be kept among the members and none have admittance but those who take the oath of secrecy and pay the dues the lodge imposes!—D. Q C.

LESSON XIII.—June 29, 1884.—TEMPERANCE LESSON.

ALCOHOL.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.—Prov. 23: 31.

Ques. What causes the fascination in a glass of liquor?

Ans. The presence of a certain other liquid called alcohol.

Q. Is it found in all intoxicating drinks?

A. It is, only some liquors contain a much larger percentage than others. In small beer it is about 1 part to 70. In strong whisky 1 to 2.

Q. When was alcohol discovered?

A. We have no mention of the use of the still earlier than the seventh century.

Q. What are some of the characteristics of alcohol?

A. You can set a bowl of it on fire with a lighted match. A traveler in Oriental Siberia tells an amusing story of the fright he gave a Tartar sheik by playing this simple trick. If you put a few drops on your hand you will find it gone in a few seconds—dried up or evaporated, as we say—but where the drops fell you will feel a sensation of cold with smarting and tingling. It has also such an attraction for water that it dries the moisture out of everything with which it comes in contact. Fishes, reptiles, or a human limb can be preserved any length of time in alcohol.

Q. What is one of its effects on the body?

A. When we eat our food the little capillary blood vessels of the stomach pour out a fluid called gastric juice, which makes it digest. But when we drink alcohol they pour out only water. This is on the same principle that our eyes water when we get cinders into them. The stomach recognizes and treats the alcohol as a foreign substance which has no business there.

Q. What do some people think will cure intemperance?

A. The free use of beer and light wines.

Q. How are some of these wines made?

A. All are adulterated more or less, and often with poisonous substances. Claret is said to be made in large quantities by allowing water to soak through shavings, and afterwards adding water, tartaric acid and alcohol.

Q. Do such drinks check the spread of intemperance?

A. Facts prove that they do not. In Saxony, where large quantities of beer are drank there is proportionately free use of brandy. Switzerland, a wine-growing country, is also a country of drunkards. In Great Britain beer is a common drink, but her poorer classes are grossly intemperate.

Q. What do we learn from such facts?

A. That God's rule (recite Golden Text) is the wisest and safest. Alcohol is a very wily foe, and is never more dangerous than when he seems most attractive and harmless.

A BLESSED HUMBUG.

Among the less useful inventions of the present day we are inclined to class the countless "Lesson Papers," big and little, weekly and quarterly, with which Sunday-schools are flooded. The special study made practicable by the adoption of the "International Lessons" has resulted in the issue of numerous "Lesson Leaves" and "Lesson Papers," many of which give evidence that they are prepared by official dead-heads, who seem to have neither the gift to teach, nor the grace to learn; others indicate thought, study and intelligence; but all of them, as used, seem to be a device of the devil to prevent the study of the sacred Scriptures.

In a large proportion of the Sunday-schools one will find the teachers and scholars each sitting with a "Lesson Paper" or "Quarterly" in their hands. From it they first read the lesson. Then the teacher looks on his paper and reads a question, and the pupil looks on his paper and reads an answer to it; and this goes around the class until the lesson is finished. And both class and teacher frequently give evidence that they knew little about the lesson before they commenced, and they probably know but little more when they are through with it.

This whole operation is a sham and a fraud; though without doubt somebody makes money by publishing the "Lesson Papers." If they were really instructive, they would still be liable to great abuses, for by this method of Bible study people have their food cooked, chewed, and swallowed for them, and have no occasion to exercise mind, judgment, or memory. But in many instances the lesson papers are as empty as old gourds. If one half these papers could be pitched back to their authors, indorsed with the Hibernian's remark about the hash, "Let the man who chawed it ate it," it would be little loss to Sunday-schools.

We remember a very successful Sunday-school superintendent, who would not have a question book in his school, and who was accustomed to say that, if any person did not know enough to ask his own questions on a lesson he was not fit to be a teacher in his school.

The Sunday-School Times tells of a Sunday-school in New York, of which it is said no one in the school, teacher or taught, is allowed to bring a lesson paper or any printed help. The Bible is to be at hand, and every reference is to be made direct to its pages; in consequence, the paramount authority of the word of God is impressed by word and act, and the school is emphatically a Bible school. We recollect a Sunday-school held in an old brown school-house, more than forty years ago. Almost the only book we saw was the New Testament; but some of the lessons learned from that book are remembered to this day. A chapter from the Word of God, indelibly impressed upon the mind of a child, is worth acres of this ghastly trash which dribbles forth from "religious" publishing houses in the shape of "Lesson Papers," with their petty pictures, finical acrostics, and other similar humbugs, which tend to banish the Word of God from the Sunday-school, and waste the precious hours which should be employed in earnest study of the message of the Most High.—The Common People.

OBITUARY.

Died at his home three miles northwest of Bangor, Iowa, fifth month, 22, JAMES HARRIS, in the 70th year of his age.

Though his last sickness was accompanied by much suffering, yet he was always patient and thoughtful of the comfort of others. He was a life-long member of the socicty of Friends, and had for years sympathized with the needed reforms of the day. He leaves a wife, with whom he had shared the joys and sorrows of this life for more than forty-four years, and seven children to mourn his loss, seven others having crossed the river before the father. He has left to his friends that assurance that he is now at rest in "that blessed home" about which he loved to hear them sing.

"Died in Silver City, Idaho Territory, May 23, 1884, after a short illness, MRS. J. N. TRASK; aged 22 years, 3 months and 21 days.

"The deceased was born at Portland, Oregon, Feb. 2, 1862, was well known in Silver City, where she was raised and blossomed into womanhood. Her amiable and winning ways, when a girl; her motherly affections and wifely virtues, when a woman, endeared her to all who knew her. In her, beauty, grace, and all that goes to make woman lovely, were combined.

"The golden thread that bound her to loving ones on earth has been severed, and her spirit has ascended to the Creator where, ere long, it will be joined by those of her three little darlings, who are now motherless, but know not why. The deceased leaves, besides the three children, a husband, mother, two brothers and a sister (Mrs. Jacob Mussell) to mourn her loss.

"The community extends its sympathy to the afflicted family. The funeral took place on Sunday last from the residence, and was largely attended by the citizens of Silver City."

How slender is the cord which binds us to earth. In the bloom of womanhood, with a devoted and loving husband, with a promising little family, and with the future all bright and golden before her, she has gone—taken from us to dwell with those who have gone before. How we miss her. We miss her in the morning as a sunbeam that had blessed us with its rays, we miss her about the family board; we miss her at the fireside; we miss her everywhere; but above all we miss her at evening about the family altar.

We know our dear one is with Jesus; her devotion to his service and strong defence of his cause since her conversion about five years ago, during the illness of our little son, confirms us in our belief. Though in a region where the religion of Jesus Christ is but little taught, she became a student of God's Word—her Bible and the Cynosure being about the only reading in which she took an interest.

Our hearts have gone with her, and through our tears we see that which tells us it will not be long when, freed from care and trial, we shall be with our own.

J. N. T.

ARCHIBALD MILLER departed this life on the 2d inst. through an accidental shot from his rifle while in his own hands. He had taken the gun down to shoot a hawk, and before going out of the house he undoubtedly must have blown in it to ascertain whether it was loaded or not, when it went off and discharged the whole load into his mouth, causing instantaneous death. At the moment the accident occurred, his two daughters, the only persons on the premises at the time, were in the kitchen at their work getting dinner, when they heard the report of the gun, and hearing an unusual rumbling noise in another room, ran to the scene to find their aged father a lifeless corpse.

The deceased was born in Monroe county, West Virginia, Dec. 25th, 1802, and was at the time of his death over eighty-two years old. He was married at the age of twenty-four years to Miss Jane Greenlee, of the county and State above mentioned; and in the fall of 1830 he removed with his family to Indiana, settling in Putnam county near Greencastle. During his stay there he entered land in Floyd township, built a cabin and moved into it in the spring of 1834, where he remained till death, being just fifty years. He was bereft of the companion of his youth Nov. 18th, 1840; joined in wedlock to Miss Melinda Pierson in December, 1841, who died Nov. 15th, 1878; since which time he has remained single. He has been sorely afflicted for the past five years from lameness caused by an afflicted limb, disabling him from going about very much, and causing him much pain and suffering. He was the father of nine children, three sons and six daughters, seven of whom survive him to mourn the loss of a kind, loving, agreeable and provident father. He leaves three single daughters alone at the old homestead to feel his loss more deeply than all the rest, but with the consoling thought that their hands have been always ready to minister to his wants in health, and to bind up his wounds in his great affliction; and that they have always been swift to go on any errand for him and have saved his afflicted feet many steps.

During the early part of his life, while he yet remained in Virginia, he embraced the religion of Christ, joined the M. E. church, and remained a member till his removal to this State, since which time he has not been identified with any branch of the church, but his life has been strictly moral, always in sympathy with, and on the right side of every moral issue of the day. Consequently in our struggle with the rebellion he was an enthusiastic Union man, and rejoiced in the salvation of the country and the freedom of the slave. He was a strong temperance man; and temperance in his view meant the prohibition of the use of intoxicants as a beverage by law.

His funeral was attended by a large assembly of sympathizing neighbors and friends, who came to pay the last tribute of respect to the memory, and look for the last time upon the face of one who had been long known and revered among us. The deceased was a loyal citizen, a conscientious neighbor, a faithful friend, and a kind and affectionate parent.

W. H. FIGG.

—The Hartford Courant of May 27th notices the death of Miss Emily L. Ellsworth of Windsor, Conn., at 50 years of age, in the Homœopathic Hospital of Brooklyn, N. Y. Her death occurred on the 24th, and the funeral services were held on the 27th at the Congregational church, Windsor.

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

A. D. ZARAPHONITRES, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1884.

The Cynosure greets and bows gracefully and gratefully to our National Nominating Convention; and, like a good mother, whose children are getting married and having families of their own, suggests, "Children, you cannot spare me yet."

Secretary Stoddard's thoughts are turning toward California, and correspondence is opened with an able young man there. Perhaps Mr. Stoddard will put M. N. Butler in San Francisco, as he has put Bailey in Washington. Who says "AYE?"

A capable and efficient publisher, and ten young men like W. B. Stoddard with F. W. Capwell at his back would put the Cynosure so high above all peradventure, that all reform navigators will steer by its light. Could Mr. Capwell be obtained as Cynosure publisher?

When God, by Gideon, would rout Baal worship, he "Set every man's sword against his fellow through all the host." This is precisely what he is now doing with the Republican party. Leading Republican papers throughout the country are bolting the nomination of Mr. Blaine.

The private secretary, who wrote us that Mr. Blaine was not a Mason was a Mason himself! though his employer is not. Mr. Blaine is the ablest politician of them all. He is not a Mason, but Masons go for him. He is not a Roman Catholic; but his mother was. He goes for prohibition in Maine, and for liquor in Washington; and he is the candidate of a party which has carried prohibition in Kansas, Iowa and Maine; on a platform dictated by the brewery, distillery and saloon!

Christ hath many comings. He came to Adam in the Garden; for God, having human form and voice, is Christ. He came to Egypt, to deliver Israel. He came in a cloud to Moses on Sinai (Ex. 34: 5), and to ordain elders. (Num. 34: 25), etc., etc. He said to his disciples "I will come to you," and he did and does. And "behold he cometh with clouds!" For "The Lord himself shall descend form heaven with a shout." A good brother at Mr. Moody's meeting at Northfield, Mass., said, "I believe he will stand on Mt. Olivet, and that I shall shake hands with him." Another will have him set up a throne at Jerusalem, with Jews about him as his court, and reign over the earth from that center. The Cynosure believes the Bible, that Christ will surely come and reign here; and that every description of his coming will be fulfilled; not locally but truly; neither by "lo here!" or "lo there!" nor "with observation;" not in the Palestine, Jerusalem, but in the "New Jerusalem, which cometh down from God out of heaven." Come Lord Jesus! Come quickly. Amen.

POMEROY EXHUMED AT LAST!

Mr. Pomeroy reached Washington on the day Beauregard opened on Sumter, to take his seat in the Senate. Those who read the sketch of his twelve years' work in that body (see Cynosure, May 17, 1883), have seen that he was excelled by no man on that floor for general statesmanship and special reform labor. Kansas was grateful to him. But the devil, who is the god of the lodge, inaugurated a landslide, and buried Pomeroy under it. He disappeared from politics. He was cleared by the Senate, cleared by the courts; but there were some good men all over the land believed him guilty of bribery. St. John voted against him. The good Judge Parish of Oberlin; Dea. Stoddard of Northampton, Mass., and others "lost confidence" in him. He has been literally buried alive. The American party has undertaken his resurrection. The Cynosure has shown the fatuity of charging with bribery the man whom Amos Lawrence and J. P. Williston gave leave to draw sixty thousand dollars, to be used at his discretion, to beat the Border-ruffians," build up the Republican party, and make Kansas a free State; because he did exactly what the Emigrant Aid Society sent him there to do, and gave him money to do it.

"O, but York swore he was bribed by Pomeroy, and laid the bribe-money ($7,000) on the desk of the Legislature!" and Senate, courts, and Cynosure clearance avail nothing. "Where did that money come from if Pomeroy was not guilty?" And Antimasons are so honest and fearless, that they would condemn the angel Gabriel if his wing had brushed brimstone.

Well Christ said, "There is nothing hid that shall not be manifested." Mark 4: 22. Prof. Bailey's skill and industry has unearthed this whole matter. As his researches will be put in pamphlet, we here give only the substance of the Pomeroy revelations, which are succinctly these:

1. Pomeroy's return to the Senate was considered certain by himself and friends. He had no need to, and did not buy votes; and the idea that he would give York $7,000 for his one vote, or his influence, is simply foolish and absurd. A clear majority were pledged to him.

2. Pomeroy did send $7,000 by York, to Page, to start a bank in Independence. Page had the money and has paid it back to Pomeroy.

3. Now comes J. W. Buel of St. Louis, and testifies that A. Belford of Chicago confessed to himself and Gen. McDonald, that the Kansas Pacific Railroad company were anxious to have Pomeroy defeated, and that he (Belford) took $7,000 of that railroad's money to York, who was to rise in his place, lay the money on the Kansas Senate's desk; and swear that Pomeroy gave him that money to buy votes!

4. As Pomeroy had given York $7,000 to give to Page, he could not and did not deny letting York have the money. York swore falsely, that Pomeroy gave him the money for a corruption-fund. The railroad scoundrel-money was used to defeat Pomeroy, and probably returned, less Belford's and York's wages; and Pomeroy was defeated, and has been "buried alive" ever since, by a fraud and moral murder, equally damnable with the crime of the same parties, if they had taken him from his hotel, put him in a Kansas sand-pit, and literally buried him alive!

5. But confederate crime, so comprehensive, is not committed without a motive. What was the motive of this conspiracy?

6. Answer. Pomeroy had, a little before (1869), in Farwell Hall, spoken to us against the Masonic lodge, and revealed the fact that the "Raid on Kansas," was run by Masons, who offered to save him alive if he joined their order, but said he would be killed if he did not.

7. And, as if God would put the matter beyond dispute, J. C. Briggs, a wholesale merchant, and man above reproach, comes forward and states the fact, that Masons and Odd-fellows revealed to him that they had laid a trap for Pomeroy which "an angel from heaven" could not escape!

8. Prof. Bailey gives names, persons and places in his narrative, so that this whole fearful transaction can be followed and sifted to the bottom, and a good man and an American statesman, who has been buried for years, as Thurlow Weed was by lodge-falsehood, shown again alive to the American people as their candidate for President of the United States.

9. "But," say some, "the Masons whom I know are as good men as their neighbors, and I cannot believe they would be guilty of such revolting crimes as burying Pomeroy alive."

10. Answer. "Good men" sunk Morgan alive for revealing the true nature of the lodge, as Pomeroy did in Farwell Hall. Do we forget that swearing false is not perjury, nor assassination murder in Masonry, but only keeping Masonic oaths? The Episcopal minister, and every male member of his church, and also the leading elders of the Presbyterian church, in Batavia, N. Y., were in the lodge which took off Morgan, and shared in their counsels and in the crime! These were not "bad" men or monsters; but Masons who felt bound by their oaths! When this one fact is made clear to the American people, the lodge will sink, as it did in 1826–32, and its oaths be prohibited; and the laws enforced against them.

Meantime, let us mark, in this exhuming of Senator Pomeroy at this critical moment, the over-ruling hand of God, and avoid the sin of Herod "who gave not God the glory." And let us push this battle "for Christ's crown-rights" to the gates of his enemies.

MASONIC BAPTISM.

We insert on another page the New York Sun's account of a Masonic baptism of eight children by a French lodge in the Masonic Temple, New York. Disgusting as is the whole thing, the most shocking part is the audacity of the statement that this baptism "Is not intended to interfere in the slightest degree, with any religious faith."

Yet the same Masonic account of the performance says it was to "keep the children from the vices and snares that surround the young;" and as "symbolic of approaching the throne of divine grace with pure hearts." What more could baptism be or imply? The audacity of a strumpet, assuming the functions of a wife, yet assuring the insulted woman that she did not intend to "interfere with her in the slightest degree" would be a poor effrontery, compared with this harlot baptism of children by the lodge, as the rival and substitute for the church of Christ! A similar baptism, a while since, covered whole pages of New Orleans papers. A like rival of the church as "The Bride of Christ, the Lamb's wife," is depicted in Rev. 17th, as "The great whore" who deceives "peoples and multitudes and nations and tongues!"

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES at Wheaton opened grandly with the anniversary sermon before the graduating class by ex-President J. Blanchard and addresses before the Society of Inquiry in the evening by Rev. E. B. Graham of Omaha and Rev. A. J. Chittenden, pastor of the College church. Rev. N. Wardner of Syracuse, editor of the Wesleyan, had been invited but was unable to come. In the afternoon the annual sermon of the Theological Seminary was preached by Prof. L. N. Stratton, the head of that institution. He was assisted by Rev. J. F. Carroll, of Cleveland, Ohio, Rev. Mr. Clark, of Syeamore, and several local ministers. The address before the preparatory school was given Monday afternoon by Prof. H. A. Fischer, and the graduating exercises of the first class of the Seminary took place in the evening.

—Bro. C. H. Rawson, the young pastor of the Free Methodist church at Sherwood, Michigan, writes a very interesting sketch of the Michigan State convention which met April 10th at Battle Creek.

—Walter H. Shupe, Sublime Prince, 32-degree Freemason, stated at a Greenback meeting at Indianapolis that Peter Cooper sunk $100,000 in an effort to float the Advocate, the Greenback organ of which Shupe was editor some years ago. If Mr. Cooper had been a reader of the Cynosure it would have cost him but $2.00 a year, and he would have learned better than to support such a mongrel Masonic-Quaker sheet and saved his money.

—The Catholic Review prints a table of the Romish dioceses in this country and claims that there are some 670,000 Catholic children who are not provided with parochial schools by the priests. Catholic parents should be thankful that the prudent management of American statesmen has provided much better means for the instruction of these children. Let them be thankful for the negligence of the priests in this matter. Let Americans know, too, that Romish opposition to the public school means always the establishment of the priest's authority on the ruins of that noble American institution.

—Mr. Alexander Thomson, a member of the N. C. A. Board and a frequent and valued contributor to the Cynosure, has been compelled to give up his business at Bartlett, Ill., and will soon take a northward trip for his health. We exeecdingly regret this return of Bro. Thomson's old complaint, which drove him years ago to the Tennessee mountains, and later to the northern verge of civilization on Great Manitoulin island in Lake Huron.

—The "Old order" German Baptist yearly meeting held June 3d near Beaverdam, Maryland, ordered the words "without mental reservation" stricken from their installation service, as savoring too much of Masonry. The lodge finds no disciples among that sturdy, self-denying people.

—Prof. L. Davis of Union Seminary, Dayton, has written again ably in the Telescope against the encroachments of the lodge in the United Brethren church. The next General Conference will be held at Galion, Ohio, in May, 1885. Delegates and their credentials are already being looked after.

—Our thanks are due to Rev. D. Steele stated clerk of the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, held last month in Pittsburg, for a correction of our report of the action of that body, which was taken from the daily press reports. Instead of the report on the liquor traffic being voted down, it was unanimously adopted; and there was no "heated debate," nor any debate at all, but several earnest speeches, and all on the right side. We are glad to make these corrections for truth's sake and the honor of a Christian body with whom we hope the Cynosure may be more acquainted. The brother objects to the term "new light," we gave to the General Synod. It was not done with any thought of reproach, but simply to distinguish this body from the other Reformed Presbyterian Synod with which it was formerly connected; that being the term frequently used, as "new school" was given to a part of the Presbyterian churches. The difference in name ("Synod" and "Generat Synod") between two Reformed Presbyterian bodies is hardly known by the general public. In their principles the churches of the Synod, often called Covenanters, differ from those of the General Synod mainly, perhaps only, in refusing to vote.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE N. C. A.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

To the National Christian Association: Your Board of Directors elected at the annual meeting, June 21st, 1883, met on the 28th of the same month and organized by selecting W. T. Meloy, chairman, O. F. Lumry, vice-chairman, and H. L. Kellogg, secretary. There have been six meetings held during the year.

The standing committees selected were:

On Building: W. I. Phillips, Thomas Hodge, J. P. Stoddard.

On Publications: W. T. Meloy, L. N. Stratton, O. F. Lumry.

On Finance: Thos. H. Gault, Jesse B. Blank, A. G. Laird.

On Cynosure: The General Agent and Office Editor were made a committee to see that the Christian Cynosure be made self-supporting, "so far as it may be consistent with its usefulness."

On Advertising: The management of the advertising business of the Cynosure was referred to the General Agent.

The annual meeting of the Association having failed to select an auditor, the Board secured the services of S. A. Kean for that duty. The bond of the Treasurer was accepted for $20,000.

The salaries voted and provided for by the Board were: For J. P. Stoddard, General Agent and Corresponding Secretary, $1,000 per year and traveling expenses; for W. I. Phillips, Treasurer, $1,000 per year; for H. H. Hinman, Special Agent, $600 per year and traveling expenses; for E.D. Bailey as New England Agent, $25 per month, as partial salary. The salaries of the Cynosure editors were: J. Blanchard editor, $100 per month from September 1st, 1883, till the annual meeting, he to bear his own traveling expenses; H. L. Kellogg, office editor, $1,000 for the year. Part of the salary of P. S. Feemster was paid by the Board for work in Kansas, up to September 20th, 1883. The amount paid him was $83.

Other expenses incurred by the Board have been: The purchase of E. A. Cook's advertising privileges in the Cynosure, being the use of one inside page until January 1st, 1887, for $500. Various expenses amounting to $176.92 reported by the General Agent as remaining from the previous year were paid; also $25 for claims from Kansas. The sum of $8.34 was paid to W. B. Stoddard for colporteur work in New York previous to his appointment as New York State agent.

On recommendation of the New England Board the following was substituted for the original article on membership in the constitution of that Board:

"This Board shall consist of thirteen members. Each State maintaining a State organization shall be entitled to at least one member."

On the same recommendation David McFall, J. A. Conant, S. A. Pratt, S. C. Kimball, L. P. Goddard, C. L. McCracken, J. E. Gates, A. M. Paull, Geo. Buck, I. Leadbetter, I. Flagg, D. Stratton, and A. J. Hinckley were approved as New England Board.

At a meeting October 13th, 1883, the Board appointed E. D. Bailey, New England agent, to co-operate with the General Agent in the Washington department of the work, authorizing him to co-operate with such friends as were enlisted in the formation of a joint-stock company for the publication of a political paper. The use of rooms for offices were also granted to said stock company, when it should be formed, in the Washington building. At a meeting, February 9th, 1884, the General Agent was authorized to complete the payment for the Washington building, which he did for the aggregate sum of $8.304.91 for purchase and repairs. His arrangements for the renting of the building to the stock company were also approved.

The Board provided for a National Convention, as ordered in the constitution of the Association, which was held in Washington City, February 22nd, 1884. The meeting was held in connection with a convention of the American political party, and the expenses were $117.

The interest on C. A. Blanchard's note for one year amounting to $75 was remitted in consideration of his services at conventions.

At a meeting of the Board January 26th, 1884, a committee was appointed to contract with A. R. McDonald to take charge of the advertising business of the Cynosure. The committee reported a contract for one year for three pages of advertising for one-half the gross proceeds.

The renting of the basement, main floor and third floor for $1,220 per year was completed through the Building committee.

Respectfully Submitted.
W. T. MELOY, Chairman.

H. L. KELLOGG, Sec'y.

Respectfully submitted,
WILLIAM I. PHILLIPS,
Treasurer.

This may certify that I have examined the notes and other accounts and assets belonging to the National Christian Association, and find them correct, according to the above statement, and as appears on the books of said Association, as made and shown by Treasurer this day.

THE NEBRASKA ASSOCIATION.

I am not dead, nor is our cause dead yet in Nebraska. If I live you will hear from us soon. We must have a radically new organization and new start in this State. As it is, I have waited long and very impatiently to hear a single note or receive a single line from president, vice-presidents, or executive committee of the Nebraska State Association opposed to secret societies, and have been disappointed. For one, I am now in favor of a new and radical re-organization. Will all readers of this in Nebraska who are like-minded, address me by letter on the subject, and give their views freely and fully? Write to Kearney, Buffalo Co., Nebraska. W. S. SPOONER.

BAPTIZED INTO MASONRY.

The ceremony of Masonic baptism and adoption of children was performed last night in the Grand Lodge room of Masonic Temple, Twenty-third street, by the French lodge La Sincerite. This ceremony has rarely been performed in public in this country, and the great hall was crowded with invited guests of the lodge, including many ladies and gentlemen in evening dress.

The members of the lodge formed open rank in the center aisle with crossed swords held high, while, at a given signal, eight boys were brought in blindfolded, led by their parents, their ages ranging from 3 years to 10. Some of the boys looked a little frightened, and grasped their parents' hands rather tightly. Bro. Herdet received them at the top of the steps, and at a given signal the bandages were removed from the youngsters' eyes, evidently much to their relief. They looked about in a dazed way, and timidly walked upon the platform. The youngest, to the great amusement of the audience, stoutly resisted being put in the place where he was expected to stand. His mother was obliged to go upon the platform and assist in the ceremonies.

The sponsers of the children took the solemn obligation to aid the children to the utmost in performing the duties of Masonry. Then the children were in turn taken to the font and baptized by washing of their hands, and thence to the altar, whereon was a blazing fire, and where they knelt. The youngest of the eight kept up his reputation, and continued to amuse the audience by stoutly resisting, and his mother was obliged to join the circle at the altar. Next the members of La Sincerite Lodge took the solemn vow binding them to accept the children, which was duly confirmed, the members of the lodge rising and clapping their hands in unison at a signal.

The children were then invested with the aprons and jewels of Masonry, all of them but the youngest being highly pleased with their regalia. The youngest, however, was again obstreperous and had to be persuaded by his mother, and possibly by surreptitious candy. Finally the youngsters were all settled. Then they were consecrated, and the orator of the lodge, brother Lallemand, made an address. Brother Charles T. McClenachan explained in English that La Sincerite Lodge had pledged itself to guard and protect these little children and see that they are educated in Freemasonry, to restrain them from vice and keep them from the snares that surround the young. The ceremony of the washing of hands was not intended to interfere in the slightest degree with any religious faith, but was symbolic of approaching the throne of divine grace with pure hearts.—New York Sun.

LITERATURE.

The second number of D. Lothrop and Co's Young Folks' Library is the entertaining story, "Margie's Mission," by Marie Oliver. It is the story of a clergyman's family whose lives were tried by suffering but made holy by Christian resignation and trust and happy with self-denial. It is the plan of the publisher's to make this series a model in everything that goes to constitute good books—interest, purity of tone, and a direct purpose to teach lessons of truth, honor and usefulness.

Vick's Monthly for June is almost an anniversary number, for it is the month of roses, and the Monthly is always ready with its most sumptuous colored plate for the royal flower. Practical people will find much about their garden work worth noting in this number also.

The English Illustrated Magazine for June has an illustrated article on ancient and modern Bath, England, which makes the reader satisfied with modern social improvement. The continuation of "An Unsentimental Journey through Cornwall" furnishes some fine engravings; and Mrs. Siddons sits for a portrait in the frontispiece.

Simon Yandes, an old and wealthy resident of Indianapolis, went to the public library of that city and seized and made off with three copies of a novel entitled "From Dawn to Daylight," written by Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher, while she resided in the Indiana capital. The book contains reflections on Mr. Yandes' family, and the three copies are said to be the only ones to be had now, as the book is out of print. Mr. Yaudes appeared before the Public Library Committee to defend his action, and was so effective that before adjournment the committee accepted his view—that the book is libelous—and ordered its withdrawal from circulation.

The season of commencements now approaching when so many degrees are conferred by the various institutions of learning, great and small, makes particularly timely the thoughtful and suggestive essay by ex-President Theodore D. Woolsey of Yale, on "Academical Degrees." in the forthcoming Century. He treats more particularly of honorary degrees in the United States, and outlines a system of conferring honors which would give merit its due, but would abolish indiscriminate and meaningless decoration.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet provides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5 Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C A., to the amount of 25 cents.

THE HOME.

WITNESSES.

"I am working alone, and no one heeds!"
Who says so, does not know;
There are clear eyes watching on every side.
And wherever our feet may go,
We are "compassed about with so great a cloud,"
That if we could only see,
We could never think that our life is small,
Or that we may unnoticed be!

We seem to suffer and bear alone
Life's burdens and all its care;
And the sighs and prayers of a heavy heart
Vanish into the air;
But we do not suffer, or work alone,
And after a victory won,
Who knows how happy the hosts may be
Who whisper a soft "Well done!"

Oh, do not deem that it matters not
How you live your life below;
It matters much to the heedless crowd
That you see go to and fro;
For all that is noble and high and good
Has an influence on the rest,
And the world is better for every one
Who is living at his best.

But even if human eyes see not,
No one is unobserved,
There are censures deep and plaudits high
As each may be deserved;
We cannot live in a secret place,
There are watchers always by,
For heaven and earth are full of life,
And God is ever nigh.

Oh, for a life without reproach,
For a heart of earnestness!
For self-forgotten, for meanness slain,
For hands well used to bless!
God, raise us far from the little things,
And make us meet to be
Skilled workers here in the place we fill,
And servants unto thee!

AN INFIDEL'S PRAYER.

The following incident has just been related by a minister, whose veracity will not be questioned by any who know him. It occurred under his personal observation, and hence it is not a story manufactured to illustrate a point. He has no objection to the use of his name, nor would he hesitate to give the name of the person who was most concerned. He is ready also to furnish the precise date and locality of an event in the history of a young man, that speaks in thunder tones to those who deliberately make light of God and of his Word.

This young man, just entering upon the practice of medicine, had become a scoffing infidel through the reading of Ingersoll's wretched book, and other vile productions of hell. He seized every opportunity to pour forth a tide of shocking blasphemy against Christ, and held up the Bible among his companions to coarse and obscene ridicule. At length he went so far in his desperate wickedness that he uttered a wilful lie, and perpetrated a monstrous fraud, in order to express his contempt for Christianity. He pretended to be converted, and asked permission in a meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association to confess the Lord Jesus publicly by leading in prayer.

Of course his request was gladly granted, but meanwhile he had carefully prepared a prayer addressed to the Unknown God. It was filled with horrible irreverence, and throughtfully planned insult of the Saviour. Spreading the manuscript before him on a seat, he kneeled down and commenced to read his ribaldry, when his voice was suddenly hushed, and his body was heard to fall upon the floor. The young men who were present hastened to him, but found that he was dead, and in unspeakable awe they carried forth the corpse, the ghastly pallor of the face and the stony stare of the eyes haunting them, as they bore all that was left of the scoffer to his home.

Ever and anon God causes his voice to be heard, and lets his hand be seen among the children of men, at least enough to show that his eye is still upon them, notwithstanding the intervention of natural laws. If the most credible testimony ever given can be believed, the testimony of thousands and tens of thousands of the best men and women who live, there are numerous and thoroughly authenticated instances and answer to prayer in healing the body, and why should there not be instances of destroying the body, when iniquity has reached the height of blasphemy? If there are not many instances of the latter kind, it only proves the long-suffering of God, but that long-suffering, despised and set at naught, may give place, and sometimes it does give place, to sudden and overwhelming judgment. "God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly shall they be wounded." (Ps. 64:7). "He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." (Prov. 29:1).

It is a serious thing to belittle the claims of Jesus Christ to our faith, respect and obedience, even by the confession of his very enemies. Hear Rousseau's testimony: Measure Jesus by the shadow he has cast into the world; no, by the light he has shed upon it. Shall we be told such a man never lived? the whole story is a lie? Suppose that Plato and Newton never lived. But who did their works and thought their thought? It takes a Newton to forge a Newton. What man could have fabricated a Jesus? None but a Jesus. . . It is more inconceivable that a number of persons should agree to write such a history, than that one should furnish the subject of it. The Jewish authors were incapable of the diction, and strangers to the morality, contained in the Gospel. The marks of its truth are so striking and inimitable, that the inventor would be a more astonishing character than the hero."

Hear Strauss' testimony: "As little as humanity will ever be without religion, as little will it be without Christ. . . He remains the highest model of religion within the reach of our thought; and no perfect piety is possible without his presence in the heart."

Hear Renan's testimony: "Repose now in thy glory, noble founder! Thy work is finished! Thy divinity is established! . . Between thee and God there will be no longer any distinction. Complete conqueror of death, take possession of thy kingdom, whither shall follow thee, by the royal road which thou hast traced, ages of worshipers. Whatever may be the surprises of the future, Jesus will never be surpassed. His worship will grow young without ceasing; his legend will call forth tears without end; his sufferings will melt the noblest hearts; all ages will proclaim that, among the sons of men, there is none born greater than Jesus."

Surely such testimony, coming from those who labored with whatever measure of learning was given them to destroy the cause of Christ, should make young men pause before they speak lightly of his person and character. The argument is not wholly on the side of infidelity, infidels themselves being the judges. On the other hand a long line of innumerable witnesses for eighteen hundred years will rise up as witnesses that he is worthy of all confidence; and if this is so, alas! alas! alas! for the doom that shall sooner or later overtake the despisers of his offered grace.—Rev. J. H. Brookes, in The Truth.

AGNOSTICISM AND RELIGION.

A letter recently written by Prof. Huxley to the editor of the Agnostic Annual, but not intended for publication, casts some new light upon some of the questions of the day. Prof. Huxley claims that he invented the word agnostic to describe that class of persons who "confess themselves hopelessly ignorant concerning a variety of matters, about which metaphysicians and theologians, both orthodox and heterodox, dogmatize with the utmost confidence." He is somewhat surprised to see how a sect has been built up on a confession of ignorance, and he suspects that if a general council of the Agnostic church was called and his case passed under review that he would be called a heretic. So he offers a more specific definition of the term, and an expression of his personal judgment in relation to some of the questions involved in the term which has come into general use. He says:

1. "Agnosticism is of the essence of science, whether ancient or modern. It simply means that a man shall not say he knows or believes that which he has no scientific grounds for professing to know or believe.

2. "Consequently, agnosticism puts aside not only the greater part of popular theology, but also the greater part of popular anti-theology. On the whole, the bosh of heterodoxy is more offensive to me than that of orthodoxy, because heterodoxy professes to be guided by reason and science, and orthodoxy does not.

3. "I have no doubt that scientific criticism will prove destructive to the forms of supernaturalism which enter into the constitution of existing religions. On trial of any so-called miracle the verdict of science is, Not proved. But true agnosticism will not forget that existence, motion, and law-abiding operations in nature are more stupendous miracles than any recounted by the mythologies, and that there may be things, not only in the heavens and earth, but beyond the intelligible universe, which 'are not dreamt of in our philosophy.' The theological gnosis would have us believe that the world is a conjurer's house; the anti-theological gnosis talks as if it were a dirt pie, made by two blind children, Law and Force. Agnosticism simply says that we know nothing of what may be beyond phenomena."

The only matter that claims consideration in this letter is not the statement that science has settled down to the conviction that "so-called" miracles, that is the biblical narratives of the supernatural, are "not proved," but that it assumes they can not be proved. But the question is not put in respect to exhibitions of power under intelligence, for he sees the physical world full of "stupendous miracles" that cast all the religious records into the shade. But how does his position in fact differ from that which he condemns? He does not know that the supernaturalism of the Bible is not true; the most that he can intelligently and honestly affirm is that there is sufficient ground to affirm that miracles no longer occur. This taken with the greatest confidence in his scientific knowledge would only arouse distrust. But Christianity has wrought out by legitimate methods effects which out to dispel this distrust. There is nothing in the present conditions of the physical world corresponding to some of its earliest history; but we do not doubt its former condition, since the present seems naturally to flow out of it. And so in regard to the Christian religion; we can not account for what it is to-day without accepting the general narrative of its supernaturalism; and this the more certainly since the facts of spiritual religion which had their beginning with the New Testament history are as active to-day as they were then. Christianity from the beginning has planted itself on the statement that it is the power of God unto salvation—that is the work which it actually performs in the presence of all men.—Central Christian Advocate.

PRAISING GOD.

Most of the sneers at Christianity arise from total misconceptions of its truths. For example, none is more effective as an appeal at once to the reason and to ridicule, than this—that God is represented by Christianity as delighting in flattery—in the praise, and adulation of his creatures. And, in support of this, here is the universal fact that the prayers and songs of Christians are full of aspirations of praise, and that these are everywhere regarded as pleasing to God. Hence it is inferred that Christians believe that God loves flattery. This is a stinging sneer at the Christian's supposed, but falsely supposed, conception of God. If it were true, it would show that the Christian's idea of God and of his worship is unworthy not only of God, but unworthy of upright and candid men; the truth, as every Christian knows, is this: The Christian feels himself to be under infinite obligations to God. He is sometimes so overwhelmed with the sense of obligation, and so filled with love and gratitude to the infinitely loving Father that his tongue is dumb. What can he say, or what can he do? "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his gifts to me?" He has nothing to offer that God has not given him—nothing that God needs. What can he do but utter, as best he can, in a feeble way, his sense of gratitude and his love, in words of adoration and thanksgiving? It is not the praise that pleases God—it is the heart overflowing with love that pleases him. It is because the heart longs to be rid of sin, and to be pure, humble, grateful, and full of kindness to all God's creatures. Love always expresses itself in terms of endearment; and where the object of love is a being so majestic as God, it must express itself in terms of adoration. The Christian's desire and longing prayer is that God should give him something worthy for him to return to God as a fitting expression of gratitude. Give me eternity that I may serve Thee adequately. Let me have swift feet for thy errands. Use me anywhere and in any way in thy service. My highest honor and highest delight will be to do thy will, O Thou infinitely good, glorious, majestic and loving One! That is the spirit that prompts praise and thanksgiving. It is further than the east is distant from the west from flattery or adulation.—Interior.

The well known English writer on political subjects, Mr. T. H. S. Escott, editor of "The Fortnightly Review," will contribute to the July Century a careful and critical estimate, including some anecdotes, of John Bright as an orator and a parliamentarian. He concludes that the great English radical has an innate conservatism which has saved him from extravagance, and although he considers him neither a great administrator nor legislator, he shows why he was indispensable to the legislation of his time—as an "eminently faithful representative of the English character." A frontispiece engraving after a full-length photograph accompanies the article.

SHEPHERD. Read John 10.

The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures. Psa. 23: 1. 2.

1. The Eastern shepherd is often the owner of the sheep. 1 Sam. 17: 34; Psa. 100: 3.
2. He goes before the sheep. Psa. 80: 1.
3. Knows every one by name. John 10: 3, 4.
4. Leads them to good pasture. Ezek. 34: 14, 15.
5. Seeks those that have gone astray. Luke 15: 3–7.
6. Bestows special care on the weak. Isa. 40: 11.
7. He defends the sheep. John 10: 11, 12; 1 Pet. 5: 8.

A WORD TO THE BOYS.

I wonder if you know how much everybody is expecting of you, Will and Frank.

I never pass you on the street with your books under your arm; I never return your polite salutations without thinking that there is a world of work waiting for you, and you will be in the very midst of it in ten or fifteen or twenty years from now.

By the way, how charming it is to see that boys all over are very much more courteous than they were a while ago. Off comes the lad's cap whenever he meets mamma or sister or any one of mamma's friends on the highway. His "I beg pardon" is ready if he is obliged to pass before you or does not hear what you say. And it is very, very seldom that one sees a boy, whether rich or poor, occupying a seat while an old or feeble gentleman or lady is left to stand.

There is certainly an improvement in good manners among our boys.

Boys in these days should be wide awake. There are numerous traps and snares specially set for them, which I wish they could be persuaded to avoid.

One is contact with impure companions. No matter how clever, how manly-looking, or how handsome a certain big fellow of your acquaintance may be, if you hear him using profane language or speaking sneeringly of his parents, have nothing to do with him. Our comrades help to make us.

Another bit of advice I would give you is this. Avoid silly, sensational stories, particularly those which tell of crimes and hair-breadth escapes aud unlikely happenings generally, and are sold for ten cents or less at the bookstands. The very pictures on these publications are enough to make one shudder.

Besides, there are plenty of good books which are vastly more entertaining than anything these catch-penny dreadfuls have to offer you. If you do not know where to find such, ask your Sunday-school teacher, or pastor, or some older friend who cares for boys and likes to see them happy.

Go to church where your parents go. Do not get into the bad habit of roving about from church to church. Even though it may not be insisted upon at home, go always with the family, and sit in your place in the family pew.

Be attentive to your sister—just as attentive as you are to Tom's or Ned's sister. Never let her feel that she has need of an escort or a companion while she has a brother.

Pray every day and never omit your morning prayers. Some people think that it is quite enough to pray at night. But morning prayer is just as needful and just as important. Pray to be kept from temptation and delivered from evil.

While still a boy stand up for Jesus. Come out boldly, enter the church and own your Saviour. We want an army of young men to fight the Lord's battles, and we want you to be of their number.—Intelligencer.

"PUFFING BILLY."

One bright day in June, 1781, a group of miners who had just finished their work were standing around Wylam Pit, near New Castle, England.

Word was passed from ene to another that a baby boy had been born in old Bob's cabin. Old Bob, the engineman at the pit, had a houseful of children already, but he and his wife had plenty of love for the newcomer, whom they called Geordie.

Wee Geordie Stephenson was not born with a silver spoon in his mouth. His father's house was a rough hut, with unplastered walls and a floor of clay.

Geordie began to work when he was less than seven years old, at two-pence per day. A lady paid him this sum for looking after her cows. When a little older, he was taken on at the colliery as a "pitcher," receiving six-pence a day, and at fourteen he became his father's assistant at a shilling a day. A year or two later he was given the charge of an engine of his own. It became his pet, and never had better care.

At eighteen years of age, George Stephenson could not read. He was wide awake, and had a great longing for knowledge, but did not understand the alphabet. This could not be borne.

He went to a night school, and paid three-pence a week to be taught spelling, reading and writing, and soon a Scotch minister who knew him undertook to teach him figures. He worked very hard, and made great progress.

In his leisure hours, when he was not busy with his engine, or studying, he made and mended shoes. Bit by bit he saved a little money, and by and by was able to marry.

I suppose you are wondering what all this has to do with Puffing Billy. Have patience; I am coming to that part of my story.

Though James Watt had invented the working steam-engine, it was George Stephenson who first laid rails, found out what the locomotive could do when attached to cars, and sent the iron horse spinning along the line. His first locomotive was called Puffing Billy.

If you were to peep into some of the public journals of the England of 1825, you would laugh at the fright the people felt at this monster, which fed on coals and water, and flew over the road at the rate of eighteen miles an hour. Some thought it was like witchcraft. Others gravely said that one might as well be shot off by a rocket at once as put themselves at the mercy of such a machine as this.

George Stephenson kept quietly on, plodding at everything he attempted, until he had found out his secrets. Whatever he did he did with all his might. When men opposed him he did not lose his temper, but only said, "Wait awhile and you will see."

"Suppose, Mr. Stephenson," said a grumbling somebody, thinking he was advancing a terrible objection to the new iron horse—"suppose a cow should happen to be on your line?"

"Well," replied Stephenson, very coolly, "it would be a bad job for the coo."

So it is all through life, boys. When a brave, wise man has a new and brilliant thought, it will never be put a stop to by any "coo."—Harper's Young People.

A BOY'S RELIGION.

If a boy is a lover of the Lord Jesus Christ he cannot lead a prayer-meeting or be a church officer or a preacher, but he can be a godly boy in a boy's way and in a boy's place. He ought not to be too solemn or too quiet for a boy. He need not cease to be a boy because he is a Christian. He ought to run, jump, play, climb and yell like a real boy. But in it all he ought to show the spirit of Christ. He ought to be free from vulgarity and profanity. He ought to eschew tobacco in every form, and have a horror of intoxicating drinks. He ought to be peaceable, gentle, merciful, generous. He ought to take the part of small boys against large boys. He ought to discourage fighting. He ought to refuse to be a party in mischief, to persecution, to deceit. And above all things he ought now and then to show his colors. He need not always be interrupting a game to say he is a Christian; but he ought not to be ashamed to say that he refuses to be something because it is wrong and wicked, or because he fears God or is a Christian. He ought to take no part in the ridicule of sacred things, but meet the ridicule of others with a bold statement that for all things of God he feels the deepest reverence.—Royal Road.

TEMPERANCE.

A TEMPERANCE PLEA BEFORE THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Through the efforts of Senator Henry W. Blair, of New Hampshire, says the Inter Ocean, the National W. C. T. U. had a hearing before the Committee on Resolutions of the National Republican Convention. The delegation consisted of Senator Blair, Miss Frances E. Willard, President of National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mary B. Willard, editor of the Union Signal, Miss Helen L. Hood, Corresponding Secretary State of Illinois. Leave being granted, Miss Willard spoke as follows:

Gentleman: The temperance women of America have never before asked for one moment of your time. Thousands of them have worked and prayed for your success in the heroic days gone by, but up to this hour they have laid no tax on the attention of the people's representatives in Presidential convention assembled. But though the position is a new one, I cannot count myself other than at home in your presence, gentlemen, as you represent that great party, which, on the prairies of Wisconsin, my honored father helped to build, and whose early motto roused my girlish enthusiasm, "Free soil, free speech, free labor, and free men." But I rejoice to-day in the sisterhood of the women's party—the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—where I may march side by side with the brilliant Southern leader, Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, who, in our new anti-slavery war, the fight for a free brain, is my beloved coadjutor.

I am here in no individual character, but as the delegated representative of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of forty eight States and Territories, including the District of Columbia. Our society is the lineal descendant of that whirlwind of the Lord known as the "Woman's Temperance Crusade," of 1874, and stands not only for total abstinence and prohibition, but for no sectarianism in religion, no sectionalism in politics, no sex in citizenship. We recognize State rights as to the adoption of these principles, but move forward in one grand and solid phalanx—a society as well known in Florida as it is in Oregon by the results of the last ten years' work; a society that has an open hand for the Catholic as the Protestant, and for the foreign as well as the native-born.

We know that in America the great, clanging mill of government, kept in motion at enormous cost, turns out just one product, and that is protection for life and limb and property. But it seems to us women that the citadel of purity, the palladium of liberty, the home, our brothers have forgotten adequately to protect. Therefore I am here to-day to speak on behalf of millions of women, good and true, but grieved and sorrowful, to ask that the guarantees and safeguards of law shall be stripped from the saloons of my country; that their tarnished gold shall no more pollute our treasury, and that the land we love may at once and forever go out of partnership with the liquor traffic.

Gentlemen, some political party will respond to this plea from the hearts of women asking for protection from a stimulant which nerves with dangerous strength the manly arm that God meant to be woman's shelter and protection, so that man's cruelty becomes the greatest toward those he loves the best. Some party will declare that when our best beloved go forth into life's battle they shall not have to take chances so unequal in the fight for a clear brain, nor run the gauntlet of saloons legalized and set along our streets. Some party will take to heart this object lesson of "The Nation's Annual Drink Bill," shown in the chart I have had placed before your eyes to-day, with its nine hundred millions for intoxicating liquors to five millions for the spread of Christ's gospel. The Greenback convention has already received with favor this memorial. Senator Donnan, our gallant Iowa champion, has secured its reading in your own great convention and its reference to your committee. To-morrow you will act upon it. On July 8 it will be presented to the Democratic convention in this city, and on July 23 to that of the Prohibition Home Protection party in Pittsburg, Pa.

A great chief of your party who was with us as the hero of your last convention, said that not in the turmoil of politics, but at the sacred fireside hearth does God prepare the verdict of a great, free people. Let me say, gentlemen, that the party which declares for National prohibition in 1884 will be the one for which the temperance women of this land will pray and work, circulate literature, convene assemblies, and do all in our power to secure its success. Nor is the influence of these women to be forgotten or lightly esteemed, as the past has sufficiently proved. While I have tried to speak, my spirit has been sustained and soothed by the presence of that devoted army whom I am here to represent. As womanly, as considerate, as gentle as the women of the W. C. T. U. from Alabama to Wyoming would wish me to be in this presence, I have tried to be, that I might justly represent them—good natured as sunshine, steadfast as gravitation, persistent as a Christian's faith. I have no harsh word to speak of any. The liquor traffic is the awful heritage of a less wise, less kind, and less enlightened past. For its existence in this gentler age we are all more or less responsible.

Let us combine to put it away "with malice toward none, with charity for all." Daughters of heroes and sisters of patriots are those for whose dear sake I have dared to speak to-day. De Tocqueville said, "Life is neither a pleasure nor a pain; it is serious business, to be entered on with courage and in a spirit of self-sacrifice." Gentlemen, in that spirit I have tried to speak—not because I wished to be heard,, but to represent, as best I could, the homes of America in their sacred warfare against the American saloon. May God lead and guide us all into lives and deeds of tenderest charity and divinest toil for the sorrowful and weak.

Some of us have sung the Miriam song of this great party in other days, and whether we shall, e'er long, chant its requiem depends upon whether the party shall be as true to living issues of the present as it was true to living issues in the past. For

We ask you to declare in favor of submitting to the people a National Constitutional prohibitory amendment.

Gentlemen, on behalf of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I thank you for this courteous hearing.

The New York Retailer, an influential organ of the liquor traffic, in a recent editorial on "The Strength of the Enemy," says: "We call your attention to the fact that not less than one million votes are arrayed against you in the various so-called temperance societies, and almost the entire force of pulpit orators of the country. Add to this one hundred and fifty-three newspapers and periodicals 'especially devoted to the cause,' to say nothing of the lay dailies and weeklies which truckle more or less to the morbid and bigoted public sentiment that tolerates sumptuary legislation." We are thus reminded by the enemy that in votes and influence the temperance people of the country hold the balance of power, and are able at least to dictate what sort of men shall not be nominated for the Presidency. The independent voters, who are slaves to neither party, are now far more numerous than ever before. Let all papers who believe in true morals proclaim with certain sound before the nominating conventions assemble, that no man who has made the White House an abettor to the intemperate habits of the country can ever be returned to that place by the American people. The man who heads the ticket must be, in order to election, one who at any rate has not dodged the temperance issue, and either President or Vice President ought to represent that great and growing class, the prohibitionists.—Miss Willard.

The extraordinary peril to which a beer-drinker is subject is evinced in the death of W. J. Flynn, of Chicago, from a slight bruise, and we now find published the following: "Men working about the English breweries, drinking beer constantly, dare not so much as scratch their hands on a nail without fear of lockjaw, or strike their shins against a step lest the leg have to be amputated." Some large brewers East and West are total abstainers.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. D. B. Wilson, clerk of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod lately met in Northwood, O., writes to the Secretary of the N. C. A.: "The Synod expressed its sympathy with the work of the Association, and exhorted the people under its care to co-operate with your Association in its efforts to oppose the secret orders.

—The General Council of the Presbyterian churches, to be held at Belfast, Ireland, will assemble on Tuesday, June 24, at 11 A. M., in St. Enoch's church, when the opening sermon will be delivered by Rev. Professor Watts, D.D., chairman of the general committee.

—Twelve out of thirteen theological seminaries of the Presbyterian church reported to the General Assembly at Saratoga Springs: Fifty-five professors, seven other teachers, 516 students, 223 new students, 130 graduates, 23 post-graduates. In the libraries there are 123,986 volumes, of which 11,055 have recently been added. The total value of real estate is $1,701,431; endowments, $2,271,014; scholarship funds, $252,918; general funds, $220,917; income, $306,579, and expenses, $342,544.

—It is said that permission has been given by the Russian authorities to the Rev. J. D. Kilburn, of St. Petersburg, to visit the prisons and distribute the Scriptures among the prisoners.

—It is said that the largest contribution to the Episcopal Foreign Mission work last year was made by Mr. Charles Ping Li. The amount was $5,000, and was given to St. Luke's Hospital in Shanghai.

—A number of Moravians in Bethlehem, Pa., including five students in their Theological Seminary, volunteered to go as missionaries to Alaska, after a recent address by Rev. Dr. Sheldon Jackson, of the Presbyterian Board.

—The Indian census shows that the native Christians are increasing fifteen times as fast as the general population. The causes are ascribed to conversions from the non-Christians, a higher birth-rate, and a lower death-rate among the Christians than among Hindoos and Mohammedans.

—A London dispatch of Friday last says: "Sankey, the evangelist, and family start from Liverpool for America to-day on the steamer Britannic. Besides requiring rest, Sankey was led to return home immediately by the demands of private business. The Temple Garden meetings show no decrease of interest, and Moody continues the work single-handed. Bishop Ryle, of Liverpool, and many prominent Americans, including Marshall Field, of Chicago, were present at the services to-day."

—In the International Sunday School Convention, in session at Louisville last Wednesday, the report of the statistical secretary showed that there were in the United States and provinces 103,516 Sunday schools, with 8,056,799 scholars and 1,089,229 teachers.

—The action of the United Presbyterian General Assembly at St. Louis on the Grand Army memorial is reported in the Christian Instructor: "The Judiciary Committee, to which had been referred a memorial from Keokuk Presbytery in reference to membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, reported that they did not have the necessary evidence before them to give an intelligent judgment on the subject. Hence, they reported as follows: Resolved, That the 15th article of our Testimony, which relates to secret societies, is sufficiently explicit and comprehensive, and that the application of the principles belongs primarily to sessions and Presbyteries. This report provoked considerable discussion, as it appeared to many to be evasive, and satisfactory to but few. Much contradictory testimony in relation to the order in question was elicited in the course of the discussion; some declaring positively that they knew it to be a secret-pledged order, and others that it is nothing of the kind. This discrepancy can charitably be accounted for by those who know that the order is working under different rituals in different localities. A motion was made to recommit with instructions to give an explicit answer, yes or no. This motion was voted down by a large majority. After further discussion another amendment was offered to the effect that membership in the G. A. R. is consistent with the principles of the United Presbyterian church. In support of this motion Rev. M. S. McCord argued that we should do this for the sake of consistency. 1. Because there are undoubtedly good, Christian men in the order. 2. Other and larger churches admit members of the order. 3. It is a secret order, and we have in many churches members of other secret orders, such as Freemasons and Odd-fellows. 4. This, like communion in other churches, and hymn singing and instrumental music should be left with the sessions of the church. This sarcastic speech was cut short by a motion of Rev. Joseph Kyle to refer the matter to a committee to report positively yea or nay, with their reasons, to the next Assembly. This motion carried by a large majority.

A REMARKABLE ANSWER TO PRAYER.

C. B. Ward, missionary at Secunderabad, India, whose letter to the Cynosure its readers had lately the pleasure of reading, prints in his paper, the India Methodist Watchman, this touching account of an answer to a prayer for healing:

On the eve of March 26, '84, the writer left Secunderabad, Deccan, for a trip to Pramoor, 75 miles interior, on the Lord's business. While getting ready for his departure, in the cool of the evening, covered with perspiration consequent upon drinking a cup of hot cocoa, he stood for perhaps two minutes before an open window. A stiff, cool breeze was blowing, and the consequence was on the spot sensations which assured him he had taken cold. In America the writer has often suffered with severe colds, but all of them settled invariably in the head. In India he has frequently suffered from colds, and they invariably have settled in the chest and lungs, causing more or less sufferings of an asthmatic nature. Leaving Secunderabad we found ourselves at Bolarum, a little more than six miles away, at 1 A. M. We concluded to lie down under a tree for a few hours' sleep, and resume journey in the early morning. As we spread our blanket beneath the banyan tree we were conscious of a severe cold on the lungs. We went to sleep. About two hours later we were awakened with the most suffocating sensations of severe asthma. Breathing was extremely painful; lying down was impossible, and fever seemed imminent if nothing worse. We walked the road for a few minutes in vain for relief. It seemed clear that in this state we could not go on our journey, and might be severely ill. Our suffering for about twenty minutes was intense. Severe coughing set in which tore the lungs painfully. In our sudden affliction we fell upon our knees and pleaded with Jesus for a perfect cure at once. God gave by the Holy Ghost liberty of faith uncommon. This promise came forcibly to mind: "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name I will do it." Coughing almost prevented audible prayer when we knelt first. But how shall I praise the prayer-hearing Jesus! In less than two minutes as I prayed, coughing ceased, the pain left my lungs, the suffocating sensations departed utterly—all feeling of tightness loosened up in my chest, the feverish feeling took flight, pain fled from my head, and praising God I fell in three minutes more into a sweet, intensely refreshing sleep to awake at break of day without the slightest trace of any cold or the customary consequences of a cold. I generally suffer in my lungs a week or more in cases of taking cold, in some cases severely. One week has now passed. I was that night in answer to prayer perfectly saved in a minute of time by the loving Jesus from the cold and all its consequences so far as I know. I started out in this testimony thinking to hide behind a "we." But I cannot do so. Praise God through Jesus Christ by the Holy Ghost for this remarkable sudden answer to prayer. This word of testimony may encourage some other sufferer to look to Jesus as I did in a needy hour. If so, bless the Lord for ever and ever. I've long believed in faith healings. This is my first very striking experience in the matter.

A CHICAGO CITY MISSION.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 6, 1884.

Editors Christian Cynosure,

DEAR FRIENDS:—You know I have long been bitterly opposing Christians attending theaters. It will probably surprise you some when I tell you I am now attending theater regularly twice a week, and have not missed attending on the Sabbath since the first day of last April. You know the old Adelphi theater (that is situated about half a block below our office), and that has for so many years been a power in the hands of Satan for leading souls into the eternal pit. The first day of last April this theater opened under a new manager. The same chairs, the same private boxes, the same stage, and the same scenery that was used by the devil was left in there, but new actors appeared on the stage, new songs were sung, a new play introduced, and has been presented every evening and twice on the Sabbath ever since the opening. I attended (in fact was one of the actors), the first night, and became so enraptured with the play that I have not even failed to attend every Sabbath since. The new play is Salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, the power that moves the actors is the Holy Ghost, and the spirit that now permeates this old theater is the Spirit of the living God. Praise his holy name.

Through the kindness of some of our wealthy citizens money was furnished for the purpose of hiring this old theater and converting it into a Gospel mission, and Bro. Kirkland, evangelist of Brooklyn, N. Y., was put in charge of the work. There has scarcely been a day passed since the opening of this place for God but that from one to a score of souls have resolved to leave the path of sin and live for God. O what a change! Many a person has gone into that old theater with a light heart and filled pocketbook, only to wake up next morning and find his pocketbook empty and himself behind the iron bars in some cell. And our dear Lord only knows how many young people have had their character here destroyed forever, and because of the work done here, many and many a soul will suffer throughout the endless ages of eternity.

But this is all changed now. Yes, glory to God, it is changed, and constantly we are hearing here the praises of God and shouts of victory from those who but a short time since took delight in cursing the name of our God, and in acts of iniquity too bitter to be told. Some tell us that the days of miracles have passed, but I do not read of greater miracles having been performed than those the Lord Jesus is now performing in this old theater. Souls that have been born in sin, rocked in the cradle of iniquity, and reared in crime are here freed from the bonds of Satan by the power of God, and men are lifted out of themselves and placed on the solid Rock, Christ Jesus; sanctified, soul, body and spirit and enabled to walk in the sunlight of the glorious countenance of the Son of God. Men who have long been bound hand and foot by a strong passion for liquor are here made as free as a child from the appetite by the power of God. The sick are here anointed for healing and are healed of the diseases Satan has afflicted them with, and the work that is being done here in the name of the Lord Jesus is too wonderful to be told.

I want to give you one testimony. One of the boys got up the other evening and said about as follows:

"Boys, only a short time ago I was a worse man than any man in this house. Whenever I got a dollar I would spend it for whisky. All I wanted was whisky; would spend my money all for whisky, and go through the streets with my toes out of my boots, my knees out of my pants, and my elbows out of my coat sleeves; and many a night when the thermometer has been below zero have I gone and slept in a box car. But, blessed be his holy name, I came to Jesus and he took the appetite for whisky out of me and gave me work to do, and made me happy; and now after having worked only sixty days, although I have had three square meals a day and a spring bed every night to sleep on, I have forty dollars in my pocket. Bless his holy name!"

Such are the testimonies that are now given in the Adelphi Gospel Theater, by persons who but a short time since in this same place rolled sin under their tongues as a sweet morsel. Glory to God!

Yours in Christ, WM. E. CATLIN.

AT THE OLD ADELPHI.

The gospel meetings held at the old Adelphi Theatre on the West Side, are bearing good fruit under the direction of the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Kirkland. Mr. Kirkland is a member of the New York and Brooklyn Association of Congregational Ministers, and began his work here in August last. Since April 1st meetings have been held every evening at the old Adelphi Theatre, and on each Sunday morning, when the attendants are furnished with a substantial breakfast, free of charge. This move has had the effect of drawing to the meetings many poor men without means, and has largely aided in the success of the work, by attracting many out of employment. At the meeting yesterday morning about sixty men were in attendance, the majority of whom took an active interest in the exercises. The services were opened by Mr. Kirkland with singing, followed by an earnest prayer. Several selections from the Scriptures were then read, at the conclusion of which a hymn was sung. Several members of the congregation detailed their experience in the change of heart that had come to them, and appealed to those yet without faith to seek the Lord. The proceedings were most interesting, and evidenced what patient, unselfish, zealous Christians can accomplish in a field where the Gospel is but little carried. Breakfast followed, and was partaken of with evident relish. A few inspiring Gospel songs were sung, the benediction pronounced, and the audience quietly dispersed. These free breakfasts are furnished every Sunday morning, through the liberality of three philanthropic citizens of Chicago, Messrs. J. V. Farwell, T. W. Harvey, and J. S. Smithson, who have from the beginning borne the entire expense of conducting the meetings and furnishing the food. Mr. Kirkland is hopeful of extending his field of labor, which will be done as others liberal and charitable assist in the work by contributing the necessary means to carry it on.—Inter Ocean.

LODGERY.

—The Ohio Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias met in Canton, May 28th, and the next meeting will be held in Springfield. The Supreme Lodge of this order meets in Toronto, Canada.

—The National Union is a seeret society with branehes among the tradesmen, elerks and professional people, which organized its first council in Chicago last Oetober. There are now some eighteen "counеils," who want a hall for their meetings.

—The San Francisco Chronicle of May 14, devotes an immense extra sheet to the eorner stone laying of the new temple to the worship of Odd-Fellowship which took place that day· It prints the namcs of all the members of the 314 lodges of the State, filling about thirty-seven columns of fine type.

—Thc Chief, of Troy, Kansas, says that strong efforts arc being made to induee the Irish Orangemen to oppose Blaine, beeause they say he has Catholic tendeneies; and a secret order ealled the "Seven" is in existence, the objeet of whieh is to oppose all persons who are friendly to Catholics, and will therefore oppose Blaine.

—A short time ago the members of Hudson River Lodge, No. 57, Matteawan, N. Y., conceived the brilliant idea of making money by the lottery process. They sent circulars and tickets in every direction. Grand Chaneellor John Van Nort, of New York, promised to take measures against the lodge, but we havc seen no notiee of its suspension or punishment.

—The organ of the "Ancient Order of United Workmen" of Indiana reports the assessments and other taxes and accounts demanded of each of the 104 lodges of that organization. The total demand for one month according to the statement in the March number of the organ is $5,947.60. As the order numbered some 2,400 members, the demands of their Grand Lodge are thus seen to be over $2.00 per month, which sum must have a considerable inerease from loeal dues and expenses for parades, etc.

—Many people will be surprised to learn that thc celebrated Ku Klux Klan was originally a pleasure club of less than ten young men, who came together oecasionally for an evening of harmless fun. In the July Century, Rev. D. L. Wilson, of Pulaski, Tenn., the birth-place of the Klan, will furnish a remarkable eontribution to history in an account of its origin, progress, and final disbandment after laws against it had been passed by several of the State governments. For obvious reasons no names are given, but the statements are vouched for as being authentic.

—The Odd-fellow order up to September 1, 1883, showed the following statisties:

Sovereign Grand Lodge	1
Independent Grand Lodges (Germany and Australia)	2
Subordinate Grand Eneampments	42
Subordinate Encampments	1,876
Subordinate Grand Lodges	60
Subordinate lodges	7,803
Encampment members	85,749
Lodge members	510,414
Total initiations from December 31, 1829, to December 31, 1882,	1,273,368
Total receipts for same time, $92,838,-831.83.
Total relief	$34,690,988.23
Per cent of relief	37½

Where's the charity?

—The Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias of Illinois on the occasion of a recent celebration of the order, closed his announcement with the following dubious eompliment to the habits and morals of his subordinates: "In issuing this general dispensation it must be clearly understood that in cases where balls, entertainments, or anything of that character is held in the name of the order, or the regalia, jewels or insignia of the order worn, no beer, liquor or any intoxicating beverages shall be allowed to be used, sold or given away in the room in which said ball or entertainment is held; neither shall any lodge or organization of the order run, or cause to be run, for their own profit, any bar for the sale of said beer, liquor or intoxicating beverages in or about said room."

—The order known as Patriarchal Circle, which was compelled to separate itself from the Odd-fellow order some two years sinee, has issued the following as the qualifieations for membership: "The action of the Supreme Temple at its special session in removing the R. P. D. qualification omitted to substitute anything therefor. Therefore the undersigned, authorized at the above-named session to provide for exigencies until the next annual meeting, hereby declare that the qualification for membership in the Patriarchal Circle shall be that the applicant must believe in a Supreme Being, Preserver and Governor of all things. He shall be a white male person not under 21 years of age, of good moral character, having some respectable known means of support, and exempt from all infirmities which may prevent his gaining a livelihood."

—The following item from the Inter Ocean of Apr. 18th tells us something of a peculiar secret order which has not yet made itself prominent: "An event of considerable importance in Masonic circles will take place to-day. Medina Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine will be visited by members of the Imperial Council of the United States, located in New York City, and representatives of Mecca Temple, also of New York. This order is composed of Masons of the rank of Knights Templar and higher degrees. It is largely social in its character, furnishing a medium for fraternal meetings of the members of all commanderies and lodges represented. The Medina Temple, of Chicago, has a large and constantly growing membership, and there temples in Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Bridgeport, Conn., Cleveland, and Cincinnati. About twenty Nobles of the Medina Temple started to meet their illustrious guests last night in a speeial Pullman car from the Grand Trunk depot, at 8: 30 o'clock. The ear was left at Valparaiso, Ind., and this morning it will bc coupled to the incoming train, when the guests will be escorted to the Medina Temple in this city. The usual monthly meeting of the Chicago lodge will be held to-morrow night at 10 o'clock in Oriental Hall, when the ritualistic work of the order of the Imperial Council will be exemplified." It is to be noted that this lodge meeting began at 10 o'cloek Saturday night.

THE BUSIEST PLACE IN CHICAGO.—Any person who visits the Advertising Agency of Lord & Thomas, McCormick Block, will not doubt that they are transacting an immense business with the newspapers of the country. A thorough knowledge of their business, coupled with energy and a liberal use of their own medicine, has placed them in the front rank of advertising agencies in the United States.

We will not state the exact amount, but we will say that during the past few weeks they have closed contracts which will aggregate hundreds of thousands of dollars, and this business has been secured in competition with the Eastern agencies, thus demonstrating their claim of possessing unequalled "facilities."

Their business offices are veritable hives of industry, every member of their efficient corps of employes being furnished with work enough to develop their working energies. We think this firm might well adopt as their motto, "Courtesy and Energy." The Herald congratulates them on their merited success.—Chicago Herald, May 10.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it nnmerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which ran through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete au armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lessou in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

A POLE STAR

In the heavens of civil and religious liberty

—THE—

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

A 16-page weekly journal, published by the

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,

an organization whose object is "to expose, withstand and remove Secret Societies....and other anti-Christian Movements."

Able writers from all parts of our own and from foreign lands, and from the different denominations, contribute to its columns. The claims an advanced position among the advocates of Christian Education, Temperance, Government Reforms, Sabbath Observance, and Bible Holiness, to which it adds a thorough exposition and critical analysis of Secret Societies, pointing out both the evils and the remedy. In brief, it is the paper having opinions on all practical living questions and the courage to express them.

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

It emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God, and that Christ must be acknowledged KING OF NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

In addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS.

HOW TO CAN FRUIT AND SAVE YOUR SUGAR.—I presume all know that there are several kinds of sugars. Cane sugar, grape sugar or glucose, and milk sugar are the prineipal varieties. Of these, cane sugar stands pre-eminent for its sweetening properties, being rated at 100, while grape sugar is only rated at 40. In other words, it takes two and one-half pounds of grape sugar to equal one pound of cane sugar. I presume, however, that your readers do not all know what is known to every chemist, that when cane sugar and fruit are boiled together the acid of thc fruit causes a chemical change in thc sugar to take place, which changes the sugar to grape sugar.

I do not suppose they intend to throw away six pounds of sugar out of every ten thcy usc in the preparation of fruit. Yet sueh is the fact. The have, as a result of the boiling, tcn pounds of glucose whieh is only equal to four pounds of sugar; and besides this loss the fruit has, to a great extent, lost its true flavor, and is, of eourse, inferior in quality to that sweetened with cane sugar. How can fruit be sweetenod with cane sugar without making this change and loss of flavor? As that is the prineipal objeet of this paper I will answer the question.

First, cook your fruit until it is "done;" then, if you have time, let it get eold, and then add your sugar, mixing it well; let it stand an hour or more. The sugar by that time will be absorbed by the fruit. If you have not time to wait, add your sugar when it is only partially cool, and you will only lose 5 or 6 per cent of the sugar.

In thc making of preserves there are two ways to avoid the loss of sugar. One is to use only glueose and fruit in equal parts, as it is much cheaper to buy glucose than to make it of the higher prieed cane sugar. Anothcr way is to eook your fruit as above described, then add one-half a pound of sugar to the pound of fruit and seal up in cans, or steam the fruit whcn practieable, lay it in the cans and fill up with hot syrup made so as to contain the proper proportion of sugar, and seal. You will then save nearly all the sugar. Preserves made in this way will ferment unless sealed in air-tight eans.

In the ordiuary canning of fruit no sugar should be used, as a part of it turns to glucose while hot, and if the fruit in the can ferments through some imperfection in the process, as frequently happens, your sugar is lost entirely. Open your cans an hour or more before meal time, add your sugar, mix it well and let it stand; the sugar will thoroughly permeate the fruit by that time, and no sugar is lost.

I supposc everybody uses glass cans to a greater or less extent. A good many years ago a lady taught me how to fill a cold glass can with boiling fruit without the dangcr of breakage. I have seen the plan tried often enough to have entire faith in it.

Place in the empty can a spoon that is long enough to reach from the bottom to the top of the can, pour in your boiling fruit, remove the spoon and seal. The can will not brcak. Please do not ask me to explain the philosophy of it, as I dislikc very much to plead ignorancc, so I hope you will ask some of the knowing ones in your vicinity and let me know the explanation.—Indiana Farmer.

MEDICINAL VALUE OF LEMONADE.—Many people know the benefit of lemonade before breakfast, but few know how it is more than doubled by taking it at night also. The way to get the better of a bilious system without the use of pills or quinine is to take the juiee of one, two or three lcmons, as the appetite craves, in as much ice water as it makes pleasant to drink, without sugar, before going to bed. In the morning on rising, or half an hour beforc breakfast, take the juiee of one lemon in a goblet of water. This will clear the system of humors and bile with mild efficacy, without any of the weakeuing effects of calomel or Congress water. Pcoplc should not irritate the stomach by eating lemons clear. The powerful acid of the juicc, which is almost corrosive, infallibly produces inflammation after a while, but diluted so that it does not burn the throat, it does its full medicinal work without harm, and when the stomach is clear of food has abundant opportunity to work on the system thoroughly.—Fruit Recorder.

FARM AND GARDEN.

RAISING POULTRY.—We have found milk one of the best kinds of diet for young chickens soon after they come from the nest, to promote their health and rapid growth. Indian meal ground coarse and scalded with milk is a perfect feed for them. As they grow older grass, cabbage, or onions may be ehopped fine and added to the daily rations. A portion of the milk on dairy farms usually going to the pig trough may be diverted to the ehieken coop with great advantage. Eggs are worth twenty-five cents a dozen and poultry twenty cents a pound, when pork brings but ten cents a pound. Now is the time to give lime in some shape to hens. They arc rapidly exhausting the egg shell supply in their systems, and you must stop the drain. So give oyster and clam shells; the former are better because they are the softer. Crack them fine. By roasting them they will pulverize better. Give lime in water. Use a low pan with water and lime in it. The water will take up lime, and the hens knowing a great deal more about themselves than perhaps others do, will take what they want. Bone meal is very excellent. It may be purchased in most large towns. If you do not give the hens lime in some shape they will eat their eggs. Also give your hens pieces of old eabbages, or hang a cabbage by a limb and so near the ground that they can peck at it.—American Agriculturist.

SUCCESSIVE CROPS OF POULTRY.—Where labor is not too costly, or where, as in a large family, no account is made of the labor of children, it is possible to obtain a large income from a comparatively small floek of fowls. This is accomplished by raising sueeessive erops of chiekens during the season. The first crop should be out of the shell by February 1st, and the last installmcnt by June 15th. We arc speaking now of raising chickens for market. The first hatched will be ready for market by the first of May, and the last by Thanksgiving.

The old fowls should be disposed of in July, or as soon as their servicos as layers and mothers can be dispensed with. The successive broods should be disposed of just as soon as they will command a fair price. The earliest will bc in marketable coudition in from eight to twelve weeks. They ean never be more profitably disposed of than at that age, for as thcy increase in size priees decline, and so the extra food bestowed on them is actually thrown away. By this method of promptly disposing of the chicks as they mature, the premises do uot beeome overstoeked and the soil of the runs foul, as is the case when large flocks are kept throughout the season to be sold at the holidays. By selling off the old stock in July the greatest possible profit is obtained for them. After this date they lay but few eggs, begin to moult in the fall, and perhaps lay not a single egg before winter. The extra pound or two of flesh they put on does not pay for their keep. By killing off all surplus stoek by Thanksgiving the yards are eleared out, and opportunity is given to feed and eare well for the few that are to be kept ovcr for next season's breeding. The extra care these few receive will induce early laying and broodiness in the spring, and these two points are essential to success.—American Poultry Yard.

SIMPLE CURE FOR GAPES.—Under this heading F. D. C. writes to the Country Gentleman that the "easiest and best remedy for gapes in chickens is caustic lime, either air or water slacked. It should be dry and powdered. Take the chicken in the left hand and open the mouth, keeping it upright, and then drop a pinch of the dry lime into it. Hold in this position a few seconds until it is obliged to breathe, when it will inhale some of the lime, then let it go. One application of thc lime in this manner has cured, in my experience, every case of gapes, some of them in the last stages. After trying a number of remedies I find this the best of all, as it is simple and sure, and does not injure the chicken. The lime kills thc worms."

The American Dairyman says that there are many reasons why creamery butter, as a rule, sells higher than dairy butter. The secret of it probably lies here: It is better butter, and one prime reason for its being better is because the man who makes the butter does not own the milk, and therefore has to stand the criticism of those who furnish it. When a man has fifty or a hundred persons wondering why he does not get the highest market price for his butter, he is very apt to do it. When the butter-maker owns all the milk he is too casily satisfied with the quality of his make of butter.

CORN WORKING.—Deep working of growing eorn, says the Kansas Farmer, is not good. It tears away roots that are needed to hurry the growth of the corn. And it tends to hasten evaporation. If ground is well prepared for planting, the shallowest working which will keep the surfaee loose and destroy weeds is the best. It is a mistake to run the teeth or shovels away down where the roots ought to be enjoying absolute freedom.

My experience has been that corn fodder is superior to sorghum for cattle. The Early Amber variety whieh I have tried has a hard, woody stalk that my stoek will not eat, but they will cat the cornstalks up clean without their being cut. Both the corn and sorghum was sown thick in drills and cut at the same time in August, just as the corn was fit for boiling-ears.—William D. H., Hawley, Minn.

IN THE COILS; —OR— The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

IN BRIEF.

A Baptist minister was once asked how it was that he consented to the marriage of his daughter to a Presbyterian. "Well," he replied, "as far as I have been able to discover, Cupid never studied theology."

An Indiana girl was swinging in a hammock, when a man passed on horseback with a gun across the pommel of his saddle. The horse stumbled and jarred the gun. It went off and hit the girl in the hammock. Her mother, who was in the kitchen washing the dishes, was not hurt.

Twenty years ago six silver spoons and a silver butter-knife were missed from a table in the house of Mrs. N. Crandall at Cohoes, and suspicion rested upon a servant girl. The summer kitchen has just been raised for the purpose of making repairs, and the missing silverware has been found uninjured in a rat's nest.

One of the most prominent buildings now in New York city is the gigantic edifice just finished at a cost of $3,000,000, for the Produce Exchange. Three-fourths of the exports of the country pass through its hands and its business amounts to $10,000,000 a day. The building is rectangular in form, 300x150 feet in dimensions. The Exchange room proper is 220 feet long, 140 feet wide and sixty feet high. The Exchange now numbers 3,000 members and a seat is worth $4,100.

The Mexican government has made a contract with Mr. Oscar A. Droege to plant 2,000,000 trees in the valley of Mexico within four years. The contractor pledges himself to 80,000 ash, 35,000 willows, 120,000 poplars, 60,000 eucalyptus trees, 60,000 trœnosjapones, 60,000 mountain cypress cedars, 60,000 acacias, and 120,000 of miscellaneous varieties. The trees must be in plantations of from 50,000 to 100,000 each.

Competent authorities in France have estimated that if phylloxera be not speedily exterminated there will be no wine made in France at the end of five years from 1884. The prize offered by the French government for a method to destroy phylloxera is 300,000 franes. Five thousand plans have been sent in to the ministry of agriculture, but nothing has yet proved satisfactory for the purpose on the immense scale for which a remedy is necessary.

In the course of a recent address before the London Medical Society, Sir Joseph Fayrer gave the following account of the way the mothers among the Himalaya mountains have of putting their babies to sleep. "Near almost every village there are one or more small channels by which the water from the neighboring spring is conducted to the cultivated plots of ground for irrigation; and these channels are in parts formed of troughs hollowed out of fir trees. A piece of bark or matting is laid on the lower of two of these troughs, and on this the infant, swathed in a large mass of clothes, is so placed that the water from the upper trough falls on the vertex of the cranium, and glancing off thence, runs away under the bark or matting without further wetting the child or its clothes. Children so placed will lie asleep for hours, and their mothers leave them while they go about their daily occupation."—Popular Science News.

THE PETROLEUM INDUSTRY.—From recent statistics it appears that there are 20,000 producing oil wells in Pennsylvania, yielding at present 60,000 barrels of oil a day. It requires 5,000 miles of pipe line and 1,600 iron tanks, of an average capacity of 25,000 barrels each, to transport and store the oil and surplus stocks. There are now nearly 38,000,000 barrels of oil stored in the region in tanks. This oil would make a lake more than one mile square and ten feet deep. The money actually invested in petroleum production since 1860 is estimated to be more than $425,000,000, of which $200,000,000 was capital from New York city. Since 1880 more than twelve millions has been used in building iron tanks, and nearly as much in pipe lines, all by one corporation. The tanks cost on an average eight thousand dollars each. A 35,000 barrel tank is ninety feet in diameter and twenty-eight feet high; one hundred tons of iron are used in constructing one. The annual loss from lightning by the use of iron tanks is very great, as they form an attractive path to earth for electricity.

The speculative transactions in petroleum represent more than $400,000,000 annually. The lowest price crude petroleum ever brought was ten cents a barrel, in 1861. In 1859, when there was only one well in existence, Colonel Drake's Pioneer at Titusville, the price was $24 a barrel. Besides the 5,000 miles of pipe line in use in the oil regions there are in operation 1,200 miles of trunk pipe lines, connecting the region with Cleveland, Pittsburg, Buffalo, and New York, and lines building to Philadelphia and Baltimore. In the line between Olean and New York 16,000 barrels of oil are transported daily. These lines are all the property of the Standard Oil Company, except one between Bradford and Williamsport, Pa. The Standard employs one hundred thousand men. The product of its refineries requires the making of 25,000 oak barrels of forty gallons each, and 100,000 tin cans holding five gallons each, every day. The first American petroleum ever exported was in 1862. Charles Lockart, of Pittsburg, sent nearly 600,000 gallons to Europe in that year, and sold it for $2,000 less than the cost of transportation. In 1883 nearly 400,000,000 gallons were exported for which $60,000,000 were returned to this country.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemaeonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2 00

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

History and Minutes of the National CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. Containing the History of the National Christian Association and the Minutes of its Conventions at Syracuse, N. Y., and Pittsburg, Pa. 289 pages; cloth, 75 cents.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association. 25c. each, per doz. $1.50.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in this Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth, $1.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The President sent to the Senate a message suggesting the propriety of Congress appropriating $588,000 for the purpose of making a complete and harmonious selection of exhibits on behalf of the government for the New Orleans exposition.

—It has been reported for several weeks that Secretary Frelinghuysen had under consideration the policy of acquiring certain concessions from Nicaragua for the construction of a navigable waterway across that country from ocean to ocean, and the matter had been the subject of discussion between himself and the President and other members of the cabinet. The concessions are understood to be those made three or four years ago for an inter-oceanic canal, a project in which General Grant, Governor Morgan, S. L. M. Barlow, Captain Phelps, and others in this country, together with some people of influence in Nicaragua, were interested.

—The House of Representatives Thursday, by a vote of 146 yeas to 121 nays, struck out the Illinois Hennepin Canal section in the river and harbor bill. With this exception the bill passed.

—The House public lands committee has agreed to report favorably a bill requiring the general government to pay the State of California for school purposes five per cent of the net proceeds of all public lands sold within her boundaries since the State's admission. The amount of the proposed payment is estimated at $1,000,000.

—Developments in the failure of Middleton and Co., Washington bankers, show that charity funds, stocks, and deposits of all kinds have disappeared, and that creditors may not get a mill on the dollar.

—As was announced when Minister Sargent retired, the President and Secretary of State had determined to leave the German mission vacant until Chancellor Bismarck learns how to treat respectfully a representative of this government. As an act of retaliation Bismarck has decided to suspend relations with the United States, and Baron Eisendecker, the German Minister, to-day presented to the Secretary of State his letters of recall.

COUNTRY.

—Mr. Justice Harlan of the United States Supreme Court has decided an important case in this city against two brokers for using the United States mails for the purpose of furthering a scheme to defraud. They were fined $500 each and sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the county jail.

—Fred Erby, indicted and convicted for using the mails to forward the Louisville lottery scheme in Chicago has been fined $500.

—Samuel J. Tilden, in a letter to Daniel Manning, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee of New York, positively declines to accept a nomination for the Presidency.

—Late Wednesday night, at Key West, Fla., Frederico Gil Marrero, a Cuban, was arrested from a steamer from New York as being a dynamiter, and fuse, detonating caps, and books of instruction for the manufacture of explosives were found among his effects.

—Scores of saloon-keepers at Madison, Wisconsin, have been arrested at the instance of the Law and Order League, for selling liquor on Sunday. The evidence was obtained against them by two strangers, who narrowly escaped violence at the hands of the aggrieved saloonists when the fact became known.

—A gang of roughs, numbering 200, captured a train on the Lake Shore Railroad, near Buffalo Creek, June 9. Their intention was to take a free ride to a picnic. The engineer cut loose and ran away with the engine. A large force of officers, after a fierce battle, rescued the train and dispersed the mob.

—Dispatches from Rye Patch, Nev., announce terrific cloud-bursts in the Humboldt range of mountains. The valleys are deluged and the Central Pacific Railroad track is washed out in different places to the extent of thirty miles. It is expected the road will be fully repaired by to-morrow morning.

—A Times' El Paso, Texas, special, June 10, says: The railway bridge was washed away to-day, and intercourse with Mexico is cut off. The bridge on the Southern Pacific west of Yuma is washed out, cutting off communication between here and California.

—James D. Fish, ex-President of the Marine National Bank, was indicted by the United States Grand Jury at New York Friday, and an attachment was granted against the property of the absconder, John C. Eno.

—Upon examination at Pittsburg Friday, it was shown that President Riddle, Cashier Reiber and Thomas J. Watson, an oil broker, were partners in the oil speculations which wrecked the Penn Bank and had overdrawn $400,000. The assignee thinks the bank will be able to pay 25 per cent.

—Isaac A. Stanley, paying teller of the Cleveland National Bank of Commerce, was imprisoned Wednesday evening for embezzling $100,000 of the bank's funds. Stanley had been taking money from the reserve fund for a year past for speculative purposes.

—At Washington, Pa., Monday afternoon, ex-United States Marshal John Hall was arrested, charged with illegally retaining $153,758 of the receipts of the office.

—Since the commencement of the year no less than fifteen railroads have passed into the hands of receivers. Now there are fears that the July interest will be defaulted on a number of others.

—Upon application of the United States Trust Company, Judge Horace Russell and Theodore Houston were Monday, at New York, appointed receivers of the new West Shore road from New York to Buffalo.

—The Bank of West Virginia, at Charleston, W. Va., closed its doors Thursday morning, notwithstanding that it had received deposits up to 3 o'clock Wednesday. It is doubtful whether it can pay 20 cents on the dollar.

—Sheets of water from the clouds poured down upon Springfield, Vt., Monday last week, for three hours, the creek swelling to great proportions and rushing in different channels through the town, sweeping everything before them. The people fled in terror. In some places the seething waters made gullies twenty-five feet deep, and the total loss will reach $50,000. While the storm was in progress wind wrecked a barn, killing two persons.

—The Union depot at St. Paul was burned Wednesday night. The building was finished three years ago at a cost, exclusive of ground, of $150,000.

FOREIGN.

—Special cablegrams from Washington announcing that the United States Government has received no communication from England concerning American dynamite conspiracies against the British Government, and meditates no suppressive action, have kindled anew the spirit of irritation against the American authorities in London.

—In the House of Commons the amendment to the franchise bill in favor of female suffrage was rejected by a vote of 271 to 135.

—Turkey refuses to send a representative to the conference of the powers on the Egyptian question unless England first makes certain concessions demanded by the Sultan's government.

—Reports have reached Cairo that the rebels nine days ago massacred Hussein Pasha Khalifa, commander of Berber, and all his family: the garrison, which was faithful to the Khedive, and the European traders who remained there.

—The Mahdi has retreated from Kordofan to the almost inaccessible stronghold of Tebil Godir. His power is greatly diminished by the enmity of the Chief of the Kabbabish tribe, whose brother he killed.

—In a memorandum sent the British Government Zebehr Pasha engages to obtain the submission of the Mahdi within five weeks, on condition that he (Zebehr Pasha) be created a Viceroy of the Soudan, without paying tribute to the Egyptian Khedive, and to become a Suzerain of London. Zebehr Pasha also engages to bring General Gordon and his suit to Cairo, to stop the slave trade, hold Khartoum and the rest of the Soudan open to European commerce, and allow the free exercise of all religions.

—The riot between Orangemen and Nationalists checked a week before broke out again last Tuesday at Newry, Ireland. A perfect reign of terror existed throughout the town. Many persons on both sides were severely stoned and beaten, some of whom will probably not recover. The military and police charged the mob repeatedly, but with little success. Fresh outbreaks occurred every few minutes, and for four hours the rioters held complete control. At 10 o'clock at night the cavalry, with drawn sabers, succeeded in clearing the streets of the most violent portions of the mob and comparative quiet was restored.

—The schooner Six Brothers was lost at Baccadieu, Newfoundland, and the captain fnd thirteen men were drowned. The steamship Plover reports rescuing 45 of the sealing crew of the ice-stranded brig Confederate, but the Plover's men could not save the remaining thirty, being forced to retreat on account of the ice-nip. They approached within twelve miles of the Confederate. There were no provisions or fuel on board the brig. The crew were suffering fearfully.

—While the ferry at Thompson's Falls, near Helena, Montana, was crossing the river Sunday afternoon the cable broke and the boat went over the falls, 300 yards below. Eleven men and thirteen mules were drowned.

Mr. Moody closed the most remarkable revival work since the deys of Wesley, perhaps since Pentecost, in London. Monday night with a great re-union. Many leading clergymen were present and thousands who have first during the past winter found the new life in Christ. Mr. Moody made a long farewell address in which he urged his hearers, and especially the newly converted, to become systematized and thorough students of the Bible. Moody has himself been called the "man of one book." He is a notable example of the power of the Word of God to educate and equip one of the grandest workers for the race in this or any age.

The campaign of 1884 will give to history some remarkable political cartoons. The peculiar relations of Mr. Blaine to Masonry, prohibition and Romanism have been pointed out. Butler will be as remarkable a bundle of contradictions. He is candidate for two different parties, while already he was delegate to the third which is radically different from either. His rooms at the Palmer House were engaged weeks ago. He is not only a delegate to the Democratic convention, but is put down in the papers as a leading candidate. The nation has an unpleasant prospect in that direction.

The ordinary news agencies seldom bear such temperance arguments as that from New York, of a man with an income of $25,000 whose drunkenness is so habitual and gross that he can no longer take care of his money; or that terrible story from near Omaha. Some little boys drunk with beer were out bathing on the Sabbath, when one little fellow only eight years old was drowned in his stupid condition, and his poor companions were so helpless from the effect of the liquor that they could give him no aid.

The Senate has passed the revised anti-Mormon bill presented last winter by Mr. Hoar. The bill embodies many suggestions offered by the Utah Commission and by District Attorney Van Sile, and is intended to afford some means by which polygamy can be punished. It compels wives to testify against their husbands as to the fact of marriage, declares children born in polygamy illegitimate, takes away the ballot from women, and contains other provisions which its authors hope will cleanse the Augean stables of Utah. One clause, registration of marriages, as well as that to compel testimony, is perhaps aimed at the Endowment secret oath. But so long as the Endowment House Grand Lodge holds its place in the Mormon economy it is waste of breath to think of getting a fanatical people to obey Congress when the threats of their lodge assassins impend. If the Endowment House is broken up as police break up a brothel, laws against its oaths will be worth something. The Mormons themselves care little for the laws aimed at them. Twenty missionaries and 500 converts landed at New York Monday. Why were they not arrested as soon as they landed?

The latest prohibition and saloon compromise in Ohio, known as the Scott law, has just been through a severe strain in the Supreme Court of that State. The decision is made, not upon the law as a whole, but its separate sections. The saloon-keepers are angry because the law was not declared unconstitutional, and say the decision is nothing but a piece of political jugglery for campaign purposes; while the friends of the law are out of temper because an important section relating to the real estate is cast out The dealers vow an eternal war on the law and will put it to the severest test. All this trouble and vexation of friends and enemies would cease if Ohio would march nobly to the polls and vote for the absolute and unconditional surrender of the murderous traffic to prohibition.

The unveiling of a noble statue of Luther in Washington last month was an exultant occasion for the Protestants of America and especially for the fellow-countrymen of the great reformer. The statue is a grand and imposing one, being cast in the same mould which turned out the statue Germany herself set up at Wittemburg. Rev. Joel Swartz, D.D., of Harrisburg, a man of too noble a spirit to hold to the oaths of the lodge into whose snare he had fallen, composed the following fine poem for the occasion:

Unveil the Hero, let him stand
With us, as in the Fatherland,
A way-mark in the march of Time!
Unveil him who himself unveiled
The modern world and Hell assailed
With faith and courage all sublime.

Columbia hails Germania's son
As father of her Washington;
Nor were the son without the sire;
The freedom born of Luther's thought
Was here to forms of Justice wrought
In War's intensest furnace fire.

With Bible 'neath thy clenched hand
Upon thy granite pillar stand
Within our Nation's Capital;
And while Potomac's silvery wave
Shall wash Mt. Vernon's honored grave,
Thy name and fame shall never fall.

Should War above thy lifted eyes
Again obscure our western skies
In battle for the rights of men,
Above the cannon's deafening roar,
As in the ages gone before,
Our land shall hear thy voice again.

Mayor Harrison and the Democratic party of Chicago notoriously owe their supremacy in this city to the gamblers. The fraternity know their power, and practice their business openly and without fear of law. Great was their surprise, therefore, when the police descended on them last week Wednesday, arresting over a hundred persons and breaking up and burning thousands of dollars worth of furniture and material. A second and third raids followed, and it seems quite plain that Harrison is preparing to avoid trouble and to save the Democratic name. Were the dens in full blast when the next nominating convention meets in July, many useful members of that party would be likely to lose their portable wealth and would burden the mayor with very unwelcome complaints against his friends. It would be, moreover, a bad advertisement for Democrats to be found patronizing these places. So, unwelcome as the duty might be, it was wisest and safest to close the doors of temptation before the victims came in sight. If the Mayor would now close up the saloons, Chicago would be a safe place for the Democratic convention.

EXTRAVAGANCE.

BY REV. W. T. HOGG.

An eminent English writer has said that "Every age in its decline has exhibited the spectacle of selfish luxury side by side with abject poverty; of

'Wealth, a monster gorged
Mid starving populations.'"

A rage or mania for the lavish and prodigal expenditure of money is an evil omen in any nation. It is generally the precursor of financial panic and of national downfall and disgrace. The history of imperial Rome in its decadence affords us a marked illustration of this principle. During the period of the Decline, the representatives of the moneyed aristocracy seemed to vie with each other as to which could excel in extravagant modes of life; in luxurious and costly diet, costume, furniture, and equipage; while an immense population stood in trembling apprehension of starvation during the delay of an Alexandrian corn-ship. In numerous instances a vast fortune was squandered at a single banquet, the guests quaffing their delicious beverages from myrrhine and jewelled vases costing an almost incredible sum, and feasting on the brains of peacocks and the tongues of nightingales. We are told that in the days of Tiberius three mullets were sold for an amount equalling about twelve hundred dollars. Vitellius prepared for a certain banquet 2,000 fishes and 7,000 birds, and is said to have expended in feasts, in less than eight months, an amount that would now equal several million pounds sterling. In the rage for sumptuous and gluttonous festivity it became customary, at one time, to resort to the disgusting and worse than bestial practice of preparing for a dinner by taking an emetic.

Almost indiscribable squalor and misery abounded among the lower classes of Roman citizens, and throughout the larger portion of Italy the most expensive custom that could be afforded to a free-born population, even in winter, provided only a tunic, while the luxury of a toga was reserved, by way of honor, to the corpse. Yet at this very time the most unbounded luxury and the most extravagant self-gratification and display were common among the dignitaries of Rome. Roman ladies flaunted in attire and ornaments of the most gorgeous and expensive materials, and displayed an unheard-of splendor and richness of personal decoration. The elder Pliny states that he had himself seen Lallia Paulina attired for a betrothal feast in a robe entirely covered with pearls and emeralds, the expense of which was forty million sesterces, an amount equal to two millions, one hundred thousand eight hundred and eighty dollars, and this was known to be less expensive than some of her other dresses.

With the gluttony, sensuality, and extravagant display which abounded, crime and impurity of the grossest dye were everywhere rife, disease was prevalent, men were short-lived, and almost universal degeneracy was apparent. From the day that Rome learned and began to imitate the voluptuous practices of Greece, she had entered on a stage of fatal decline and self-degradation. The whole system, politically, socially, morally, bore unmistakable evidences of decay. There was a universal monotony and gloom which filled human life with anguish—an atmosphere of oppression which drove men to despair.

"On that hard Pagan world disgust
And secret loathing fell;
Deep weariness and sated lust
Made human life a hell."

To the reckless extravagance which threatened the interests of the nations which enacted them may be traced the origin of what are known as "sumptuary laws." These laws were designed to prohibit or limit extravagance in festivity, apparel, furniture, equipage, and in private expenditure of all kinds. Zaleucus, a celebrated law-giver of the Locri in Italy, ordained such laws, one of which decreed that no woman should wear gold, or embroidered apparel, unless she purposed to act unchastely. The legal infliction of punishment upon persons guilty of luxurious living was deemed necessary by the Roman Censors at an early date in the nation's history. The English government in an early period enacted "sumptuary laws," the last of which were abolished less than thirty years ago. Under Edward III. a law was enacted prohibiting the allowance to any person, whatever his condition or estate, of more than two courses at dinner and supper, or more than two kinds of food in each course; except on the principal festivals of the year, when the allowance was limited to three courses. Similar laws limiting the expense of personal attire and pageantry were also in vogue.

These instances are not cited as model specimens of legislative proceedings, but rather to show that legislators in various nations and ages have recognized the direct tendency of general extravagance among the population of a country to impoverish, imperil, and enervate the commonwealth, and produce widespread demoralization and degeneracy. This is a fact too potent to need the support of argument. It is generally conceded that the financial panic in our own country a few years ago was largely due to the prodigality which had characterized us as a nation. From the Executive Mansion and the palatial homes of the nation's affluent and honored men, down to the cottages of the humblest peasants, there seemed to be a perfect mania for sumptuous fare, for glitter and display, for pleasure and self-gratification, and for a generally fastidious and fashionable mode of life. A few could afford it, possibly, but the millions who were not heirs to Fortune's lavish bequests could not keep pace with the fashionable age without becoming incolved in financial embarrassment. The constant and general excess in the expense of living produced a strain which resulted in a financial crash of a most calamitous character.

Nor have we as a nation profited by the lesson as we should have done. There is to-day a spirit of extravagance and display throughout the land which threatens our national prosperity. It is manifest in almost every department of governmental administration; it is especially, and in its grossest form, visible in the political manœuvring and manipulation connected with the selection of our public officers; it enters into the rush and struggle of business life, until it must be admitted that the present methods of business involve all the risk, uncertainty, and abnormal excitement of a game of chance; it is nowhere more unblushing and shameless than in the strife of fashion, where each class in the community presses in succession closely on that which immediately precedes it, in the rivalry for display, while in many, perhaps the majority, of instances, a state of poverty bordering on bankruptcy is concealed under an exterior decoration and show which would seem to indicate affluence and independence. With many the dictates of fashion must be obeyed at every cost, and neither civil nor moral law restrains them from the most unjust measures when such measures are necessary in order that they may keep up appearances and not fall behind in the rivalry of style and magnificent display.

The following from Wilberforce on Practical Christianity is applicable to our own age and nation: "A numerous class in our days, attach themselves to the pomps and vanities of life. Magnificent houses, grand equipages, numerous retainers, splendid entertainments, high and fashionable connections, appear to constitute, in their estimation, the supreme happiness of life. Persons to whose rank and station these indulgences most properly belong often are the most indifferent to them. Undue solicitude about them is more visible in persons of inferior conditions and smaller fortunes; in whom it is detected by the studious contrivances of a misapplied ingenuity, to reconcile parade with economy, and to glitter at a cheap rate. There is an evident effort and struggle to excel in the particulars here in question; and a manifest wish to rival superiors, to outstrip equals, and to dazzle inferiors."

Nor is the manifestation of this unhallowed spirit confined to the irreligious world, but it has come to be largely predominant in the nominal or visible church. The religion of the day has taken on the spirit of pomp and display, and appeals more to the æsthetic tastes and carnal senses of men, than it does to their spiritual intentions and perceptions. It is an age of rivalry in so-called Christian denominations as to which can excel in magnificent architecture, rich and costly ornamentation, the most artistic musical display, the production of the best talent and culture for the pulpit, the most attractive entertainments and recreations for securing the patronage of worldly people, and the most gorgeous and costly display in general. And in too many instances so-called Christian churches partake more of the character of a bazaar of fashion than they do that of a temple or habitation of God. One has only to enter almost any of the numerous church edifices in our towns and cities on Lord's Day morning to see a brilliant and glittering exhibition of all the latest fashions, while he might search in vain for many weary hours, before he could find a place where God is worshiped with a spiritual devotion resembling that of the early church on and after the day of its Pentecost baptism.

A reform is most emphatically demanded in the particulars which have been noticed. The reckless prodigality which is everywhere rife, will, if unrestrained, precipitate both church and state into the depths of irrecoverable disaster and disgrace. Men are needed in the political and religious world who will sound the tocsin of alarm and warning, and who, at the risk of popularity, and in the face of the reproach and contumely it may excite, will unflinchingly lead on in the van of battle for reform until victory comes, and a better day shall dawn.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND REFORMS.

BY J. D. NUTTING.

Among the questions now gaining prominence is that of suffrage for women on political issues. And this fact is a hopeful omen. It is a sign of a broadening sweep of thought; of the progress of the individual as opposed to the mass idea of humanity, by which women and men together were lost in the sullen tide of human existence from which only fortune or talent lifted here and there a man to individualism as a ruler or genius. The herding-age of humanity is over; it has been passing since Christ individualized a plain mechanic's son into himself and started a similar process in the heart of each of his followers by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. The woman of to-day, even more than the man, is a result of this process; and that she reaches forth after a state of things in the outward world somewhat like her own soul-inheritance from Christianity within is but a fresh proof of the vitality of that power which has created the humanity of the nineteenth century from the dust of the second. That she does so can neither be denied, doubted or deprecated; it is her birthright with man's; his bounden duty, in which also she finds her highest call to be indeed a helper meet for him. And thus, in the nature of the case, every way of accomplishing the work that is open to him must be open to her also; that is, as to natural right in politics or anywhere else both stand on the same footing. They are intellectual beings, social beings, moral beings alike; they have a perfect community of interests in these respects, as also in the family, and hence so far as ability permits must have duties which are not only equal but are the same, and which demand woman's hand in politics as well as that of man.

A considerable part of civilized womanhood has just waked up to these facts, and is vigorously engaged in endeavoring to arouse mankind to the same truths. And as further and galling spurs to action, were any needed, there stand before her Christian womanhood those great devils of moral, social and political curse, intemperance and Mormonism, with other great evils, continually backed up by political corruption and sworn official treachery, baffling every effort thus far made for their overthrow and threatening every interest which she, or man or God holds sacred. What wonder that her blood boils, and that by every instinct she seeks to help in getting rid of political evils by political means?

Thus far the argument in favor of the ballot for woman seems flawless and of great force; and it is not strange sometimes to find a growing sentiment in its favor. But it assumes some things which will need further examination before reaching certainty.

The fundamental assumption of the argument is that enfranchisement would, on the whole, considering present and future, be a help in morally elevating the world. For the question is not one of overcoming present evil merely; if the change is made it must be because it ought to stay made and is demanded by the nature of things, for any other change will certainly work evil. And further than this, if the change will be a permanent benefit it must be because the new element introduced is in its nature better than the elements which have caused or permitted the present evil. This is the second assumption of the argument—that by nature woman is better than man, so that even though she be subjected by participation in politics and business to the same temptations which have drawn him downward she will yet remain pure and a purifying force forever in politics, as now in the home. If these two assumptions are true the argument stands; if not, the enfranchisement of woman, however much either mistaken conviction or gallantry may wish or vote the contrary, cannot solve the problem of reform.

That woman is now, as a rule, on a plane higher than man with reference to evil in general, will not be denied. But the question is whether this is a difference of essential nature, which nothing short of a new creation can change, or has resulted from a difference of surroundings, and will change with them. Briefly: The Scriptures say only that woman physically was created from man, while he was created from the dust of the earth. But while this might possibly imply a finer physical organism, physical character is not moral character, which alone is virtuous; and moreover, moral character cannot be created, but must result from the free moral acts of the being himself. The only way in which it can be influenced at all is by the class of motives presented in the circumstances surrounding it; so that if these circumstances are made the same for woman as they are for man the almost inevitable result must be similarity of character, with political action following it similar to that now complained of. The only possible escape from this is in the bare possibility that woman's possily finer physical organism at creation should fail to convey to her some of the surrounding motives to evil that would reach man; but of this we have no proof at all. The Scripture knows no moral sex—women and men are treated as sinners alike. Neither does experience; the most finely-organized men feel temptation's lures most vividly and fall quickest and lowest if at all, and such is the universal verdict in regard to women and the temptations of drink and vice in cities and elsewhere.

We seem then compelled to abandon the position that woman's nature will protect her more than man's. If so, and she has yet been protected in some way, the fact is traceable to no other source than the absence of temptation from her by her absence from the places where these forms of temptation are found —business and political life. This has been the generic difference between their lives, and if this be removed the resulting difference of character must gradually disappear. With this contact with the roughness and coarseness of the outer world will also largely disappear the refinement and grace which are now a most essential part of true womanhood.

With these necessary results in view let us now approach the first assumption, that as a whole the change would be an aid in elevating the world. If adopted to-day and rum and Mormonism driven, after say twenty years of conflict, into the caves of perdition, where they belong, what would the situation be a generation hence? While removed chiefly from these curses and their effects, which have degraded man heretofore, for twenty years at least woman will have been forced into contact with the very evils otherwise which have degraded man below her; she has become, perforce, a political wire-puller, albiet for good ends at first, and has probably beaten man by superior sagacity at his own game; she has been compelled to enter political offices, often passing through campaigns of personalities as at present; she is in every kind of business occupation to which inclination (not necessity as now), calls her. And what will be the result to her character, moral and otherwise? Not one generation, or two, and much less the very limited time of trial sometimes thought already to have proved its effects, will be sufficient to fully develop these results. It is enough to say that while the law of cause and effect continues subjection of similar natures to similar causes will produce similar effects in character, and the character of woman must change for the worse in both morals and refinement.

Nor is this all. While this is progressing another change will be taking place. The love and devotion of a pure-minded man to woman depends mainly on and is very largely an admiration of her purity of mind and heart, spiritually and refinement—qualities in which she excels him and approaches his ideal, which he needs, and with which alone she can make a home which shall be to him a haven of rest, inspiration and recuperation for renewed battles with the outside world. In relation to such a woman alone can he find his own better and finer qualities of mind and soul developed; she is the greatest earthly attraction to him against sin and evil in every form; such an one as she, and she only, can hold the place in his affections next to God himself which belongs to the true wife, because she is next to him in character and loveableness. And what she is to him, only in a different way, she is to each of his children—incitement to good, restraint from evil, inspiration, holy love—next to God till in maturer years they seek and find others like her to go through life with them in a still closer relation. Rob her of this character, even in part, and where is the world? The assertion might be made, without fear of successful contradiction, that all the evils which have threatened this earth from the beginning until now could not send it careering down to ruin as would the simple lowering of woman to the lesser level of man. When these elements are taken out of marriage and the home, the essential element of earth's pivoted institution, the family is gone! Sensuality, lost faith in goodness above men's own because the examples of it are lost, and loss of regard for the family because its central light is gone out—these are among the results that must more or less gradually but nevertheless surely follow.

Thus much briefly for the logical aspects of the case. Now a glance at three practical points with reference to woman suffrage and prohibition, which are applicable to other reforms also:

1. Suffrage cannot be secured before prohibition. If it will inevitably result in prohibition, as is claimed and both parties believe, it is practically prohibition itself and will be so fought by the liquor party. If so, woman cannot secure enfranchisement until the issue itself can be settled without her vote. Saloonists hate woman suffrage worse than prohibition, if possible—of which a few hours' work at a prohibition-amendment city poll will convince any one.

2. Bringing this issue forward by prohibitionists always divides temperance sentiment and alienates confidence, thus retarding the temperance cause. See, for instance, the disruption of the prohibition convention in Massachusetts last winter.

3. Woman can do all that is necessary without it. Witness her wonderful W. C. T. U. work, which has carried Kansas, Iowa and Ohio in three successive years for an issue not yet ten years old, and has secured its favorable consideration in a dozen other States! She could not have done more with the ballot added.

In conclusion of this brief and imperfect survey let us recapitulate: (1.) "Woman's sphere" by nature is wherever she can do good, just as man's is; (2.) Because not man's superior by nature she must fall to his level if placed in the same temptations; (3.) This would weaken the very foundations of society and work more evil than good, hence she cannot accomplish net good by the suffrage. (4.) It cannot be secured from the rum power for its own overthrow. (5.) It will hinder prohibition or any other reform, if attempted, by dividing sentiment and alienating friends. (6.) It is not necessary, as woman can accomplish the same ends without either it or its evil results.

In view of these facts, woman's sphere of work for reforms would seem to be an intellectual and moral one;—furnishing the motives and incentives rather that striking the actual blows. And, as with the church, the ministry, and moral forces everywhere, her power lies in her DIFFERENCE from man in these respects—a difference of superiority. This is the universal law of moral power. Obliterate this difference, or diminish it, and we diminish or obliterate its results. And since conscience, moral power, principle, really rules the world, she who is supreme here is queen already—the "power behind the throne greater than the throne itself" which really rules. She can have no higher throne. And to abdicate that is to leave all.

MODERN RELIGION.

We saw recently in a denominational paper, an account of an excellent meeting, an annual convocation, lasting nearly a week, and costing doubtless hundreds of dollars; where they had harmonious sessions, sound preaching, hearty amens, and great unity. We saw no mention of any sinners being converted, or backsliders being reclaimed, as was the case in former years, but it was mentioned that all were well fed, and that about eighteen hundred meals of victuals were provided during the session; not for the poor, the lame, the halt, the blind, but for the dear saints who came to meeting to hear, to shout, and to eat!

Of course it would be rank, flat heresy to say that these people were backslidden, or that they did not half believe the grand and important truths which they claim are entrusted to their charge; and so we shall say no such thing. We judge no man. But we may mention that we have read how in Antioch, "as they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, they laid their hands on them and sent them away." Acts 13:2, 3.

This was the way the disciples did in Antioch, where they were first called CHRISTIANS: but that kind of people do not seem to be very plenty or popular at the present time. Other names are thought more of than "that worthy name" whereby we are called. Preaching and shouting is more popular than fasting and prayer; and a people who cannot furnish a single missionary to carry the bread of life to seven hundred millions of dying heathen, has a glorious meeting, and reports no souls saved, but eighteen hundred meals of victuals eaten!

What does he who "walketh in the midst of the golden candlesticks" think of such religion? Rev. 2:1-4; 3:16, 17.—The Christian.

THE EXILE'S PRAYER.

Drunk on blood for many a day,
Debauched and spewing with excess,
Rome's all-powerful genius lay,
And rolled in beastly filthiness.

Rolled and wallowed amidst her towers,
Her legions laughing at her shame,
Though still the bravest nation cowers,
And trembles at her hated name.

On every people's necks she'd trod,
And, e'en though in that druuken plight,
Still put herself in place of God,
Till all the world seemed lost in night.

Her Colosseum ran with blood,
A wine-press where true souls were trod;
Her baths, though pure their crystal flood,
Baptized for Satan, not for God.

And every crime and vice was hers,
The worst of men she deified;
The beast and all its worshipers
Exulted but in brutal pride.

Then from an island in the sea,
Round which the winds and surges moaned,
Went up a voice of misery,
That for the world's oppression groaned.

It was an earnest prayer for light,
It called for candles from the East,
To throw their radiauce on the night,
And aid the world to slay the beast.

Rome fell; and where the crowd once hum'd
With joy to see the martyr's death,
Is heard the moan of shrub'ry thrum'd
By every passing zephyr's breath.

For beastly Rome is now no more;
Her sword has perished by the sword;
While still from Patmos' lonely shore,
The echo of that prayer is heard.

'Twas not Assyrian mouster-god,
Nor yet the Jewish elder's crowu,
Nor Grecian art, nor Egypt's rod,
That toppled Rome's strong bulwarks down.

In vain had Authony arrayed
Against old Rome the whole armed East;
For his was but the soldier's trade
Of pitting beast against the beast.

No; 'twas the LIGHT invoked by one
Whom Rome had banished to the sea;
Who there was shown by God's own Son,
What mighty Rome's dread fate must be.

Alone, against Rome's power arrayed,
Yet vers'd in Heaven's verities;
Love's own apostle 'twas who prayed,
Blending his voice with winds and seas.

And lo! the legions ou their march;
The prefect robber following there;
The rending lion and the torch
All fade before that plaintive prayer.

E'en as some storm-cloud seen afar
O'er the sea of a Summer's day,
Spent by it's own internal war,
Falls tumb'ling down and fades away.

How very great the change since theu!—
Brute force by simple light o'erthrown;
Oh, never fear, ye exiled men,
Against the crowd to stand alone.

He needs must climb some Sinai height,
Or dwell exiled on Patmos sand,
Who fain would balk a Pharaoh's might,
Or tyrant Nero's power withstand.

Oh, statesmeu deemed both wise and great,
Do ye well heed the exile's prayer?
Think ye to save a sinking state,
With no call on "the churches" there?

Can politics e'er work reform?
No! he who would that work begin,
And save the commonwealth from harm,
Must chide the churches for their sin.

The Nicolaitan even now
Our best of churches still infest,
Whose secret arts and brazen brow,
The Lord of lords himself detests.

—Gen. J. W. Phelps, in the Wesleyan.

I have known what the enjoyment and advantages of this life are, and what the more refined pleasures which learning and intellectual power can bestow; and with all the experience that three-score years can give, I now on the eve of my departure declare to you that health is a great blessing; that competence gained by honest industry is a great blessing; and a great blessing it is to have kind, faithful and loving friends and relatives; but the greatest of all blessings, as it is the most ennobling of all privileges, is to be, indeed a Christian.—*S. THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

REPORT OF THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY AND GENERAL AGENT.

The financial and material business facts of the year are already submitted in the reports of your Treasurer and Board of Directors.

THE RELATIONS OF EMPLOYES

have been harmonious and pleasant during the entire year. Those employed as compositors or otherwise about the office have been uniformly courteous and ready to do extra work when circumstances required. Individuals and firms with whom we have had business relations have shown no disposition to discriminate against the National Christian Association on account of the distinctive issues which it makes. All bills for labor or materials or other indebtedness have been promptly paid when presented, accompanied with proper vouchers, and the bank account of your treasurer kept on a sound basis.

In addition to editorial labors, Pres. J. Blanchard has performed a great amount of work in the lecture field. Sparing no effort and allowing no opportunity to arouse the consciences of men to pass unimproved, he has travelled extensively, preached and lectured frequently, interviewed leading statesmen and ministers, and gathered facts from many sources that are invaluable in the different departments of our reform work.

The evidences of the painstaking, untiring and assiduous care of Mr. Kellogg have appeared in each issue of the Christian Cynosure, and the tastefully arranged pages that have come to you with so few typographical errors are proof of the ability with which his work has been done.

STATE CONVENTIONS.

Your Secretary and General Agent has attended eight State conventions and addressed seventy-eight different audiences during the year, and furnished occasional communications for the Cynosure. With the assistance of others who have worked faithfully and given liberally, the property purchased at Washington has been paid for, and on the 22d day of February, 1884, I delivered the deed to your honorable president with an unblemished title. The entire cost, including purchase money, repairs, interest, taxes, and four years' insurance, was $8,304.91. It is now occupied in part by the American Publishing Company, and the remainder for tenement purposes.

The good effect of this movement is already perceptible on the public mind, and I have no doubt but its wisdom will be verified in the near future.

Elder Hinman's labors have been largely directed to the furtherance of our reform in connection with the Washington enterprise. Besides sermons and lectures delivered, and tracts distributed, he has been a constant contributor to the Cynosure, and has written many valuable articles which have been published in other papers, thus bringing our work to the notice of many who do not read the distinctive literature of the anti-lodge movement. He has also visited and addressed the students of several schools in which colored pupils are being educated.

P. S. Feemster has given a portion of his time to the work in Kansas. S. L. Cook continues as State lecturer in Indiana. S. C. Kimball is stirring the waters in New Hampshire. Before going to Washington, Prof. E. D. Bailey and his brother planted a number of batteries in New England, over which they have a general oversight. H. A. Day marshals and leads the dauntless band in Michigan; Isaac Bancroft has carried the banner in Wisconsin; J. K. Hunter devoted four months to colporteur work in Illinois with encouraging results; and W. B. Stoddard, employed by the State Association of New York, has been distributing literature, holding meetings, and finding friends in the Empire State.

Others have volunteered, doing valuable service by personal efforts, and the distribution of tracts which have in most instances been furnished gratuitously by the N. C. Association.

NEW HELPERS.

I am glad to notice the advent of new agencies into the broad field to be cultured and subdued for the Master.

First in importance is the "American Publishing Company of Washington, D. C.," incorporated under the laws of W. Virginia.

This body is in no sense whatever an antagonist or rival of the parent society from which it sprung, but a young and vigorous helper. As our work advanced and took on political form, it became evident that the "American" movement must have an organ to advocate and maintain its distinctive features. It is to meet this demand that the corporation was formed, and the "American" established at the nation's capital, to guard the public weal and report the sayings and doings of those intrusted with brief authority to make laws and administer our national government. The American Freeman, as you know, had made a grand record under the leadership of Geo. W. Needles, but its place of publication was too remote from the center and facilities for obtaining information too limited to meet increasing wants. The conflict had reached the very citadel of the "Secret Empire," and by massing the scattered forces it was evident that greater strength and increased efficiency would be the result. With this end in view, the management of the Washington Publishing Company have made terms with the American Freeman of Missouri, the Olathe Free Press of Kansas, the New England American and the Michigan American, and merged the four into one weekly paper, now edited by E. D. Bailey and published at the head and heart of the nation.

Doubtless one effect produced will be a temporary shrinkage in the subscription list of the Cynosure, but this should be very small and speedily followed by a large increase over the number ever issued at any time in the history of the organ of the parent society, and it will be if our friends discern the signs of the times, comprehend the situation and strengthen the wall where most needed.

The Christian Cynosure was set in the heavens of reform on the 25th day of July, 1868, and is nearing its sixteenth birthday. It has never trailed the banner in the dust or faltered in the fight. More than two and a half millions of copies have been sent to lands near and remote. If there is any one agency upon which the cause as a whole depends more than on any other, it is the maintenance and extended circulation of the Christian Cynosure, and no reasonable effort should be spared on the part of its friends to make its circulation commensurate to the ability with which it is conducted, and the importance of the cause it advocates.

Another sign of the times is the recent appearing of the Berea Evangelist, which takes advanced ground on all questions of reform. It is designed for circulation in the South, and the well-known influence of brother Fee, its senior editor, especially among the colored people, gives added interest to this enterprise.

Bishop Wright's "stellar light," the Richmond Star, is a power, especially in the U. B. church, giving wise councils tempered with love, but uncompromising in reproving sin, and fearless in advocacy of the truth.

The Blanchard Record, in Page county, Iowa, inscribes upon its banner, "Opposed to all secret societies; in favor of national reform and prohibition of the liquor traffic."

Prof. S. C. Kimball is turning light on the public mind through the Christian Witness, frequently causing a "flutter" among the brotherhoods, and slowly infusing courage and spiritual life into politic churches and the conservative masses in New England.

Outside of pulpits and periodicals distinctively committed to the anti-lodge movement there has been marked progress in the direction of freedom since we last met in annual session, and there is very much less disposition to taboo and treat our reform and its advocates with contempt than formerly. The discussion introduced by Pres. J. Blanchard, and carried on by others, in the Interior, and the successful evangelistic and pastoral labors of Pres. C. A. Blanchard have done very much to break the spell that bound the religious press, and muzzled the pulpits of the country.

The Pope in a recent encyclical letter against Freemasonry and kindred orders has used great plainness of speech, reiterated the testimony of his official predecessors, and shown a comprehensive knowledge of the secret system and its destructive tendencies on Christian civilization.

The object lessons that have appeared in some of the illustrated papers of late, showing up the ridiculous side of what they denominate a stupendous fraud, reach the eyes and interest the common people, and have become a mighty educational force of themselves.

The acquittal of criminals in the face of undeniable proofs of guilt, and the secret plots and conspiracies now threatening the powers of Europe make thinking, honest men suspicious of movements that guard their secrets with oaths, and silence their accusers in courts of justice by assassination. The connection between saloons, legislation to protect the liquor interests and screen the dealer from justice is better understood, and some who are earnestly seeking the destruction of intemperance have detected a formidable foe in their midst directing their organized efforts, first in the interest of the lodge and afterwards for the promotion of temperance.

A very strong opposition has been developed which is testing the inventive genius of the guardians of the Mystic Brotherhood and stimulating them to increased activity in casting up breastworks of minor lodges about the old citadel of Freemasonry. Under pretext of cheap and safe insurance, the promotion of temperance, combining for mutual aid in resisting oppressive monopolies, etc., they are swindling and swearing their members out of their earnings and enslaving both body and soul in the most exacting, relentless and bloody monopolies possible among civilized human beings, and by lavish expenditures of ill-gotten gains and almost super human efforts they are hastening on the era when it shall be determined in a well defined contest whether the "Secret Empire" or open, honest methods are to control in civil and ecclesiastical tribunals.

From this already powerful conspiracy against the family, the civil equality of men, and the church of Jesus Christ, we, as Christians, appeal to God, and as citizens to the people, with an abiding faith that this enemy "full of all unrighteousness" can and will be overcome by the "Blood of the Lamb and the word of his testimony." Our work is to "TESTIFY;" to expose as well as withstand; to "cry aloud and spare not;" to "publish on the house-tops;" to "show the people their sins;" "to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God," and the more faithful our testimony the more speedily will the victory come through the "Blood of the Lamb."

As "children of the light" our testimony should be heard whenever and wherever we are "set for the defence of the gospel." As citizens we must testify at the ballot-box, in the legislative assembly and the tribunals of justice. And as a corporation to whom has been committed in sacred trust means to aid some who are willing to "speak the truth in love," but unable to "go upon this warfare at their own charges," and to print and scatter leaves for the healing of the nation, we may not hope for the favor of God if we fail to deal liberally as God has given to us the ability.

In general I would counsel a more complete and systematic organization of the work committed to our hands. The enemy is intrenched and strongly fortified, and his works can not be carried by storm. More system is indispensable to greatest efficiency and the utmost economy of resources and labor. The anti-secrecy cause is now in a condition more favorable to real progress than ever before in its history, and the advance of the past year exceeds that of any preceding one. The sowing and the garnering of the past has brought its fruitage, and we have only to move on in the path marked by the Divine Hand that has thus far guided in the way. From this central city and commercial emporium of the great Northwest, and from this building, the munificent gift of brother Carpenter, whose interest is unabated, but who is too ill to meet with us to-day, we have moved on the enemies' works, planted batteries in New England and met the opposition face to face in the citadel of his strength. If the victory in Washington has not been complete, much has been gained and defeat escaped, and it is only a question of time and methods as to when and how the banner of our reform shall be planted in that land of rapid changes, and grand possibilities stretching along the Pacific coast.

Washington is the center from which to push the work of organization on the basis of political reform with a distinctively party policy in the forefront, and Chicago the point from which the unsectarian, non-partizan, distinctively Christian work of inducting Catholics and Protestants, Republicans, Democrats, Prohibitionists and Greenbackers in the cause of human liberty and equal rights should go on. The two working conjointly, yet each having a policy of its own, would in my judgment accomplish more, do better work and enlist a larger number of helpers than by any other method.

And finally, since it has pleased God to call us to this great work of enlightening the people, we ought to be Bible men and women. In no other way is it possible to attain to success. The Master says, the chiefest among ten thousand, in heaven and on earth commands, "That ye love one another as I have loved you." His demands upon us are too pressing to allow time for dissension in our own ranks. With all our forces united we have enough to do in confronting a tireless foe. The past is with him who shall unroll the scroll and judge in the last day according to the things that are written therein; the present is with us, the future before us, and we may act wisely or unwisely in directing the currents which flow out from the fountain which God and not men has planted. They will be strong and healthful or weak and sickly, in proportion to the wisdom embodied in their devising and the faith and works combined in their execution.

Paul seems to have greater confidence in progression than retrospection when he says, "Forgetting the things which are behind, and reaching forth unto the things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize," and no better or safer motto can we adopt. The prize is before and not behind us, and must be reached if gained at all by a forward movement. Fields are ripening for the harvest, and multitudes are waiting for the light. The masses are fast losing confidence in the old parties, and the day of their judgment is near. Merely ritualistic forms in worship are losing their charms for the burdened and weary ones who sigh for rest, and hunger and thirst for something that satisfies the soul of its possessor, and every indication betokens great changes in the near future.

Foreign as well as home fields are opening up with large promise, and there is no limit to the opportunities for labor, with every prospect of success. Among the children in Sabbath-schools, and the youth of our land, a great work is imperatively needed. The secretists, and the advocates of all unrighteousness, comprehend the situation, and the importance of bending the twig while easily inclined, and have devoted more money, time, and effort to capture the children and young people than in former years. If we are wise we shall not overlook this department, but use greater diligence and a larger liberality in educating the children and youth of our country. Suitable tracts with especial reference to circulation in Sabbath-schools, and wherever the children can be reached, should be prepared, and furnished for distribution.

And finally, brethren, in view of the great necessity that is upon us, and in view of the favor that God has shown in the past, we should encourage ourselves and each other in the Lord, "Till we all come in the unity of of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." J. P. STODDARD.

—The American Bible Society has issued, during sixty-seven years, 42,083,816 Bibles, in 42 languages and dialects. Its work proceeds so methodically and noiselessly, that its magnitude may easily fail to be appreciated.

The lamented Keshub Chunder Sen was orthodox on the temperance question. His latest utterance on this topic is full of earnest, truthful endeavor to rid India of the universal scourge. He says: "So long as God is with us in this cause we have nothing to fear. Roll, roll back then, O thou fatal tide of intemperance, and swallow no more the fair children of our Holy Father. Statesmen, patriots, reformers and philanthropists of England, come and strengthen our hands, that we may, by personal and individual influence, and by joint co-operation, save if possible both India and England from the effects of intemperance. Since the light of religion dawned upon my heart I have never been the least skeptical about the result of human effort in the cause of truth. Whatever is done in the name of God does good and bears fruit. Let obstacles come in our way, but the day will come when, if temperance friends will speak, million-voiced and trumpet-tongued, parliament will hear; for God will make it hear, and a nation's curse will be obliterated forever."—Union-Signal.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

THE NOMINATING CONVENTION OF 1884.

POMEROY AND CONANT THE STANDARD BEARERS.

The Chicago convention of the American party will l worth a place in the history of reform as a testimony f Christianizing politics. With a spirit of devotion, fo bearance and dignity the work for which it was call together was done faithfully and well, and the record h been put before the nation by type and telegraph. If th men and women of America who believe in the principl set forth in the platform will but vote their conviction the demagogues of party and of the lodge will star aghast at the uprising of the moral sentiment of the n tion.

A preliminary meeting of Friday afternoon accor plished little but to nominate committees for the evenin A finance committee—F. W. Capwell, J. P. Stoddard a Rufus Smith—was elected. J. L. Barlow was chose president and E. D. Bailey, secretary, pro tem.

At eight o'clock a fair audience of some five hundr people were gathered in Farwell Hall. Elder J. L. Ba low in calling the convention to order spoke briefly of i object and called on Rev. S. A. Gilley of Wisconsin, offer prayer.

Gen. A. W. Riley of Rochester was introduced for th opening address, in which he referred to the early days the temperance work as furnishing lessons for the su cessful carrying on of the reform against the lodge.

He was followed by Pres. J. Blanchard, whose addre was published in full in the Cynosure of last wee George W. Clark gave an addition to the enthusiasm the hour by singing, "Men of thought and men of actio Clear the Way."

E. D. Bailey, in behalf of the National committee a pointed at Washington, presented the following nomin tions for committees:

On Credentials:—A. G. Laird, W. B. Stoddard, D. W Bailey.

Finance:—F. W. Capwell, J. P. Stoddard, R. Smith.

Platform:—J. W. Wood, Wisconsin; E. W. Kirb Pennsylvania; Geo. W. Needels, Missouri; J. Blanchar Illinois; P. D. Miller, New York; H. Curtis, Kansas; D. Bailey, Washington, D. C.; J. M. Kent, Iowa; E. Graham, Nebraska; H. A. Day, Michigan; E. Wylie, Ne Hampshire; James Auten, Ohio; J. L. Barlow, Connect cut; J. M. Feemster, Mississippi; R. J. Williams, Minnes ta; John Dorcas, Dakota.

For permanent officers:

President:—J. L. Barlow.

Secretaries:—Prof. E. G. Paine, Mrs. E. A. Cook, L. L. Kellogg.

Vice Presidents:—A. W. Riley, C. C. Foote, L. N. Stra ton, B. F. Worrell, J. W. Wood, E. B. Graham, J. M Kent, E. W. Kirby, R. J. Williams, E. Wylie, J. M Feemster, E. D. Bailey, and A. T. Dempsey.

The report was unanimously adopted and the conven tion adjourned until ten o'clock next morning.

FRIDAY.

There were some 200 delegates and others in the Ha Friday morning when the president called the conventio to order and asked Rev. Joseph Travis, editor of th Free Methodist, to offer prayer. The venerable, yet clea voiced singer, Clark, was ready with a song at its clos

The committee on Credentials reported by A. J. Lair but was continued.

E. D. Bailey, editor of the American, improved a va cant moment to present the claims of the political orga of the reform and asked for a committee which wa granted cheerfully, and made up of George W. Needel E. G. Paine, and F. W. Capwell. A call was made fo the representative of the Cynosure, who referred to th loyal encomiums in the lower hall during the N. C. A meeting. Two names were added to the committee M. R. Britten and Capt. William Wilson, which was in structed to report on both papers.

The importance of an address to the American people presenting to them the principles of the movement, an calling upon all conscientious voters to stand by a part that held to the original and God-given principles upo which our prosperity as a nation is founded, was urged and Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, J. Blanchard and L. N. Strat ton were chosen a committee to prepare such an addres and secure its wide publication.

Dr. E. W. Kirby of Philadelphia moved a fraterna delegation to the Prohibition Home Protection Conven tion in Pittsburgh, July 23d; and E. D. Bailey, S. C Pomeroy, J. Blanchard, E. W. Kirby, J. P. Stoddard Mrs. L. N. Stratton, and Mrs. E. A. Cook were appointed

Dr. Kirby spoke at some length of the importance of union if possible of the votes of the two parties. H had been appointed delegate to the Pittsburgh Conven tion. He had great hope of making some arrangemen with that body whereby this consummation could be ef fected. Pres. J. Blanchard also spoke of the appointment of the fraternal delegation. There were some obstaeles to a harmonious action with the Prohibition party. The leaders of that party were opposed to woman suffrage, as the American party were overwhelmingly in favor of it. That party will not touch the lodge question. If they will nominate a man opposed to the lodge we can unite with them in calling a grand union convention in August. He spoke with admiration of Mr. Schumacher of Ohio, and urged that this fraternal delegation might have large discretionary powers at Pittsburgh.

Financial matters were brought up by J. P. Stoddard who introduced Rufus Smith, of Missouri, of the finance committee. He said he had not taken part in politics for years, but hoped we now could have an American party, in truth, which Christian men could support. On raising money he was posted. He had been successful in this work without passing the hat or making any unnecessary demonstration. In Christ's time the poor woman gave an amount less than it is possible for us to give, for we have no coin so small, but that gift has been talked about from that day to this. He would stand at the door and take what men in earnest for Christ would give him. His speech had a rousing tone, and George W. Clark added much to its effect by a good song.

Senator Pomeroy was noticed in the Hall and was called on for a speech. He said that the discussion of our relations with the Prohibition party reminded him of the saying of the Athenian philosopher, "I am a man, and am interested in all that concerns humanity." Such seems to be the position of the American party. The other day a member of the administration, high in the councils of the nation, asked me if I was going to Chicago to meet with cranks. I told him yes. The word cranks is not an offensive term any longer. The cranks are the men who stick, the men you can rely on. It cannot be said that we have but one idea; but a one-idea party is not to be despised. It is better a great deal than a party with none. The Abolitionists were a "one idea" party, and a grand one it was. When I was working for the success of that party I was asked if I ever expected to see slavery abolished. I answered, No. But I did. And that tremendous fact inspires us to hope for the triumph of other reforms in God's good time. There are several things which we must face, which concern our common humanity. I want the people to understand the mission of the American nation to mankind. There is no precedent in history for the American government. It is a new form of representative government, unknown to the democracies of Greece or the republic of Rome. A place was reserved in the wilderness by the providence of God for the experiment of representative government. The government of a few is not our theory. The principle of the fathers was that the many should rule, not the few. So we have need in our platform for a recognition of those questions of justice and reform which concern all our people, as we have room in this country for all the races of mankind to develop into that manhood for which they were originally designed by the great Creator.

Pres. J. Blanchard, as Mr. Pomeroy closed, read a letter from Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the National W. C. T. U., in which she, in behalf of the Union, disclaimed any discourtesy on the part of the Union in their neglect to send to this Convention a copy of their memorial. She expressed admiration for the principles of the American party, and explained the apparent slight by saying that the well-known principles of this party made it unnecessary to memorialize it on the prohibition question. The letter was received with applause and the committee of fraternal delegation instructed to prepare a reply.

General Riley was again called out and said that men who adhered to first principles were the men who were willing to seal their principles with their blood. He would quote a sentiment from a noble man, who thus gave his life for his country, spoken before the Revolutionary war began. He then repeated with wonderful accuracy and force a passage from Gen. Joseph E. Warren, which rang clear as a bell for the dogmas of freedom which the Convention had come to affirm.

A further report from the Credential committee was heard and the Convention adjourned till 2 o'clock.

In the afternoon several hundred people were gathered in the Hall, expecting with some eagerness the report of the Platform committee and the nomination of candidates.

After prayer by Elder H. H. Hinman, the Credential committee gave its final report, in which it appeared that 745 delegates were present from sixteen States; from Illinois, 54; New York, 23; Iowa, 15; Wisconsin, 13; Indiana, 7; Minnesota, 7; Michigan, 6; Ohio, 4; Kansas, 4; District of Columbia, 3; Dakota, 2; Missouri, 2; and 1 each from Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Mississippi, Nebraska and New Hampshire.

E. D. Bailey made a brief speech in which he said that in traveling westward he found a great difference in the opinions of people respecting the Republican candidate. He was inclined to think there were two Blaine's in the country. He found one Blaine in the East who had betrayed his party and been guilty of jobs; and one in the West who was known as a scholar, a Christian, and a brave and honest man. He thought it must be a case of mistaken identity and that the Western people must have in mind Senator S. C. Pomeroy (applause) as their ideal and not James G. Blaine. He continued to show that the Republican party was not worthy the support of true citizens, who should seek to give their voice for truth and principle with the Americans. Mr. Bailey spoke further in favor of an active and earnest prohibition candidate. He could not support the candidate of the Republican party, even should that man be the man of his own choice, because such a man could not carry out his own good intentions. The only thing that can avail anything is the destruction of the dominant parties. What is now wanted is the form of a party with principles. Such a party would be a nucleus around which good men would gather.

The committee on the papers reported as follows by Prof. E. G. Paine:

Your communication on the party organ, The American, and on the exponent of the moral and religious phases of this reform movement, respectfully report as follows:

Resolved, 1. That we heartily endorse the the American as bright, clear, honest, fearless and sound. As a grand exponent of the Christian statesmanship that will one day govern our nation.

2. That we renew our allegiance and pledge our support to the grand old Pole-Star of the Reform, the Christian Cynosure, and we appreciate its solid worth and constantly increasing value.

In the first resolution the committee had written "S. S. statesmanship," instead of Christian, and the initials were read "Sunday-school." Rev. E. B. Graham of Omaha, objected to the use of the word Sunday—that there was no Sunday but to worshipers of the sun, who were Freemasons. Nor would he have the word Sabbath used in such a connection, as a burlesque. He moved the use of the word "Christian" and the Convention agreed with him.

The Financial committee reported the contributions at $125, all but $8 of which were paid out while there were several expenses yet to be met.

The Platform committee being at last ready with their report, Dr. Kirby read the document with applause from the convention. It was resolved to cut short debate at 5 o'clock, and allow but five minutes to each speaker. Two or three impracticable delegates who had fifty ideas that they could not express, denounced the five minute rule as limiting free speech. They were buried by the votes of the rest, as we hope to bury the liquor dealer who demands another kind of freedom at the expense of his neighbors.

The first article was read, and an amendment moved but not seconded. The second was read as it appears in the old platform—"That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore," etc. E. B. Graham objected to this clause as a reason for the use of the Bible in schools. It was the only plank with a reason, and he moved to strike out. It was agreed to without much quarreling.

On the prohibition plank, J. T. Buckley wanted to change the word "drinks" to "liquors," as the former implied no objection to the use of alcohol in the arts, and he was for wiping the whole alcoholic business off the earth, and forbidding its use for any and every purpose under the sun. Rufus Smith agreed that there was alcohol already manufactured to last a thousand years in the arts, and when the stock was used up we would know how to get along without it. But the plank stood the strain as it came from the committee.

The lodge plank passed inspection with almost a hurrah, although in committee it was nearly sawn in two by the insertion of the word "political" before "secret societies."

"Prison labor" in the next article was a fearful bugbear. It was voted to strike it out, but the plank was too short without it. Several could not see what it meant, and almost compromised their good sense by continually asserting the fact. The committee's work stood.

No. 7 passed with a brief explanation.

No. 8 was opposed by J. D. Nutting of Oberlin with much energy, without attempting to elaborate his arguments, which were that woman suffrage would prove to be an evil in the end, and that it would be a cause of division. Prof. L. N. Stratton raised a cheer as he told how he owed an election to the Syracuse school board to women. Pres. J. Blanchard said the heaviest tax payer of Streator, Ill., was a woman, but a miserable drunken Irishman could vote and she could not. C. C. Foote thought he discovered the effect of Oberlin training in Bro. Nutting. Young ladies there years ago were not allowed to read their own essays. They were all handed over to a man to read. The old gentlemen were quite discouraging to youthful attempts at an argument against a favorite dogma; no one else stood up to be ridiculed, and the plank was voted with a rousing aye, and one voice only against it. Father Clark, before the vote was taken, in lieu of a song read amid cheers a parody of Burn's poem, "A man's a man for a' that."

The currency plank called out an energetic speech from Rev. A. J. Chittenden, who was strong on fiat money, but his amendment did not carry but was referred to the committee on Address, which was also made committee on resolutions.

Tariff came up, and Father Foote moved a substitute in favor of free trade. The old Abolitionists were all free traders, and he held to the principles of his youth. W. D. Babbitt made a very forcible speech in favor of free trade, which would have been weakened if it had been suggested that tariff is generally levied upon articles used only by the rich and extravagant. The substitute broke down when the vote was piled upon it.

No objection was made to the others, or to the preamble but for its length, and the closing of the day warned against attempting to meddle with it. The Convention then voted to proceed with the nomination of candidates. Pres. J. Blanchard arose, and in a brief speech, speaking of his own nomination at Galesburg, and the failure of the mails between Senator Pomeroy and the secretary of the nominating meeting in 1880, and also of Mr. Pomeroy's intrepid speech in Farwell Hall in 1869, nominated Samuel C. Pomeroy. "who has five times been imprisoned in Kansas for his fidelity to the freedom of his fellow-citizens, and his opposition to the lodge." Great applause followed and the nomination was seconded all over the hall.

Dr. Kirby did not wish this Convention to be trammelled by the action taken in February in Washington. He had the greatest respect for Senator Pomeroy as a man worthy altogether of our votes, but he hoped some arrangement could be reached by means of the fraternal committee, and a union with the Prohibitionists made. He nominated John P. St. John as a man who could accept our platform, he believed, in every part, with perhaps the exception of the plank on the lodges.

The chairman spoke on the nomination and was sorry for it. We must stand by our principles. Gov. St. John has never given a clear statement of his convictions on the lodge. He wanted to ratify the nomination made at Washington. We should not be men who change our minds. Anti-masons are not of that class who should change their minds.

Dr. Kirby replied that he believed St. John "could stand with us against the lodge. Others of us have been in the lodge and have renounced. I have been there and have left the lodge forever. I am forever opposed to liquor and the lodge." He plead earnestly for his candidate.

Pres. Blanchard explained St. John's position so far as it was known from his letter of 1881, and from his private conversation. But the trouble is that St. John wishes for the support of the lodge wing of the Prohibitionists. But if at Pittsburg he will break from the lodge wing he would be willing that Pomeroy and St. John might make some arrangement by which the open wing of the Prohibitionists could unite.

B. F. Worrell of Kansas said he was for a time pastor of a church in Olathe of which St. John was a member. He had some knowledge of Kansas and could say that Kansas will go for St. John to a man. There is a feeling in Kansas, whether just or no, against the gentleman first nominated. Had a strong feeling of personal sympathy himself, but it is my duty to say that there are good men in Kansas sympathizing with this party who will not vote for him.

S. E. Starry thought the nomination of St. John ridiculous. An adhering Mason ought not to have any claim on us.

L. B. Kent of Iowa nominated Pres. J. Blanchard, and was seconded by Starry.

E. D. Bailey was glad to know that the American party was not in want of candidates. Recognizing the availability of all, he seconded the nomination of Pomeroy. He has a clear record on the reform against intoxicating drinks. In the Massachusetts legislature he stood for temperanee; in Kansas for free speech; in Farwell Hall against the lodge system. Referring to the Kansas trouble, he said, the American party owes it to Senator Pomeroy to vindicate him.

H. Curtis, of Olathe, Kansas, spoke against the nomination for the sake of Kansas votes; and J. P. Stoddard said he had heard the objections of Kansas friends at the Topeka convention, but could get no specific charge against Senator Pomeroy.

Several other speeches were made and Rev. Joseph Travis nominated C. A. Blanchard, and had a ready second. A vote by States was finally ordered on the basis of Congressional representation, but after some time lost in confusion it was discovered that no one knew what that representation was for the several States, except Pennsylvania which had forty-six votes for Dr. Kirby to toss into the hat. A sensible ballot was then taken, giving Pomeroy 73 votes; J. Blanchard 7; C. A. Blanchard,

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 14th, 1884.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER:—Perhaps it is as you say in the Cynosure of the 12th inst., and I am mistaken in saying that Washington warned the nation to beware of such institutions as Freemasonry. I submit the following extract from Washington's Farewell Address, with a few comments interspersed therein. The extract is quoted from Irving's Life of Washington, vol. 5:

"The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government." Now for a word of comment on this: We maintain that Freemasonry when it binds its members under penalty of death to conceal all Masonic secrets, excepting two only (murder and treason, and they left to the recipient's own choice), does thereby contemplate a very serious interference with "the duty of every individual (thus bound) to obey the established government." And Washington, being a Mason, must have known it.

Continuing the extract: "All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency."

A word of comment upon this. It is a well-known fact that Freemasonry does obstruct the execution of the laws; and also, that it designs "to direct, control, counteract and awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities;" and it is, therefore, "destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency." And Washington, being a Mason, probably knew it. J. Q. Adams, unawed, and not entangled, by the Masonic oath, could see the practical carrying out of Masonic principles in the abduction and murder of Morgan, and he specified nine distinct crimes in that little piece of Masonic infamy.

I proceed with the extract from the address:

"They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force—to put, in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party; of a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community and according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of a faction, rather than the organ of consistent, wholesome plans digested by common councils and modified by mutual interests.

"However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion."

Again, another word of comment. Freemasonry is undoubtedly an artful and enterprising minority of the community, and its deliberations affecting the rights of citizenship are not of mutual interest to the community. See the account of lodge meetings held in Batavia, N. Y., in the year 1826, given in the "Broken Seal." Freemasons do usurp for themselves the reins of government in assuming power of life or death over citizens of the United States. And Washington, being a Mason, must have known this also. Freemasonry does seek the destruction of the government. See in "Robison's Proofs of a Conspiracy," that "Freemasonry is a conspiracy against all governments and all religions."

Washington may or may not have had Freemasonry in his mind while writing the above quoted portion of his Farewell Address. But his language nevertheless, is precisely applicable to "such institutions" as Freemasonry. And if Washington will not allow that language to be applied to Freemasonry, he is guilty of unfaithfulness to his countrymen, and there remains an unwashed stain upon his character. Perhaps I have accorded too much to him in stating that he meant to embrace Freemasonry in this warning, and have thus far been mistaken. Had Washington been downright honest and faithful to his countrymen he would, like Finney, have uttered the word Masonry, and made a clean breast of the sin he committed in joining the Masons. If Washington in his warning did not mean Freemasonry, what did he mean?

Yours truly, WILLIAM FENTON.

NOTES FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

1. An I. O. O. F. Initiation. A reputable M. E. minister relates the following. Having sent in his name he went on Saturday night to pass through the sublime rites of the order. He was led by the officers in charge of his reverence around the room till he became disgusted with the ceremonies and ventured to suggest that he had gone far enough, but was told that the best part was yet ahead and he marched on till the officer in charge being too drunk to hold his drinks began to "throw up" most copiously. Rev. ——— then demanded to be conducted out of the lodge and has staid out ever since. He had reached the sublime department of the order.

2. Two men of rather sober habits and good training went together to a neighboring village and joined the Odd fellow lodge. They soon learned that the school was a bad one—a training school for manufacturing drunkards. They wisely agreed together to come out from among them and after stating to the lodge their reasons, withdrew forever. They are men of unquestionable veracity and honesty, known well by the writer of these notes.

3. I now go to an obituary. "Hiram Abiff" of Clifford, Susquehanna county, Pa., is dead. He had been in declining health ever since J. R. Baird of Pennsylvania, the Blanchards of Illinois, and others of kindred views and traits passed that way. More than a year ago one Starry of Iowa and H. H. Hinman passed through Clifford and called on brother Hiram, raising him on the five points of fellowship, and drove "Mah-hah-bone" through his drum-skins and beheld he stood up and walked. But alas! the light struck the organs of sight so fiercely, after he had lain so long in his ten-foot grave, that his vision proved his death. He saw too much to live and so he died. That Starry is killing many a Hiram and sending them to the Grand Lodge above. It is rumored that the president of the N. E., Pennsylvania, Christian Association opposed to the lodge, conducted the funeral obsequies of Hiram of Clifford.

We are not able to give the age of the subject of this sketch, not knowing when he was born nor the date of his death. Those who would know his pedigree can find an account of his father in Gen. 3: 1, and many other places in that old book which the craft call one of the three great lights in Masonry.

Of the personality of Hiram we know very little. Would we could say as much of him as was said in an obituary of a man "down East:" "He was a native of Massachusetts and weighed 240 pounds." Of Hiram we cannot say so much. He was a native of Pennsylvania and was "weighed in the balances and found wanting." What will the preachers and the deacons of that vicinity do for social enjoyment and congenial spirits.

Hark! from the lodge a warning sound;
Ye craftmen, hear the cry:
Come, living Hirams, see the ground
Where you will surely lie.

P. S.—We are informed that the Clifford Masonic lodge has disbanded. So mote it be. N. C.

A MARVELOUS INVENTION.

WINNEBAGO, Ill.

While traveling my Anti-masonic circuit south of the Illinois river ministering to the public who refused to receive as Gospel a hodge-podge pabulum from the hands of Masonic Baal worshipers, I used sometimes to relieve the motherly housewives, at whose homes I was a guest, of the onerous labor of butter churning, sometimes with dasher and sometimes with crank. And while it was a real pleasure to relieve these blessed mothers thus, I confess that when the "witches got into the churn," as it used to be said, and kept me tugging away for an hour or more, I was glad enough when the butter came to have my weary arms released. It is enough to make one shudder to think what a long and weary toil has been performed by the dairy wife to supply the nation with butter.

But the harbinger of a better day has dawned. The hand churn will soon be found among the curiosities of an undeveloped age. A discovery of incalculable time and labor saving has been made by De Laval of Switzerland for an instantaneous separation of the cream from the milk. Five of these cream separators are now in use by the firm of Mellen and Swan, at Winnebago, Ill., where I am spending a few days. This firm is now daily converting the cream of from 18,000 to 20,000 lbs. of milk into butter that cannot be excelled for quality.

If the farmers who patronize this firm, and nearly a hundred do, wish for their butter from the cream before it sours, they have to tarry but an hour and a half, and they can refill their cans with their milk for home use, sweet as when delivered at the factory, and receive the cream converted into butter ready for the table.

For a description of one of these machines one must needs see a diagram.

Suffice it to say, the milk runs into a strong cylinder, shaped somewhat like an old-fashioned iron tea-kettle, with divisions for holding the milk before and after the cream is separated, and also for the cream. The cream passes out from one aperture and the milk from another. The separation is caused by the tremendous velocity of the cylinder, which performs from 7,000 to 9,000 revolutions per minute, or from 115 to 150 per second. The instant the milk touches the bottom it is thrown by the great velocity into a vertical wall around the sides of the cylinder, where, the milk being heavier than the cream, it is whirled into the outside of the receiver and the cream into the inside, whence it passes out into respective receivers. The amount of cream thus received is twenty per cent greater than by the old method of setting in pans.

Of course this process is as useful for cheese as for butter. These machines are manufactured by the De Laval Cream Separator Co., 32 Park Row, New York. I predict that in a few years this new method will supercede the old from ocean to ocean. C. C. FOOTE.

LESSON I.—July 6, 1884.—David King over all Israel.—2 Sam. 5: 1–12.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him.—Ps. 89: 20.

Last year we closed our studies in the Old Testament with the sad death of Saul and Jonathan on the mountains of Gilboa, in a battle with the Philistines. "The battle of Gilboa left Israel in a forlorn state. The country west of Jordan was overrun by the Philistines, who occupied the cities from which their inhabitants had fled (1 Sam. 31: 7). The surviving members of the house of Saul took refuge on the east of Jordan, while David, at the command of God, removed with his band and all his family from Ziklag, where the tidings of Saul's death first reached him, to Hebron, the ancient sacred city of the tribe of Judah. Here the men of Judah came to him, and annointed him king over their tribe (2 Sam. 2: 1–7, 11)."—Smith. Here David reigned seven and one half years.

On the other hand, Abner, the chief captain of Israel, proclaimed Ishbosheth, the eldest surviving son of Saul, as king, nominally over all Israel. Five years were probably spent in gaining control over the ten tribes. Ishbosheth reigned but two years (2 Sam. 2: 8–10), which were spent in a civil war with Judah. Ishbosheth's forces were defeated at the Pool of Gibeon. Abner, on account of an insult from Ishbosheth, deserted him and went over to David, but was slain by Joab; and Ishbosheth himself was slain by two of his own captains. They intended to proclaim as king Mephibosheth, Jonathan's son, a lame boy of ten or twelve years, and the only male survivor of Saul's family. It was at this juncture of events that David was elected king over all Israel, as the only one who was able to unite the nation at this crisis. —Peloubet.

"All the tribes." The particular numbers present from each tribe are given in the Book of Chronicles. The grand total—339,600 men, and 1224 chiefs, and so many of them from the other side of the Jordan—afforded a truly marvellous exhibition of national unity and enthusiasm.—Edersheim.

"Made a league with them." This league was probably a solemn contract in which the king on the one hand engaged to rule according to the laws, and the people on the other hand promised him their allegiance. Some kind of a charter, defining the king's rights, was in existence (1 Sam. 10: 25); and later on we find the people demanding some limitation of these rights (1 Kings 12: 3 ff.). The Israelite monarchy was not an absolute and irresponsible despotism.—Cambridge Bible.

"And they anointed David King over Israel." This was his third anointing as king. The first had been by Samuel in the midst of his brethren (1 Sam. 16: 13), the second as king over Judah (chap. 2: 4). Compare Saul's two anointings, 1 Sam. 10: 1; 11: 14, 15.—Peloubet.

"Went to Jerusalem." Political, civil and military considerations, pointed to Jerusalem as the most suitable capital for the united kingdom. (1) Its position within the territory of Benjamin, yet close upon the borders of Judah (or, as some think, partly in one tribe, partly in the other), was excellently adapted for binding together the two royal tribes, and conciliating the good-will of Benjamin without alienating Judah. (2) Its situation was virtually central, not only with regard to these two great tribes, but for the whole land. "It was on the ridge of the backbone of hills which extend through the whole country from the Desert to the plain of Esdraelon." —Stanley's "Sinai and Pal." (3) As a military post it was unrivalled. It stood on a rocky plateau surrounded on three sides by deep ravines, forming a natural fortress of almost impregnable strength.—Cambridge Bible. (4) It was safer for David than any more northern city would have been, for he was under the protection of his own tribe of Judah. (5) This choice of a capital was made by David, as elsewhere declared, under divine direction (Deut. 12: 5–21; 1 Kings 11: 36).—Schaff.

"Which spake unto David, saying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame." This is not sense. The passage should be rendered thus: "And (the Jebusite) spake to David, saying, Thou shalt not come hither, but the blind and the lame shall keep thee off." The blind and the lame are either literally such, placed there in derision by the Jebusites who thought the stronghold impregnable, as Josephus takes it, or they are the Jebusite garrison, so called in derision by David.—Cook.

"Thinking, David cannot come in hither." The height on the south above the valley of Hinnom is 303 feet. On the southcast it is 242 feet, on the east 204 to 159, on the west 95 to 139.—Map of Ordnance Survey. Lieut. Conder says, however, that the valleys of the Kedron and of Hinnom—torrent beds, he calls them—are "about 500 feet below the hills on which Jerusalem is built, and at their junction are 650 feet below the water-shed."—Conder's Handbook, p. 329.

"Whosoever getteth up to the gutter." The word for gutter is used only here and in Ps. 42, where it is rendered "water spouts" or "water pipes." We may interpret this verse as follows: "Whosoever will smite the Jebusites, let him reach both the lame and the blind, who are the hated of David's soul, by the water-course, and he shall be chief. The only access to the citadel was where the water had worn a channel (some understand a subterranean channel), and where there was, in consequence, some vegetation in the rock.—Cook. A great shaft from the hill of Jerusalem to a covered aqueduct leading from the Fountain of the Virgin has been thought by some to be meant. It is supposed that Joab and his men reached this shaft by wading along the subterranean aqueduct and having ascended it, burst on the townsmen when least expected, inside the town itself.—Geikie.

"From Millo." The Millo—the word always has the definite article—appears to have been some important fortification already in existence. It may have protected the city on the north, the only side on which it had not the defence of precipitous ravines. Solomon rebuilt it (1 Kings 9: 15, 24; 11: 27), and Hezekiah repaired it as a defence against the Assyrians (2 Chron. 32: 5). Millo may have been an old Canaanite name.—Cambridge Bible.

"Cedar trees." Felled, no doubt, in the forests of Lebanon, and brought by sea to Joppa (comp. 2 Chron. 2: 16). The cedar was the prince of trees (Ps. 104: 16), the emblem of strength and stature and grandeur (Ps. 92: 12; Am. 2: 8; Ezek. 31: 3). Its timber was highly prized for building on account of its durability. Other species of pine besides the well-known cedar of Lebanon were probably included under the general term cedar.—Cambridge Bible.

"The Lord had established him." He gave the glory to the One who deserved it. Whatever he may have done himself, he was fully conscious that he could have done nothing without the blessing and favor of God. And this was done "for his people Israel's sake," to build up a kingdom on earth. The cause was more than any one man, though he were a king. David, and through him the Israelitish monarchy, now took a wider range. He became a king on the scale of the great oriental sovereigns of Egypt and Persia, with a regular administration and organization of court and camp; and he also founded an imperial dominion which for the first time realized the patriarchal description of the bounds of the chosen people. This imperial dominion was of but short duration, continuing only through the reigns of David and his successor, Solomon. But, for the period of its existence, it lent a peculiar character to the sacred history. For once, the kings of Israel were on a level with the great potentates of the world.—Stanley.

Mr. Richard A. Proctor holds that if the full power of the arms and legs can be so applied to ingeniously arranged mechanism as to work wings more or less resembling those of a bird, there is little reason of doubting man's power of sustaining himself in the air and even traveling with great rapidity through it. Probably, he adds, it will be much easier for him to sustain himself while traveling rapidly onward than while hovering over the same spot.

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1884.

THE CYNOSURE is spoken of by our good Prof. Kimball as political and not religious; and others speak of it as religious and not political. If any one doubts whether the Cynosure is an organ of the American party, let him read this, and back numbers and see. And if any one doubts that it is "religious," let him pray for it. The editor hopes that the Chicago Board will take immediate measures to raise the list and lower the price.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION must be regarded as a great success, a stupendous register to mark the march of God in our reform. There was less of formal prayer than there should have been, but many hearts constantly sent up petitions to God.

The speech of the Cynosure editor delivered on Thursday evening, June 19, was in type by the Inter Ocean before it was delivered. The Chicago Times treated Senator Pomeroy's speech in a similar way. Miss Frances E. Willard's letter "To the American Party," was a beam of starlight. The agent of the Associated Press is breaking away the banks which have confined us to a narrow channel hitherto, and so God is marching on.

THE FRATERNAL COMMITTEE.—Senator Pomeroy, E. D. Bailey, Dr. Kirby, J. Blanchard, J. P. Stoddard, Mrs. E. A. Cook, and Mrs. L. N. Stratton were appointed to bear the greeting of the American party to the Prohibition Home-Protection party meeting at Pittsburg, July 23d. The road and hotel expenses of these good women, at least, should be borne. We are advised that the National Committee had a called meeting and brief deliberation at Chicago, and resolved among other things that $5,000 at least should be raised to defray such incidental expenses of the campaign. We call attention of the Secretary and General Agent of the whole movement, political and religious, to this matter, and urge that means be immediately taken to meet such expenses. This committee is an important one and should all attend.

TO THE OLD GUARD!—Hail comrades! A shade of sadness clouded some of your faces in our late Convention such as rested on the faces of the army veterans in 1783; when independence was gained and they with empty pockets turned toward their homes. But those ill-clad, bare-footed, unpaid troops many of them lived to vote many years under the flag which they had borne to victory: and those who went to heaven by a shorter route, think you they there regreted the toils, privations and sufferings which they had borne in the American cause? Neither will you. You have asserted freedom of speech in the teeth of the sworn secret enemies of republican government; and the tinselled tools of tyrants and kings. Let us rejoice and be glad and covenent with God and each other that as mob violence and lodge gall and venom have not quelled us we will yet see the ballot-box, jury-box, and communion table free from the curse and dry rot of nations.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

has had six Presidents and held power twenty-four years. Its platform promises:

1. We will give a "quick response to the demands of the people;" but we will not let them vote on the liquor trade which cost them $900,000,000 a year and pays $86,000,000 revenue, through three States, and several million voters in other States "demand" it.

2. We will so "correct" the tariff as to raise the price of wool, and the price of factory cloth at the same time, and thus benefit the laborer and the capitalist at once.

3. We have held power twenty-four years and Mormonism has steadily flourished under us; but if we get power the next four years, we are in favor of "promptly and affectually" suppressing polygamy.

4. We are for "purity of legislation," and endorse President Arthur, who has filled the vaults of the White House with liquor; sets six liquor-glasses to each plate at his public dinners; and who allows two huge dram-bars in the Capitol at which Senators and Representatives can, and some do get drunk.

5. We "favor the eight hour law," so that farmers can have only eight hours work done in winter and in harvest, and must pay wages all the same.

6. We have filled the departments at Washington with clerks, a vast proportion of whom were rebels and traitors; and the rebel General Pike's son is among those best paid, whose father's Masonic Indians scalped our soldiers at Pea Ridge; but now we promise civil "service reform" if we can elect Mr. Blaine.

7. We promise the people "honest money" consisting of two sorts of paper money, one made by the government, the other by the banks, which are now weekly failing, and defrauding depositors. In short, elect our candidates, and Jack Cade and General Butler shall not outdo us in promises.

Indeed our platform excels them both; and having not the least idea in the world of keeping our promises, it costs nothing to have them magnificent; and we, therefore, deal out promises as liberally as our licensed landlords deal out liquor, unwilling that those who support them should be sorrowful or sober.

In all seriousness the Republic platform, adopted in this city, last June 4th, seems to us one of the most insincere documents, and containing the most impossible and absurd promises ever issued to an enlightened and trusting people.

THE AMERICAN NOMINEE.

Ex-Senator S. C. Pomeroy was unanimously nominated by the American Convention as their candidate for the Presidency in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20th, 1884.

It is not the wont of the American party to blink or shut its eyes to unwelcome truths. We are sorry for the sincere opposition to our candidate from Kansas, where he has made his record. We are sorry there should be any occasion for such opposition, and we have studied it carefully and attentively, and think we fully understand the opposition and its causes; and, with what we deem, a full knowledge of the facts, the Cynosure will support MR. POMEROY to the utmost limit of its powers.

We request the esteemed and respected men who resisted his nomination to consider:

1. That, as between us and our God, we are all of us somewhat deficient. We wish Senator Pomeroy was perfectly sanctified,—that we all were; both in Kansas and out.

2. That it is a terrible ordeal to stand, to-day, in the American party, whose clear light and correct morals reveals every small hole in the coats of its candidates.

3. That, in the words of Thaddeus Stevens, "We live among men, and not angels."

4. Consider that Daniel Webster, in the last years of his life could not have stood the scrutiny of the American party an hour; and,

5. That while Mr. Pomeroy has some of Webster's frailties, he has none of his great and terrible faults. He has never gone back on his principles or his religion.

6. And while Gov. St. John, who was supported by the Kansas brethren, has shunned our meetings at Emporia, at Washington, and at Chicago, though urged and besought to attend, Mr. Pomeroy has stood with us while he was a popular U. S. Senator, as he has since the lodge land-slide buried him alive for advocating our cause!

Let the American party hang together or they will certainly hang separately; and God who used Sampson, and Jonah, and the Apostle Peter, and made their cause triumphant, will do the very same for us.

—The ably edited National American of St. Louis is amused at the quarrel of the Signal of Delaware, O., and the Lever of this city, both of which claim to be the organ of the Prohibition Home Protection party. The Signal has already been adopted by some States, while the Lever, with the arrogance of narrow-mindedness, assumes to read out of the party the Kansas and Iowa temperance men with St. John and Neal Dow. The latter is understood to support Blaine as he says: "Mr. Blaine is and always has been a friend and supporter of the Maine law and has done it good service." The National American cannot see any use for a prohibition party organ until the prohibition voters of the country, such as now known as Republicans in Ohio, Kansas and Iowa, make up a party which shall need one. It votes for the Signal.

—The Illinois Prohibitionists have nominated J. B. Hobbs, of Chicago, for Governor. A proposition favoring Gov. St. John for President was adopted with cheers. The resolutions call for the prevention of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages, and condemn the proposition that the revenue from whisky be given to the States for educational purposes. They demand civil service reform, the granting of the ballot to women, and oppose competition between convict and honest labor. A considerable proportion of the standing committees chosen are members of secret orders, and we are told that Mr. Hobbs is a Freemason, but will endeavor to learn positively.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The National Christian Association came together at 10 A. M. Thursday last in their rooms at 221 West Madison St., Chicago, and the president, Mr. F. W. Capwell, not having arrived, J. W. Wood of Baraboo, Wis., was chosen temporary chairman. Prayer was offered by Rev. B. F. Worrell of Olathe, Kansas, and the roll called and minutes read by the secretary. Some twenty-five or thirty members were present, but other friends of the Association came in until there was no more room for them, and arrangements were made to hold the afternoon session in lower Farwell Hall.

Mr. Capwell entered and the chair was resigned to him.

A committee on revision of the roll composed of M. R. Britten, J. P. Stoddard and H. H. Hinman, was instructed to consider some plan of purging the roll of inactive members by a change of the by-laws, or by correspondence get all the members into working order.

The report of the Corresponding Secretary and General Agent was read and adopted; and so much of the document as referred to literature for children was referred to J. P. Stoddard, H. H. Hinman, E. G. Paine, M. A. Gault and C. C. Foote as special committee to report some plan of pushing forward this part of the work.

The report of the Board of Directors was read by the vice-president, Prof. O. F. Lumry, in the absence of Dr. W. T. Mcloy. The report was approved; as was also the report of the Treasurer, W. I. Phillips.

Committees were then chosen:

On nominations: J. L. Barlow, M. R. Britten, John Dorcas, E. G. Paine, J. P. Stoddard, Peter D. Miller.

On memorial: L. N. Stratton, O. F. Lumry, B. F. Worrell.

On Washington property: M. R. Britten, Geo. W. Needels F. W. Capwell, J. C. Allis.

After a song from the ever-popular "Liberty Singer," George W. Clark, President Capwell made a few remarks expressing his satisfaction in co-operating with the members of the Association. He said:

"One year to-day, for the first time, I had the pleasure of meeting with you here in this hall. I had for years read in the Cynosure the noble, soul-firing addresses, essays, reports and letters of the host of co-workers in the reforms of the day; yet never till then had I enjoyed the privilege of seeing you eye to eye, and of becoming acquainted with you by the hearing of the ear. My highest anticipations were more than realized. The Spirit of God was manifestly present with us. Right heartily were "foreigners" welcomed to your hospitality and to your homes. We found ourselves among men deeply in earnest, conscientious in conviction, open and honorable in objects and aims, fearless in speech and action. No marvel; such is the "stuff" reformers are made of, and such society, with Christ to lead, is good enough for me.

Your State has the honor of calling the primary meeting at City Hall, Aurora, Ill., in October, 1867, which culminated in the organization of the N. C. A. at Pittsburgh, Pa., in May, 1868. The Association was legally incorporated under the laws of Illinois in 1874. It has held annual meetings and conventions since its organization. It is not surprising that you should select for your presidents men of the first rank in reform. It was a great surprise to me that the name of F. W. Capwell was by your action placed with such names on that high roll of honor. Far short as I may have come in discharging the duties of the station as they have done, or in meeting your reasonable expectations, nevertheless I have brought to your service the best purposes, the sincerest efforts and the warmest sympathies of a heart, whose every pulsation is in full accord with the worthy objects of your valued and cherished Association. My prayer is that God may bless you and my successor."

THE AFTERNOON SESSION

was held in lower Farwell Hall with some 150 present.

Rev. H. H. Hinman, who has been employed by the Association as special agent during the year made a verbal report, in which he spoke in warm commendation of the teachableness of the colored people, their accessibility and readiness to receive what commended itself to them as truth. Though many of them are entrapped by the show and flummery of secret orders, they are willing to hear and consider arguments intended to overthrow them. H. L. Kellogg added a few facts respecting the inquiring state of the colored churches and denominational bodies, which show that a wide and strong objection to the lodges is springing up throughout the South, which the Association could not afford to ignore. Judicious effort would assist in enlightening these churches and confirming them in their testimony against the anti-Christian orders. He moved a committee on Southern work and the following were appointed: H. L. Kellogg, H. H. Hinman, E. D. Bailey, Rufus Smith.

W. B. Stoddard, New York State agent, made a few remarks respecting the success of the reform in that State. A proof of this was seen in the twenty delegates to the American convention from the western part of the State. He had introduced the Cynosure into 126 families.

Geo. W. Needels was called upon for his views on the colporteur work, the usefulness of which he rated very highly. A committee composed of Isaac Bancroft, M. A. Gault and B. F. Worrell was appointed to report on this branch of work.

Senator Pomeroy having entered the hall was loudly called for, and being invited forward by president Capwell, spoke as follows:

Thanking the Association for their warm greeting, he wanted to say something to the brother who in speaking of our reform work said he was on the political side, as if there were two sides, a religious and a political. He believed that both should be harmonized in such a meeting. One might vote one day and attend a meeting of the Association next, but always be on the right side. He had heard of an Irishman who had signed the pledge and got a Father Mathew medal. Coming over to America he was besought to drink. "Och," said Mike, "but I can't drink." "But," said Pat, "that was good for Ireland, not for America." "Och," replied Mike, "can I take my body to America and leave my soul in Ireland?" I don't like to change principles. Some have advocated a new platform. We must have a new committee on platform. We must have a new committee on platform. What do we want of a new platform? Have we any new principles? Any new enemies to meet? I have observed the history of other parties and can see a painful change in their platforms. The Republican party, with which I was associated from the first, has grieved many good men by its changes. I can show how that party has entirely departed from its early convictions. I have attended every national convention of that party. At first we were for men, but now that party has forgotten every word of the vital doctrines of the early days. Republicans once denounced in their platform "secret sectarianism," meaning the effort to exclude the Bible from the schools. The Democrats once denounced secret societies of all kinds. But they are far enough from such principles now! Until Dennis Kearney began to get together his Sand Lot meeting, the Republican party never thought of denouncing Chinamen. Now what could be worse than the attitude of that party? What was the spirit of the fathers? They welcomed to our shores the oppressed of every nation. "Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea and Cappadocia, in Pontus and Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes, and Arabians"—the oppressed of every nation and clime were here offered a home and liberty from despotic government. Such are the principles which we must reassert as Americans.

Gen. A. W. Riley was also called for, and the venerable but vigorous old man of the extreme age of 89 years came forward. It was a pleasure, he said, to look such men in the face. He had often done so in this country and Europe. There is one principle God has set up in the government of this world. Nothing dies so long as it is fulfilling mission. Water stagnates when it stops flowing. A tree decays when it ceases to grow. A church when it stops opposing sin begins to die. He spoke of the temperance work in Rochester in an early day, and of the first lecture on total abstinence given in Boston by himself. In the early days of Rochester they held Bible meetings and resolved to put a Bible into every house, a plan which is now nationalized. They also held a meeting for the Sabbath and resolved to petition the government to stop the mails. They sent old "Tecumseh" Johnson, but he betrayed the movement. Nevertheless cross mails were stopped and are stopped to this day. Finney came to Rochester and 1,500 young men were converted. Though the city at first elected temperance men, now license is favored and evil men rule.

The committee on nominations reported, and their report was adopted as follows:

PRESIDENT, F. W. Capwell.
VICE-PRESIDENT, O. F. Lumry.
RECORDING SECRETARY, J. D. Nutting.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY and GENERAL AGENT, J. P. Stoddard.
TREASURER, W. I. Phillips.
DIRECTORS: Joseph Travis, O. F. Lumry, A. G. Laird, John Gardnrr, M. R. Britten, W. T. Meloy, T. H. Gault, Thos. Hodge, Alex. Thomson, L. N. Stratton, J. B. Blank.

The committee on Southern work reported and their report was thus adopted:

The committee to whom was referred the work of the N. C. A. in the South, would report that they are strongly impressed with the importanee, practicability, and need of earnest labor among the people in the South. The important fact that Baptist, Methodist, Congregational and Presbyterian conferences have been self-moved to declare their testimony against the secret organizations; and the fact that many local churches of colored people in the cities of Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Washington are open to this discussion, make it eminently desirable that one or more agents be employed to labor in the South; and your committee recommend that the Board of Directors be instructed to correspond with and seeure the services of such labor ers and that we earnestly commend their support to the friends of the N. C. A.

R. SMITH.
H. H. HINMAN.
H. L. KELLOGG.

I endorse the report, but add my recommendation that Mr. Hinman be appointed agent for the South with headquarters at Berea, Ky., or Washington, D. C.

E. D. BAILEY.

The committee on colporteur work reported verbally by Rev. I. Bancroft, but no action was taken beyond accepting the report.

The election of editors for the Cynosure was left to the Board.

The committee on memorial presented the following which was adopted as a token of respect for a former president and liberal supporter of the Association:

WHEREAS, Deacon Moses Pettengill, a lifetime reformer and philanthropist, and a friend of a gospel uncorrupted by the curse of Christless worships, and a civilization unstained by the bloody oaths of Masonic and kindred fraternities, has been removed by death, therefore

Resolved, That we, as members of the National Christian Association, bow our heads with submission to the wisdom of the Infinite and all merciful Father, who has removed from the efficient labors of life to the eternal rest of the faithful, our beloved brother and co-worker.

Resolved, That we express our deepest sympathy with the wife and son, and that we transmit a copy of this paper to the bereaved wife and son, and spread it upon our minutes.

Resolved, That we will lift the harder at the load which has grown the heavier because of the removal of our beloved brother.

L. N. STRATTON.
B. F. WORRELL.
O. F. LUMRY.

The reports of committees on the roll, and of literature for children were referred to the Board of Directors.

The following new members were voted upon: Rev. Harvey Johnson, of Baltimore, Rev. A. C. Hand, Mrs. A. C. Hand, Wm. H. Morrill, J. K. Williams, Rev. W. W. Ames, Rev. B. F. Worrell, Rev. J. A. Richards, A. J. Loudenback, W. R. Hench, Mrs. H. A. Day, B. T. Pettengill, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Collins, Gen. A. W. Riley.

There being some desire to have a preliminary political meeting before evening, the Association adjourned till morning, when the committee on Washington property reported their satisfaction with the purchase, and recommended J. P. Stoddard and E. D. Bailey to have care of the building, the N. C. A. to reserve one room, and give the use of others to the American Publishing Company, the net proceeds from the rent of the rest to be equally divided.

The records were referred to the Board for revision, and a little space was given to speech-making over the Cynosure, which was commended in the warmest terms by a number of friends.

The Association then adjourned.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

CAMPAIGN SONG.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR SIR:—I send you the following song from my song book with the suggestion that it may be sung with interest and effect at any of our reform meetings, being set to the easy and familiar tune of Webb, that all can sing. It may be found on page 77, (also good campaign songs on pages 6, 10, 36, 11, 8, 34, 64, 40, 55, 53, 52, 57, 45, 78, 84, 80, 81, 86, 87, 85, 113, 97, 73).

Yours, etc., GEO. W. CLARK.

Will ye despise the acorn just thrusting out its shoot
Ye giants of the forest that strike the deepest root?
Will ye despise the streamlets upon the mountain side
Ye broad and mighty rivers, on-sweeping to the tide?

That ereseent faint and trembling her lamps shall nightly trim,
Till thou, imperious planet, shall in her light grow dim;
And so shall wax the party, now feeble at its birth,
Till liberty shall cover this tyrant trodden earth.

Then rally to its banners supported by the true,
The weakest are the waning, the many are the few;
Of what is small, but living, God makes himself the nurse;
While "onward" cry the voices of all his universe!

Our plant is of the cedar, that knoweth not decay;
Its growth shall bless the mountains till mountains pass away.
God speed the infant party, the party of the whole—
And surely he will do it while justice is its soul.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

3; J. P. St. John, 1; and Julius Seelye, 1. Senator Pomeroy's nomination was made unanimous.

H. H. Hinman nominated J. A. Conant for the second place on the ticket, and the vote by acclamation showed no opposition.

The following letter was read and voted a kind reception. The resolution suggested was voted:

CHICAGO, Ill., June 20th, 1884.

To the American Party, in session at Chicago.

GREETING—In behalf of the Seventh Day Adventists of America, we wish to express our interest in prohibition and opposition to secret organizations, and promise the support of our people both in voice and ballot in the coming campaign. And in order that we may not be placed in seeming opposition to any part of the prohibition movement,

We petition this party to favor no resolutionsfavoring Sunday laws to the exclusion of protection of those who observe the seventh day, and would ask this honorable body to endorse the resolution upon this point made at the late Michigan State convention, held at Battle Creek, as follows:

Resolved, "That this Association express its conviction that in the matter of Sabbath legislation those who observe the seventh day are entitled to the same protection as those who observe the first."

Believing in equal rights to all, and wishing the prohibition movement final suceess.

We are resp'y. yours,

ELD. JAMES SAWYER.
ELD. GEO. B. STORR.

Ministers of the S. D. A. Denomination, 219 W. Madison street, Chicago.

A reply to Miss Willard's letter was voted; and the Convention elected a National Committee as follows:

New York, F. W. Capwell; Pennsylvania, E. W. Kirby, Illinois, L. N. Stratton; Wiseonsin, M. R. Britten; Minnesota; E. G. Paine; Dakota, A. F. Dempsey; Kansas, H. Curtis; Nebraska, E. B. Graham; Mississippi, E. Tapley; District of Columbia, E. D. Bailey; Ohio, J. M. Scott; Indiana, Israel Hess; New Hampshire, S. C. Kimball; Massaehusetts, S. A. Pratt; Connecticut, P. Bacon; Rhode Island, A. M. Paull; Missouri, G. W. Needles; Michigan, S. P. Poole; Iowa, J. N. Norris; New Jersey, Robert Armstrong.

J. L. Barlow, J. Blanchard, and F. W. Capwell were made a committee to wait on the candidates and inform them of their nomination; and it was thoughtfully resolved that reports of the convention be published in county papers so far as delegates could secure it.

The Convention the adjourned till eight o'clock, it being already nearly seven.

The evening was occupied with addresses by Senator S. C. Pomeroy and E. D. Bailey, for which space forbids the present publication.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it. Yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy; and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living, and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country; "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE HOME.

GOD WILL EXPLAIN IT ALL.

Two women were dwellers beneath one roof;
The one was beloved and young and fair;
The other, ah, well, she had had her day,
Now her cheeks were faded and white her hair.

One at eventide wrought on dainty robes
That told the secret she held in her breast,
And smiled as she thought, He will love me more
When he sees his child to my bosom pressed.

While the other knelt in her lonely room
With her dim eye lifted toward the sky,
And prayed, "I am heart-sick, weary, and old,
There is nothing to live for: let me die."

At dawn, in dumb anguish, a strong man stands
By the lifeless form of his fair young wife,
And his motherless babe moans in the arms
Of the desolate woman weary of life.

And the happy children play in the streets,
And brightly as ever the sunbeams fall,
And the busy crowds go hurrying by,
And some time God will explain it all.

CLUBISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

In a recent issue of the Christian Secretary there is an article under the above title which is worthy of more than a passing notice, not only by many members of our churches who are contributing both of their financial ability and life force to the support of secret organizations, but also of young men who are seriously considering the question of uniting with such societies. In the present state of things this question is pressed with greater or less force on the mind of almost every young man. When a student, the writer knowing several Baptist ministers who had withdrawn from the Masonic fraternity, walking no more with them, and men of very excellent character, ventured to ask one of these, "What do you think of Masonry?" Looking at me intently a moment he replied, "The devil apes the church of God."

Soon after entering the ministry where converts were being gathered into the church there was among the inquirers a man who seemed deeply impressed, and who became the subject of special labor and prayer. His wife was converted and baptized, but still he "stood outside the gate." One day as I was walking with him he abruptly brought up the subject of Masonry and began extolling that institution. I soon saw why he could not become a Christian—Masonry was his religion—and he remained blinded by it, in sin. Later it was my pleasure to be the guest of Bro. Colver, son of the noted Rev. Nathaniel Colver, D.D. We spoke of that scene in Boston where the attempt was made to compel his father to take the oath of a Royal Arch Mason, viz: "To protect his brother Mason in all crimes not excepting murder and treason," and he so boldly and grandly refused. Can a man take that oath and be worthy of citizenship in any nation?

As we dwelt on the subject he said, "When I was a small boy we were living in New York; I was out playing in the yard one evening when a man came by and told my father that a man out in the western part of the State was going to reveal all the secrets of the order, and there was to be a meeting of the lodge that night to see what should be done about it. He wanted father to go. But instead of going to the lodge he went into the house, sat up all night, wrote his Renunciation of Masonry, and in the morning read it to his family. (The case referred to was that of Morgan). Never shall I forget the just pride with which he spoke of his father's after conflicts with the fraternity, how, when they threatened his life, not in the least daunted he would go upon the platform, make his statements, and then in the presence of the audience turn to these men and say, "Gentlemen, isn't that so?" Pointing to the memoir of his father on the shelf he said in a significant manner, "Dr. ——— has just touched upon it there."

Again, at the close of service one evening, during a protracted meeting in this city, a member of the Presbyterian church giving me his hand said, "I have made up my mind that the church is the place for a man to work, I have joined nearly all of the secret societies and it has cost me thousands of dollars and now," he added with emphasis, "I have made up my mind that the church is the place for a Christian man to work." Yes, now, after his thousands were gone and the force and energy of his young manhood were spent! I often think of it as I see professed Christian men wending their way to the secret society rooms two or three nights in the week, while they have no time for the prayer meeting and little or nothing to give for the support of the Gospel. Whatever good may be accomplished by these societies we must admit there is a wrong here, for God is robbed. These societies are all of man's invention, but the church is God's institution.

Young men, do you desire to make the best use of the wealth that shall come into your hands during life? Do you seek the best associates, a work worthy of your highest ambition, your best endeavors, the full consecration of all your powers? A work that will give you the greatest satisfaction, even everlasting joy? Your opportunity is in God's church. It is in that work which brings salvation directly to men. It is the propagation of that Gospel which breathes "Peace on earth." Through this work you will contribute in the most direct way to the mitigation of those evils which afflict the human race. For the work of the church is not small, narrow and contracted, but wide in its scope embracing "every good work." It is great, broad and grand, the noblest work of earth ennobled and sanctified by the toils, the prayers, the tears, the benedictions and the blood of God's own Son. Clubism as we see it to-day is arrayed in great part against this work; in its best features it is but the ape of it, and never can be anything else. For it is human and carnal, made up largely of minds that are "enmity against God." Hence it can never possess the divine power which gives the church her might or that divine indwelling which robes her in beauty and shall give her eternal glory.—Sabbath Recorder.

EXTEMPORE LISTENING.

In the late discussion before the Unitarian Club as to the comparative merits of extempore and written sermons, Rev. Brooke Herford touched upon a thought that deserves emphasis. He says: "It occurred to me that there might be something said, distinctly in connection with the value and power of sermons, upon extempore listening. I am inclined to think that a great deal of this present craving for special vivacity of manner arises from the listening of the present day being so largely extemporaneous. Did it ever occur to you that listening, in order to be worth much, needs preparing for, as much as speaking, and that there are a great many persons who listen extempore, who never think upon these great topics upon which they expect the preacher to speak, up to the last moment of entering the church?"

A good deal is written and said in these days about how to preach. In the days of Christ and Paul what to preach seemed of vastly more importance. How to listen, what preparation of mind and heart is needful, what attitude toward the truth, what appreciation of the truth—these are more important questions than extempore or written preachings. "Take heed how ye hear," is a divine injunction; "Take heed how ye preach," is a human command. When the sower went forth to sow, he was as faithful to one kind of soil as to another. The seed was as good, the action as graceful, but much of the labor of the sower and the vitality of the seed was wasted because of the birds and the soil. Soil pressed by busy feet and laden wagons six days in the week is well fitted to be a table in the wilderness for unclean birds the seventh day; soil that is thin by reason of an understratum of rock is just the place to destroy seed. Soil that is already mortgaged to weeds has nothing left for the seed. The soil needs preparation quite as much as the sower and the seed.

The family altar at each end of the daily furrow will keep the birds away. An hour a day of Bible study and prayer will bar out the traffic of the world. A practical application of truth already accepted will break up the fallow ground, deepen the soil of the stony ground, and kill out the weeds that spring up and choke the harvest that is unto life.

Peter on the day of Pentecost preached to prepared hearers, "devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Paul on Mars Hill preached to extempore listeners. "For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else but either to tell or to hear some new thing." When Peter's audience heard the truth, "they were pricked in their heart and said unto Peter and to the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" In Athens "when they heard of the resurrection of the dead some mocked; and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter."

Brethren in the pew, the graduate of a fishing boat can succeed with a devout audience, but a graduate of Gamaliel's school will fail with an Athenian audience. "Take heed how ye hear."—The Watchman.

TRYING TO GET IN AT THE WRONG DOOR.

The Rev. Mr. Riddell narrated the following: "When I began my ministry in Dundee, I had the privilege of meeting many of those who were blessed under the preaching of the sainted Murray M'Cheyne. I was told of one case of conversion which is rather peculiar. The person was much troubled, his mind was filled with gloomy darkness, and he had no peace nor rest. One day as Mr. M'Cheyne was preaching to Christians, not to those outside of Christ's fold, the man got peace. After the service he went round to the vestry to see the minister, who did not need to inquire if the visitor had peace, it shone in his face; so he simply asked, 'How did you get it?' He answered: 'All the time I've been trying to enter in at the saints' door, but while you were speaking I saw my mistake and entered in at the sinners' door.' It is the only way; you need not come to God as a saint, or a pretty good sort of a person, but simply as a sinner, wanting and needing salvation. If you do so in Christ's name, you will get it."—Ch. Herald.

PRAYING FOR A DENOMINATION.

An exchange informs us that at the meeting of certain pastors, in an Eastern city, it was concluded that their denomination was barely holding its own in that region. After a discussion of various measures proposed, it was resolved to try prayer, and the preachers solemnly covenanted with each other, that for three months they would devote one-half hour or more of each day for praying for the churches of their denomination in that city.

This as a last resort, after trying fairs, festivals, lecture courses, levees, tableaux, etc., seems to be an improvement; but we would suggest that their prayers might well be widened a little in scope, until they should comprehend not only the churches of their own denomination, but the churches of other denominations, and of no denomination, which possibly may stand in equal need of blessing.

We would not for a moment object to these good brethren praying for their denomination, and we certainly hope it is not past praying for, but we have in our mind another prayer, the prayer of him who built his church upon the Rock, and who prayed concerning his people "that they all may be ONE." If this prayer should be answered it is certain that the good brethren who are praying for the churches of their denomination, would have nothing to pray for; it is probable that their denomination, with all the others, would be lost in the unity of the one body of Christ.

May God grant that the prayers of these brethren may be answered in so far as they are according to his will, and that they, rising above the good of their own denomination, may include in their prayers "all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours," and say from the heart, "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."—Safeguard.

GOD'S SEVERITY.

Is there not some danger, in the present day, of God's love being presented to sinners, to the exclusion altogether of his justice? The late Rev. F. W. Robertson speaks well on this subject: "Here is an eternal truth with which we would not part: God must hate sin, and be forever sin's enemy. Because he is the Lord of love, therefore must he be consuming fire to evil. God is against evil, but for us. If, then, we sin, he must be against us. In sinning, we identify ourselves with evil, therefore we must endure the consuming fire. O brethren, in this soft age in which we live, it is good to fall back on the first principles of everlasting truth. We have come to think that education may be maintained by mere laws of love instead of discipline, and that public punishment may be abolished. We say that these things are contrary to the Gospel; and here, doubtless, there is an underlying truth. It is true that there may be a severity in education which defeats itself; it is true that love and tenderness may do more than severity—but yet, under a system of mere love and tenderness, no character can acquire manliness and firmness. When you have once got rid of the idea of public punishment, then by degrees you will also get rid of the idea of sin. Where is it written in the Word of God that the sword of his minister is to be borne in vain? In this world of groaning and of anguish, tell us where it is that the law which links suffering to sin has ceased to act? Nay, so long as there is evil, so long will there be penalty, and woe to that man who attempts to contradict the eternal system of God.

The Rev. John Elliot, styled The Apostle of Indians, was once asked by a pious woman who was vexed with a wicked husband, and bad company frequently infesting her house on this account, what she should do. "Take," said he, "the Holy Bible into your hand when bad company comes in, and that will soon drive them out of the house."

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

IF.

If you your lips
Would keep from slips,
Five things observe with care:
Of whom you speak,
To whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where.

If you your ears
Would save from jeers,
These things keep meekly hid:
Myself and I,
And mine and my,
And how I do or did.

TOO CERTAIN.

"Father, I am tired of reading the Bible. I have read it so often that I know everything in it."

"Everything, my son? Do you think you could not find one chapter that would contain something you never noticed?"

"Yes father, I think so. I am sure I know all that is in the historical parts of the Bible."

"Well, let me try you. When were a large number of men fed with a few loaves of bread, and a supply left when they had done eating?"

"Why father, surely I remember Christ's feeding several thousand persons at two different times, with a few loaves and fishes."

"Very well, those are two instances. Now tell me the third."

"There is no other in the Bible."

"You are perfectly sure of that are you? Suppose you reflect a little before you answer again."

"Yes father, I have thought, and I am certain there is no other miracle of the kind mentioned in the Bible."

"Well, my son, open your book at the fourth chapter of the fourth book of Kings."

"The fourth book of Kings! Father, there is no such book."

"Hand me the Bible. What does this title say?"

"It is 'the second book of the Kings, commonly called the fourth book of the Kings.' "

"Well, there is one thing learned by the boy who knew the Bible so well! Now turn to the fourth chapter, and read from the forty-second verse."

"Here it is, sir; 'And there came a man from Baalshalisha, and brought the man of God—' "

"Who was the man of God?"

"I must look. It was the prophet Elisha."

"Now proceed."

" 'And brought the man of God bread of the first-fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn in the husk thereof. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat. And his servitor said, What! should I set this before a hundred men? He said again, Give the people, that they may eat; for thus saith the Lord. They shall eat, and shall leave thereof. So he set it before them and they did eat and left thereof, according to the word of the Lord.' "

"That will do for this time, my son. I have never wished to make the reading of the Scriptures tedious by requiring you to read them continually, without giving you other books to read. But I wanted to convince you how mistaken young people are apt to be in their ideas of their own knowledge. There are thousands of children —yes, and of men and women too—who would read with great interest many passages in the Bible if they found them in a fresh and beautiful volume which they believed to contain nothing but what was published for the first time. Remember this, and let me advise you to read the four books of Kings, and to make a list of all the passages you will find there, which, like the one you have just read, are as new to you as if you had never heard or read them.—Sailor's Magazine.

THE ZULU CHIEF.

The Zulus, or the inhabitants of Zululand, a large province in south-eastern Africa, are a fierce and savage people. In January, 1879, war between Cetewayo the Zulu king and the English government commenced, and continued until Cetewayo was made a prisoner and sent to England.

It was during this war also that the Prince Imperial, son of the late Emperor Louis Napoleon and the Empress Eugenie, was surprised and killed by the Zulus. You will remember it, and the grief of his widowed mother at the death of her son.

The houses of the Zulus are shaped like bee-hives, covered with thatch with an opening on one side about two feet high, which answers the purpose of door, windows, and chimney, and no floor but the cold, damp earth.

The kraals or villages consist of a number of these huts built in a circle, with the open space in the center for cattle.

Near one of these Zulu kraals lived an English missionary, Rev. John Allsopp, who was in the habit of preaching to and teaching the people of the village, as well as those in the country about it.

At one time the principal chief of the tribe in which he lived sickened and died. The custom there is that when any great man dies, a number of men and women, generally slaves, are buried alive or killed, for it is believed that their spirits accompany him to the other world, to wait upon him. So, when a messenger came early to tell Mr. Allsopp that the chief had died, he felt very sad, for he knew what it might prove to many; and he knew also how careful the Zulus were to follow the customs of their ancestors. But he mounted his horse and rode to the kraal, to see the young chief whose father had just died; and on his way he passed several hills, on which he saw a number of people sitting in great terror, fearing lest they were to be killed or buried alive at this time. It was a pitiful sight.

When Mr. Allsopp reached the kraal the young chief took him to see his father, and there the dead man was, sitting, not lying, with his blanket thrown over him.

He went back into the open space in the center, and as he and the young man stood together, with clasped hands and tears in their eyes, the latter said:

"My father is dead. Who will guide me and tell me what I shall do?"

Mr. Allsopp said to him:

"My friend, you have heard the Gospel, and know your duty. Shall the news go throughout south Africa and to Christian nations that you will shed the blood of your people? Or, that you are a man of mercy, and will show your power to do what is right? Give me your word."

As the good missionary said this the prayer went silently up from his heart to the God who always hears us, that he would incline this young man to save the lives of the poor people in his power. You have read the beautiful Bible story of the prophet Nehemiah, who was cup-bearer to King Artaxerxes, in the royal palace of Shushan in Persia. How he prayed to the King of kings in his heart, as he stood in the presence of his Master, the king of Persia, and presented his request to return to Jerusalem to rebuild it; and how quickly the answer came!

So it was in this case. Mr. Allsopp's prayer was answered, for the chief looked steadily in his face and said:

"Umfundisi," (or missionary), "not a man shall die."

The missionary took him by the hand again, and answered:

"I believe you. The chief has spoken. Not a man shall die. Farewell."

"Doubt me not," he replied; "not a man shall die."

And he was true to his word, for after Mr. Allsopp left him he sent for the men who had been selected to die, and who would have been slain in a few minutes, and said to them:

"You know that the old councillors and the witch doctors would have you die; but I say, No. Go and live upon such a hill; there you will be safe, and nobody shall harm you"

And so it was. It was a brave act for the young chief, for it was different from all the customs of the Zulus, and no omission of this kind had ever taken place before.

This shows also how the love of Jesus will soften the wildest and most savage, making them gentle and courteous.—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

W. C. T. U.

O friends, whose hands in mine I clasp,
O friends, whose hearts are shrined in mine,
Responsive to your earnest grasp,
I give to you the mystic sign.
No badge Masonic marks our craft,
No bannered pomp our ranks display;
But viewless spirits tokens waft
From soul to soul, along the way.

THE TEMPERANCE RECORD OF PROMINENT PARTY MEN.

James G. Blaine recently proposed in a letter over his own signature to pay back to each State its proportion of the government tax on alcoholic liquors. This puts a premium on the amount of that tax in each, and appeals, for a continuance of the legalized traffic, to the business instincts of the money-saving American. Mr. Blaine offers wine at his table, and deems total abstinence a mild form of lunacy.

George F. Edmunds sneered in open Senate at Senator Blair's national constitutional amendment, satirized that Senator's attempt to make the use of alcoholics a cause of non-promotion in the civil service, and himself freely uses and offers wine.

Chester A. Arthur is a well known bon vivant, and by his habits and opinions is an opponent of the temperance movement.

John A. Logan's favorite scheme is to make the liquor traffic support the public schools, thus attempting to yoke our educational system to the unholiest alliance of history.

Robert Lincoln (whose father pledged in cold water the committee who announced to him his nomination for President), is a social drinker of wine.

John Sherman, of Ohio, was champion of the bonded whisky bill in the Senate, speaks soft words to liquor dealers always, and was the quiet but uncompromising enemy of the W. C. T. U. of his State in its great battle for constitutional amendment.

Postmaster-General Walter Gresham of Indiana and Senator Frye of Maine are total abstainers, and men of clean record. Senator Ben Harrison, of Indiana, is a member of the Presbyterian church, and what is better, a practical Christian and total abstainer. Joseph Hawley, of Connecticut, does not favor prohibition. Senator Alison, of Iowa, is a social drinker, and a man who follows but is not brave enough to help make public opinion. Senator James Wilson, of Iowa, has the courage of his convictions and is a prohibitionist and total abstainer. Senator H. W. Blair, of New Hampshire, is thoroughly sound on all the great questions of the day; a civil service reformer, a prohibitionist who has the courage of a martyr, and he is also author of the educational bill which devotes seventy millions of dollars to our public schools—the greatest measure adopted by the Senate in our generation.

Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania, is a total abstainer, so is John G. Carlisle, of Kectucky, both for the same reason—excesses of the past. They have made a noble fight for their manhood, which should encourage every reformed man and insure them the respect of all good people. Senator McDonald, of Indiana, is a moderate drinker and open opponent of prohibition. Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks are opponents of prohibition, and would furnish wine at the White House.

INTEMPERANCE IN GERMANY.

The theory that the devotion of the Germans to beer saves them from the evils of intemperance is being sadly exploded. The last year has witnessed a considerable revival of temperance agitation in Prussia, in regard to which our consul general at Frankfort, Ferdinand Voegeler, presents some interesting facts in the last bulletin of the state department. The consumption of beer in Prussia has risen to the enormous amount of 87.6 liters per head annually, and that of ardent spirits to ten or eleven liters per head, far exceeding the American rate of consumption. The liter is a little larger than the quart, so that the Prussian consumption of beer is from 20 to 25 gallons per head, against about 10 gallons in America, while the consumption of spirits there is about 3 gallons, against 1½ in this country, including what is used in the arts. These estimates of the American consumption are derived from the returns of the internal revenue office, and may vary for different years. The number of open drinking saloons in Prussia has increased from 120,000 in 1869 to 165,000 in 1880; ardent spirits were sold in 93,000 of these, being 1 to every 104 inhabitants. Of the crimes committed in five years, 41 per cent. were committed under the influence of liquor, and 50 per cent. of the pauperism is due to intemperance. In Germany it is clearly established, as it is everywhere, that the multiplication of saloons increases intemperance.

The liquor laws of the German States have been slack under the empire, and the evil of intemperance has thus got the upper hand, but a recent debate in the Prussian House of Representatives on the guzzling of university students, and the activity of temperance societies, indicate a new awakening. The Gottenburg system is under discussion, but the tendency is more toward the Dutch system, correspouding to our limited license. A few years ago the alarming increase of intemperance in Holland, from the multiplicity of grog-shops, led to the enactment of a law fixing a maximum number of saloons per capita of the population for places of various dimensions. Cities of fifty thousand people or more are allowed one saloon to every five hundred people; cities of from twenty thousand to fifty thousand one to four hundred; from ten thousand to twenty thousand one to three hundred; and all smaller places one to every two hundred and fifty. Consul General Voegeler thinks German opinion favors this system.

It is interesting to note that Lars O. Smith, the "Swedish Brandy King," who has turned temperance advocate, subscribes to the doctrine that "the fewer the public houses the less drunkenness you will have; the more places where men can drink, the more they will drink." He is opposed to the Gottenburg system, which he says is corrupt, and moreover promotes the consumption of impure liquors. He made a fight against it by starting an opposition at his distilleries on the river near Stockholm, and carrying the people to his resorts free by steamer. The Swedish brandy is distilled from potatoes, and requires expensive rectifying. Mr. Smith favors the licensing of a few places at a high fee—$1,500 a year—and is active in introducing savings banks, co-operative kitchens, and other institutions for a working class. He has perhaps come to the conclusion that he has got to do a deal of good to offset the evil of his products.—Springfield Republican.

The wary traveler can no longer drink "the wine of the country" in Paris for fear of the evil effects of water. In the last report of the Paris Municipal Laboratory, under whose chemical scrutiny the wines of city trade must pass, the number of good wines found in the analysis of 3,361 samples was only 357, while 1,093 were passable, 1,709 were bad, and 202 positively dangerous.

Philadelphia is disgraced by over 8,000 liquor saloons, More than 7,000 of them are kept by foreigners and about 200 by Americans. Over thirty-five foreigners to one American! This does not speak well for our foreign population, but it must be remembered that it is only those who have no character to lose that go into this disreputable traffic.

THE COMMENCEMENTS.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

The anniversary at Wheaton derived unusual attraction this year from several features of special interest. A class composed entirely of ladies has but once before been graduated from the College, and never since the first class (1860) have they failed to bear their part upon commencement day; the graduation of the first class from the Theological Seminary was also awaited with considerable interest as several of the young men who completed their course were graduates of the College and have been long known and highly esteemed in Wheaton. The previous week had already concluded the class gatherings and literary society special meetings when the Sabbath congregation gathered to the Baccalaureate sermon by ex-President J. Blanchard. Perhaps never has so large a congregation gathered at such an occasion, under circumstances more agreeable. The venerable speaker seemed to catch an inspiration from the hour, and the tone of his voice and the vigor of his thought recalled former days, which seemed almost to have returned. His text was from Proverbs 31: 30: "Favor is deceitful and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the Lord she shall be praised"; Ec. 1: 18: "He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow"; and 2 Peter 1: 5: "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge."

The brief final address to the graduating class was made by Pres. C. A. Blanchard, while other pastors of the place assisted in the services.

In the evening the anniversary of the Society of Inquiry was a time of unusual interest, since the speakers departed from the usual routine of a finely written essay on some missionary topic. Rev. E. B. Graham of the United Presbyterian church, Omaha, preached an excellent and eloquent discourse from the text, "Never man spake like this man" (John 7: 46), comparing the words of Christ with those of other men.

Rev. A. J. Chittenden, pastor of the College church, followed with an address upon the duty of the Christian church to reform communities and nations as well as individuals, with some remarks in conclusion upon Christian union as opposed to sectarianism. Rev. N. Wardner, editor of the Wesleyan, Syracuse, N. Y., had been invited to speak but was unable to be present.

Tuesday afternoon the Alumni Association held a delightful social meeting at the home of one of their number, W. F. Baker, and in the evening held their public literary exercises in the College Hall. These were an address of welcome to the graduates of 1884 by the president, W. F. Gates, Esq., of Chicago; an address by E. D. Bailey, editor of the American, Washington city; and an essay by Miss M. C. Bent of Wheaton.

Mr. Bailey's address, entitled, "The Two Republics," was an eloquent comparison of the French and American nations with a forcible appeal for the early principles of the American polity.

In the business meeting that followed an extended programme was adopted for the celebration of the Quarter-centennial of the College next year. It provides in brief for a whole day's meetings, beginning with an old-time morning chapel exercise conducted by ex-Pres. J. Blanchard, to be followed by a kind of experience meeting and dinner under the trees of the campus. In the afternoon there are to be histories of each of the twenty-four classes, a memorial address and an address on principles and providences of Wheaton College. In the evening will be orations from representatives of the undergraduates and of the Alumni Association and a poem. Major J. Wesley Powell of Washington City, Rev. Warren F. Day of Ottawa, and Mrs. Maud Smith Gardner of Avoca, Iowa, were selected for these appointments.

The Board of Trustees met on Tuesday and completed the business of the year in a harmonious meeting. Tutor D. A. Straw was made acting professor of Logic and Rhetoric and Principal of the Preparatory Department; Miss A. J. Carothers, the Lady Principal, was chosen adjunct professor of Ancient Languages. Mr. Straw and Prof. H. A. Fischer were appointed financial agents to labor during the summer vacation especially.

With Commencement Day came the full sweep of the tide of intellectual enjoyment which had been rising higher day by day. Amid the multitude that crowded every avenue to the auditorium of the College were noticed numbers of the earnest and tried friends of Christian reform, who have supported in all the land the principles for which the College also stands. Of these may be mentioned H. A. Day, N. E. Gardner, C. C. Foote, E. D. Bailey, J. F. Carroll, S. E. Starry, H. Curtis, W. W. Warner, J. L. Barlow, E. G. Paine, Geo. W. Needels, J. T Buckley, W. W. Ames, B. F. Worrell, A. G. Laird, A. C. Hand. Mr. Geo. Soltau, the English evangelist, Mr. Revel, Mr. Charles Herald and Miss Peterson of the Chicago Avenue church, Chicago, and Pres. M. L. Holt, of Neligh College, Nebraska, were also present.

The room was beautifully decorated, and the class motto, "Fortiter, Fideliter, forsan Feliciter," (Bravely, faithfully, and perhaps successfully) covered with bright green the background of the stage.

The class was ushered to their seats as the College band played a cheerful march. The exercises opened with prayer by Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit.

The graduation programme was then announced in order by Pres. C. A. Blanchard:

Salutatory and Essay, "Winnowed Grain," by Miss Lenora B. Lewis of Wheaton; Essay, "To Each his Own," by Miss Ophelia Axtell, Sterling, Kansas; Oration, "Compensation," Miss Cora L. Tatham, Osceola, Iowa; Essay, "Abrasion of Thought," Miss Etta M. Johnson, Warrenville, Ill.; Essay, "Agnosticism," Miss Celestia Axtell, Sterling, Kansas; and oration, "A. B.," followed by valedictory, Miss Ellen C. Blake, Granville, Ill.

These exercises began with so sweet so pure, so elegant a strain, like the opening measures from a matchless orchestra, that it could hardly be credited that it could continue unbroken to the end; and when the last word of the valedictory was spoken without a discord of thought or tone, or a break in the harmony, or a check to the continuity of the silver stream of maiden eloquence, every listener was ready to exclaim, Such a day has not been surpassed!

The salutatory mentioned with a tender respect the great loss sustained by the College in the death of its warm friend and noble patron, Moses Pettengill, and the universal satisfaction at the presence of the venerable ex-President of the College; and no less the gratitude that the tide of proscription had turned back from the institution. The enigmatical subject of the concluding oration was the cover for a warm plea for the study of the Greek and Latin. Miss Blake was the only member of the class who has pursued these branches and received the degree of A. B. The valedictory referred with a tender delicacy to the crushing losses that had fallen upon the young hearts of two members of the class from the heavy hand of death, which had also been borne in part by the President and ex-President of the College.

The Master's Oration was given by Miss Elsie Dow, of McGaw Normal Institute, New Hampshire. Her subject, "The Right of the Strongest," was an address of which any of the gentlemen who have always spoken for the Master's degree might well be proud. Her application of Paul's great principle of self-denial was a noble tribute to that virtue.

Rev. F. A. Noble, D.D., pastor of Union Park church, on being introduced for the anniversary address, humorously complimented the audience on their patience through the long exercises. The subject of his address was the noble Englishman, John Bright.

The announcements and conferring of the degrees upon the graduates and the class of 1881 followed. Ex-Pres. J. Blanchard, before pronouncing the benediction, spoke with full heart of his satisfaction at the performance of the class.

The music of all the anniversary was largely managed by Prof. S. W. Martin of the Musical Conservatory, and was of greater diversity than usual and of equal excellence.

The concert of the Conservatory occupied the early part of the evening, and was followed by the President's levee in the College parlors, which was a happy gathering, the dangerous illness of Mrs. C. A. Blanchard being the only check to the universal joy.

WHEATON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The first class to graduate from this "school of the prophets" addressed a large and expectant audience of friendly listeners in the College Hall on Monday, June 16th.

On the Sabbath afternoon preceding, Pres. L. N. Stratton preached the anniversary sermon from Eph. 4: 11–13: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Revs. J. E. Carroll of Cleveland, O., C. F. Hawley, evangelist, Clark of Sycamore, Ill., and the local pastors assisted in the interesting exercises.

Monday evening, June 16th, called together a large and cultured audience to listen to the exercises of graduation. Prof. S. Wesley Martin furnished the music. Rev. A. C. Chittenden opened with prayer. Miss Orella Blake, who spent the past year in the theological department of Boston University, returned and graduated at Wheaton. Her address upon "Lessons from Unitarianism" was very forcible. It was thought by some that in making her case strong for orthodox activity, she made too many accessions to Unitarianism, but the aim and intention was good. Mr. S. A. Manwell delivered an oration on the subject of "The Truth." His manner of treating his subject and his fine delivery were both highly commendable. "Ethics in Politics," was the theme of Mr. J. N. Bedford, who showed in a forcible manner the need of reform in the conduct of our courts of justice, and integrity in dealing with the masses. Mr. C. R. Hunt happily showed the need and strength of "The Supernatural Man." His oration was next to magnificent. Mr. O. C. Bedford gave the closing oration upon the subject of "Smouldering Fires." It was crisp, bright and full of thought. The general impression respecting the exercises seemed to be that they were excellent, and unequalled by similar exercises in other theological seminaries, especially in their strokes against popular evils and growing infidelity, and in prophecies and praises of the triumphant right.

All showed the effect of careful study and a faithful improvement of the excellent privileges of the Seminary. The address to the class and conferring the degrees by Pres. Stratton followed the last oration in earnest and eloquent admonition and encouragement to the class now to leave their preparatory life behind, and give more entirely their attention to the great work to which they believe themselves called of the Holy Spirit. They will begin this work with the prayers and benedictions of hundreds who have watched their course with sympathy and encouragement.

WASIOJA SEMINARY.

Thinking that it might be of interest to some, at least, to hear from Wasioja, I will write a few lines. Wasioja is a quiet little village, beautifully located on the Zumbro river, in Dodge county, Minnesota, in which village is located the W. M. Seminary of Minnesota. The school has been in the hands of the Wesleyan Methodists eleven years, during nine of which Prof. E. G. Paine has been principal. Bro. Paine is a man of God, and stands firm on the side of reform, as was recently manifested in the Wasioja Temperance Club, holding that secrecy is greatly in the way of prohibition, and that because of secrecy woman's suffrage is necessary to obtain prohibition. He is doing what he can. The influence of Wasioja is felt in that section of the country. It is the headquarters of the county for temperance, and the only place that dare speak out against the gigantic evil of secrecy. May God bless its noble workers.

Well, a year of hard work has just closed, but it has been a pleasant one. We believe that God has been with us the past year. In his name did we work.

Lessons closed Friday, June 6th. Monday and Tuesday were devoted to examinations (oral). The average standing of the school was, I think, about 95. Tuesday evening we were nobly entertained by the Alumni Association. The exercises consisted of music, furnished by a few from a neighboring village, essay by H. B. Mullenix, orations by J. C. Gilman, A. B. Gould, and F. Orelup. We highly congratulate the boys for their able speeches and excellent delivery. The music was good.

I may as well say here as elsewhere that the ministerial association was held in the Seminary on Tuesday, in which the little band of God's workers in the Wesleyan connection of Minnesota gathered, exchanged views, kindly corrected each other's failings, and encouraged each other in their great work. A resolution was passed expressing their regard and sympathy for Bro. C. H. Norton who could not be there, being then, and is now, suffering with mental prostration. The association went down before God in prayer in his behalf. His burdened wife was also remembered in the resolution. Bro. Norton has been confined to his bed nearly all winter with nervous prostration. This spring his reason was threatened. He is now in a critical condition, and needs the sympathy of all. Financial assistance would come very acceptable. His address is Wasioja.

Wednesday was devoted to decorating the chapel for the graduating exercises in the evening. The evening came and brought with it more people than the room could hold. Many could not find even standing room, and returned to their homes.

Four ladies graduated. To say that they did remarkably well is but a faint expression of our appreciation. The names of the graduates, also the titles of their essays, are: May E. Banhart, "Latent Forces;" A. M. Darling, "Heroes and Heroism;" Stella M. Gould, "Finished or Not;" Mary L. Woods, "Great Days." After the reading of the essays, which were interspersed with music, Prof. Paine made a very appropriate and enthusiastic little speech, in which he said: "These girls pray," and that they were not afraid to have it known that they prayed for God's help on that occasion, closing with the blessing of the Master upon them and presenting their diplomas. We know that these ladies are devoted Christians, for our voices have mingled together many times in the prayer room. May God's blessing rest upon them and may they consecrate (and we believe they have) their improved talents to God and the mighty work of reform.

Mrs. C. P. B. Lang (preceptress) made the graduates a very able speech, pointing out life to them, what they should meet and how to succeed, after which Miss Mary P. Paine (teacher of music), with a short and very affecting speech presented Mrs. L. with a silver castor and pickle dish, as a token of the love which the teachers and pupils have for her, who could not be with them as teacher another year, if ever. With tears Mrs. L. returned her thanks.

Bro. C. H. Norton's case was presented to that crowded house, which we hope (and believe) donated liberally to him in this his time of need.

"Home, Sweet Home," by Mr. F. L. Wilson, of Mantorville, Minn., closed the exercises. Next term begins September 3rd. A STUDENT.

THE CHURCHES.

—Mr. George Soltau, a distinguished English evangelist who assisted Moody and Sankey in London, was conducting evangelistic services at Chicago Avenue church in this city every evening last week.

—It is announced by cable that Mr. Moody would close his work in London on Monday and take the steamer for America next day. It is believed that two million people have heard the gospel during the unparalelled series of meetings in the English capital.

—A dispatch from Freeport, Ill., announces that trouble has broken out in the congregation of St. John's German Evangelical church of Freeport. The question which has raised the great disturbance is whether or not the members of the church who belong to secret societies shall or shall not be compelled to withdraw from the church. At a meeting of the congregation lately this subject was discussed pro and con, and some strong language was used. When a member named Fred. C. Held, who is also treasurer of the city, attempted to explain that there was no harm to come from belonging to the ordinary secret society, another member answered him with some severity, and the members waxed warm over the matter. The report we hope is exaggerated. If the spirit of God abides in these people the lodge curse can be readily cast out.

—In the city of Damascus, which contains a population of 200,000, a missionary reports "that in many of the Mohammedan houses groups of men are gathered to read and study the Bible, and while engaged in discussion the inmates of the harem had gathered about the windows and listened, and seemed much interested."

—The statistics of Christian work in Japan for the year 1883 have been in part gathered, and, from the reports received from 88 churches, Mr. Kozaki, of Tokio, estimates the number of evangelical church members in Japan at not less than 7,000, with somewhat over 100 churches. The gain in the 19 churches connected with the mission of the American Board, from January to December inclusive, was 465, or 42 per cent. The church at Imabari has received 90, the church at Anaka 89, during the year.

—The late Mr. Arthur Wells, of Nottingham, who died a short time since, left $60,000 to the London Missionary society. The Rev. B. Paton, principal of the Congregational Institute, Nottingham, who knew Mr. Wells intimately, attributes this munificent gift in large measure to the donor's interest in the works of Miss Gordon Cumming,—"At Home in Fiji," "A Lady's Cruise in a French Man-of-War," and "Fire Fountains,"—which bear striking and impartial testimony to the wonderful influence exerted by Christian missions in the South Sea Islands.

—A correspondent of an English paper writes from Brazil: "The population of Rio de Janeiro is about half a million. There are only seven Protestant ministers in the whole city—namely: two Brazilian, four American, and one English. There are only four Protestant churches. I grieve for the English people here, who are like sheep without a shepherd. England sends missionaries to all parts of the world except Brazil; I think Mr. Vanorden, of Rio Grande du Sul, is the only one from England. There are none in Rio, unless you count the English Episcopalian minister one. Nearly all the shops are open here on Sunday, and it is the great day for horse races and bull fights, regatta, cricket-matches, and athletic sports. Sunday is the day for all grand exhibitions or important business; Sunday work is quite common among the English clerks and merchants.

—The Marquis of Ripon, the present Viceroy of India, is a Roman Catholic, and, since his appointment in 1880, has used the power of his office to advance the interests of the Romish mission in that country, and, as far as he has been able, to the detriment of Protestant missions. A number of the highest offices in his gift have been filled with Romanists, and he is encouraging the Jesuits in their work, who, as they are being driven out of other countries, are flocking to India in large numbers. The London Post states that an order has been issued which places the Roman churches on an equality with the Established churches; and, by the countenance and encouragement given by the highest officer in the Empire, Romanism is making rapid progress in the country, especially in the centres of education and influence.

—One of the most successful church organizations of New York City is that of the Union Tabernacle, of which the Rev. G. J. Mingins is pastor. The annual report of the treasurer shows that the money collected in the baskets and through the envelopes amounted to $4,000, paying all the running expenses, including salaries, gas, coal, etc., and leaving a small sum in the treasury. The trustees had received $3,600, the greater amount of which was collected by the pastor from friends outside of church membership. This amount was expended in paying ground rent, interest, fitting up the building, etc. The additions to the church in the past year were fifty—half of whom were from the Sabbath-school. The present church membership is three hundred and twenty-five. In a report made recently Mr. Mingins says: "The richest man in my church is a clerk receiving $1,200 a year. The congregations on Sabbath evenings average about one thousand persons."

—Five societies having missions in Canton, China, baptized, the past year, 395 persons. The London and American Baptist missions each have 380 members, the Wesleyan, 300, the Berlin mission 500, and the American Presbyterians 600. The number of adult member in the Canton Province is about 4,000.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society, between 1804 and the present year, has sent out 96,917,629 Bibles. All the Bible Societies in the world have, since 1804, distributed over 175 millions of Bibles, Testaments and portions of the Scriptures.

—Sir William Muir, well known to missionaries in India, said in a recent address on missions, that he did not attribute imperfect success to the methods employed by missionaries, but to the utter inadequacy of their numbers. "Look at Central Asia and Central Africa, with their vast and thickly-populated countries, left in gross darkness, or with but here and there a glimmer, making the darkness all the deeper. What, again, are we doing in that great and open field of Persia? At most, but one or two missionaries for the whole people. Arabia is left untouched. The northern shores of Africa, once noble Sees under Cyprian and Augustine, afterward swallowed up in the Saracen invasion, and now once more open to us through European influence, are equally neglected. So, too, with Cyprus and Egypt, gotten, as we are wont to say, with 'peace and honor;' but there is no peace or honor to the church, when we obtain a kingdom and leave it without the message of peace from the King of heaven."

When will true Christians have done with their sectarian strifes, and disputations, and divisions, and shaking themselves free from human yokes of bondage, stand forth in that unity for which Jesus prayed, "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me?" When will they unite heart and hand upon Christ the one foundation, receiving one another as Christ hath received them, and shaking themselves free from that friendship of the world which is ever enmity with God? When will they consolidate their skeleton sects into living churches of Jesus Christ; send the price of their useless mosques and gorgeous pagodas to plant the gospel among the nations that sit in darkness; ship off their superfluous ministers, who can preach, to carry glad tidings to nations who sit in darkness, and sustain them while doing it? And, finally, when will the people themselves who know the Lord, enter this wide, white harvest field, like those saints of old who 'went everywhere preaching the word?'"

CHICAGO BIBLE WORK.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS:—In answer to letters of inquiry which we are receiving from young men, we reply that we have closed the first six weeks' session of the Training Class in systematic Bible study.

The class has been instructed mainly by Rev. Prof. W. G. Moorehead, D.D., of Xenia, Ohio, though we have been favored by the assistance of Rev. Samuel Ives Curtiss, Rev. Prof. Hugh McD. Scott, Rev. H. M. Collison of Chicago, and especially by Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton, Ill.

The attendance has been over 70, and the interest on the part of the students has been deeply earnest and devout.

We now hope to open this Training School in the autumn, and to receive into it, on proper recommendation, such young persons as are prepared, by their Christian consecration and ability, diligently to study the Bible and successfully to give out its truths to perishing souls around them.

Pray that our yet imperfect plans may be shaped according to the mind of the Lord, and that he will send out from this school not only scores, not only hundreds, but great multitudes of earnest Christians, mighty in the Scriptures, to proclaim the Gospel to the destitute.

We are frequently asked, What scholastic education is desirable to fit young men and young women for ordinary Christian work? We believe that the Lord will use any consecrated Christian to give out his word, and that many an "uneducated" man and woman is endued by the Holy Spirit with great power in the Lord's service, and we also understand, from the Scriptures, that there is no successful Christian service without the gracious power of the Holy Spirit. The POWER is of grace, and God's word is the gracious well-spring of salvation (Psa. 119), and whoever thirsts after righteousness may cry effectually, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters....yea, come buy wine and milk without money, and without price"; but, if we are permitted, in answer to your inquiries, to recommend a course of study desirable for ordinary Christian work, we say to young people, try to finish a high school course of study with Greek. Such a course should give good mental training and prepare the way for future study and improvement; and in this country almost any young man and young woman with ability worth educating can educate himself or herself through a high school course of study, and if pecuniary means are limited, what of it? you are richer for that! You have, by this need, better opportunities for the exercise of ingenuity, wisdom, skill, economy, patience, vigorous efforts in many directions, and prayerful trust in our God, who has promised to equip for their work those whom he sends forth into his harvest. 1 Cor. 9: 7, f. c.

Inability to do common things well is a most serious defect among any class of workers, and ought not long to exist among Christian workers.

Young friend, desiring to do good Christian work, what is in your hand now? Do your best with that thing. It may, just now, appear to you like a small factor of life's great work, but on it hang great dangers, or great successes. If you ill do that thing you may likewise ill do all to which it is related; if you do that well —"heartily, as unto the Lord"—you are more likely to continue doing whatever you do "heartily, as unto the Lord."

Young men and young women, on whom the work of life presses heavily, gratefully rejoice if you are obediently doing your work, "heartily, as unto the Lord"; for himself has said that "he that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much" (Luke 16: 10). "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2: 15).

If you are willing to be led by him, ask him with reference to his service, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and do what he directs in his word and providence (Matt. 7: 7).

Young men, young women, boys and girls, who of you will pray and plan and work now, that you may, in the remaining years, be most successfully used in Christ's service? In the fellowship of the Gospel,

MISS E. DRYER.

THE
CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

FARM AND GARDEN.

RAISING HUBBARD SQUASHES.

Owing to a scarcity of Hubbard squashes during the past season this product has commanded an unusually high price. A gardener who has been very successful in growing large crops of Hubbards, attributes his success to his method of culture, which is as follows:

He manures a strip about a rod wide, through his garden, upon which he plants early potatoes. About the middle of June he makes a row of hills through the center and in them plants Hubbard squash seeds. When the potatoes are large enough the rows nearest the squashes on both sides are dug first, then the next two rows, and so on. By this method, the squash vines with a little training, will not reach the potatoes so as to interfere with, and be injured by, digging the latter. By this method he has always escaped the ravages of the striped bug. Another successful squash grower avoids the cut worm by digging deep holes for the hills and partially filling them with well rotted manure.

Upon this he spreads a layer of coal ashes an inch or two in depth. This is covered with about two inches of soil, in which the seeds are planted, then another layer of coal ashes is spread upon the surface. By combining the two methods a good crop of squashes can probably be secured every year.—American Cultivator.

CULTIVATION OF CURRANTS.

Currant culture, if not entirely abandoned, is neglected to a great extent, owing to the ravages of insects infesting the bushes: a little care will conquer all these.

When the stems are eaten by borers, rendering them hollow, and in many instances causing them to break, trim the bushes in the fall or early spring, and where a solid stem is found cut away till solid wood only remains. Burn all such prunings. If scale infest the stems scrape them off, or wash the stems with strong potash water.

For worms that eat the foliage, apply one ounce of powdered hellebore thoroughly stirred into a pailful of water; sprinkle the foliage with this from a water pot. Hellebore is not hurtful to man, and can be used on currants even when fruit is ripe enough to pick, if the fruit is only well washed before using. In the absence of hellebore. hot water a little hotter than one can bear the hand in, applied to the foliage will kill most of the worms, or at least hold them in check, until hellebore can be procured.

The currant span-worm, so called from arching its back at every step, is more difficult to kill than any other of the leaf-eating caterpillars. Should it attack the foliage while the fruit is upon the bushes, double or treble the amount of hellebore given above, and apply in the same manner. After the fruit is gathered, should they infest the bushes, use Paris green, a teaspoonful to a pail of water, applied with a watering-can, or apply "slug-shot" dusted over them.

In autumn, after the fall of the leaf, clear up all the litter from around the bushes and burn it, then apply a top-dressing of air-slacked lime or potash in some form; wood ashes are especially valuable for this purpose.

This dressing destroys most larvæ of all insects that burrow in the soil near the bushes. Clean culture is a great foe to most injurious insects. Feed your ground with abundance of well rotted manure, and bushes bending under the weight of fruit will be your reward.—American Garden.

BAGGING GRAPES.

A writer in the New York Tribune says:

I have used a comparatively simple way of supplying bags to protect grape bunches. The stem of the bunch is at one angle of the mouth of the flattened bag, and the whole top is turned down with a single flat fold, just as we turn down the leaf of a book. The pin to hold the fold down is then easily inserted. Little or no rain can enter; the bag will serve another season, and the motion of applying it being the same in nearly all cases, and very simple, is so much the more speedy. Red grapes kept for me in good condition till April last year. They had been in the bags undisturbed—only by picking them and placing them in a cool room and later in a cellar—from July 1st to April—nine months. There are a number of advantages attending the use of the bags, as will be found by any amateur who makes the experiment of using some. One to two pound grocer's bags answer the purpose excellently.

Another correspondent of the same paper in treating the same subject says:

We did not gather the last bag of Concords till the first week of November, three weeks after the foliage had been totally killed. They were exceedingly rich and piquant, and although the disturbance caused several berries to drop off, the bag retained them, and hereafter we shall gather our Concords in the bag, as we want them, up to mid-November, if hard freezing defers so long. As to the bags preventing rot we can only say from here that we have as yet found only one or two Ionas affected on one bunch in a rather open bag; but there was not much rot this year outside of bags. The bags left open at bottom are not so good; insects get in and detached grapes roll out. Our bags look as if they might serve another season; we have no very heavy rain storms to strain them.

But there is another unmentioned merit of these paper bags too good to be passed over. They are a great aid to the keeping of grapes in the house. For years we have tried one after another of the published methods of keeping grapes, with vexatious ill success. They moulded alike in a cave, in a dry bank and in the cellar; while in dry rooms they shrivelled; and if packed in cotton so many were apt to be detached and become nauseous that we lost hope of enjoyment from stored grapes. The only ones that kept well were some of Rogers' red sorts under glass, cold, left hanging on the vines. But now bunches of many sorts laid in the bags on a large scaffold in a cool room of still air keep admirably, and we have never yet taken out a pin to open one of the bags without a treble delight over their beauty of bloom and fullness, their exquisite piquancy of flavor, and the renewed hope of having all this enjoyment close under hand for months of future years.

J. B. Rogers gives some notes on the details of bagging grapes:

The only safe rule is to apply the bag as soon as the cluster is formed. If delayed too long the spore of disease may have attached itself to the berry, and result in rot. Some have applied the bag before blossoming has taken place. As the new shoot is very tender and brittle, great care must be exercised not to break it. Take manilla or any other paper bags; cut off the upper corners, in order to wrap the upper portion around the cane, and then pin it. The size of the bag depends upon the usual length of the cluster, and whether more than one cluster is placed in a bag. A two or three pound bag is sufficient for most single clusters. As a result of bagging the cluster will average larger, ripen later, color in general better, produce larger berries, and the bloom will be preserved more perfectly than in those not bagged. As to flavor opinions vary. Some think it is better, others that it is not improved.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminisences.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying

Freemasonry at a Glance, which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents. Address

IN BRIEF.

A Japanese traveler says that certain classes of murders in that country are punishable with the death of the murderer, all his family, and his school-master.

The Chicago public library has 117,000 books. The largest issue for one day was 3,317 volumes, and the average number of Sunday visitors is 1,711. There are thirty-one employes, the annual pay-roll being $24,727.

The concrete foundation for the Bartholdi Statue on Bedloe's Island is finished and is considered by engineers the most solid stone of concrete ever constructed.

James and Lucretia Mott are said to have been gentle but sternly just; kind but inflexible; ready to do good to all men, but particularly intent on doing good to evil men by convicting them of their sin.

The Iowa State Fair, without any horse trots, gathered in receipts to the amount of $42,000. This does not look as if the "agricultural hoss trot" was a necessity for success in that enterprising State.

A Congressman, not long ago, made a good point in the presence of his fellow members when he said, "Last year the Ways and Means Committee brought in here and we passed, a bill to admit free of duty the Bible in the Chinese language; and now, having provided for the free admission of Chinese Bibles, we have turned around and declared that the Chinese themselves shall not come."

A young man in California being a confirmed opium eater stole two coats from a room in his boarding house, expecting to be sent to jail for three months, and thus be unable to procure opium. He hoped so to become cured of his bad habit. To his dismay he found that his crime was a burglary, instead of petit larceny, and he was sentenced to the State prison for a term of years.

A New York photographer is quoted as saying: "After twenty-five years experience under the skylight, and after photographing over a hundred and forty-seven thousand people, I have become convineed that in nineteen cases out of twenty the left side of the faces gives the most characteristic likeness, while to the same degree the right side is the most symmetrical."

New York is the center of the cigar-making trade. She has nearly 4,000 factories, and turns out 1,000,000,000 cigars a year. Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois rank after New York. There were made in this country last year 3,167,060,925 cigars, about forty for every pound of tobacco used. About 35,000,000 were imported, thus making a total of about 3,212,000,000, or sixty for every man, woman and child in the United States, and 250 for every man over 21 years of age. This twin-brother of the drink curse will demand the same methods now advocated by the Prohibitionists. The principle will be settled as to alcohol and then may be easily extended to include all such useless and destructive agents.—Living Issue.

Some sixty years since a Bank of England £5 note was paid into a Liverpool merchant's office in the ordinary course of business. On holding it up to the light to test its genuineness, the cashier saw some faint red marks upon it. Examining them closely, he traced some half-effaced words between the printed lines and upon the margin of the note, written apparently in blood. After a long and minute serutiny, he made out the words: "If this note shall fall into the hands of John Dean, of Longhill, near Carlisle, he will learn hereby that his brother is languishing a prisoner in Algiers." The merchant immediately communicated with Mr. Dean, and he lost no time in bringing the matter before the government. Inquiries were set on foot and the unfortunate man was discovered and ransomed. He had been a slave to the Dey of Algiers for eleven years when the message he had traced with a splinter of wood dipped in his own blood reached the Liverpool counting-house.—Panama Herald.

REMARKABLE SURGERY.—A remarkable case of recovery from what was thought to be a fatal gun-shot wound brought many eminent physicians to Bellevue Hospital, this city, last week. A young German who shot himself in the head some months ago had been the subject of a number of remarkable surgical operations. The bullet entered the brain immediately above the nose and passed through the head, lodging in the base of the brain, from which it was removed by boring a hole in the skull. A drainage tube was inserted as a drain for the blood and matter from the wound. Subsequently the tube was withdrawn, the wound healed, and insanity did not result.

The operation for a new nose in plastic surgery was not long since performed in Bellevue Hospital, with more than ordinary success. The French and Italian method of building up a nose from the cheeks or the arm has little to recommend it, because, there being neither bone nor cartilage, the flesh sinks into the face, a shapeless mass. In the Bellevue Hospital case Dr. Sabine used the middle finger of the left hand as bridge and septum, taking off three phalanges. This he covered with pieces of flesh from the cheeks. The patient, a messenger in the hospital, called "Tommy," was suffering from the terrible malady called "lupus." He is now much improved in appearance, and a living example that the bridge of the nose as well as the nostrils can be replaced by a skillful hand.

AFRICAN ANTS.—The bashikonai ants must be a terrible plague. They travel night and day in armies miles long. The elephant and gorilla fly before them; the black man runs for his life so soon as the ants are seen. It is related by a traveler that as he was going up one of the mouths of the Zambesi, he saw a whole village suddenly deserted by the inhabitants, who fled with all they could carry off, a proceeding which, as there was no foe in sight, rather puzzled him, till he found they were fleeing from the ants. When these ants enter a hut they clear it of every living thing in a few minutes. Huge cockroaches, almost as large as miee, centipedes, mice and rats are instantly devoured. A strong rat is killed in less than a minute, and in another minute its bones are picked. A leopard, dog, or a deer is soon dispatched and devoured, for they kill by their numbers. They are quite half an inch long, and one variety is so strong that it will bite pieces clean out of the flesh.

They possess, however, one meritorious quality—they mortally hate, and whenever they can, put to death the mischievous white ants which make such destruction in houses. In addition to these and the sand ants, which bite like scorpions, leaving a distressing pain behind them, there are several varieties of flies which sting horribly, such as the igogonai—small gnats—whose bites go through the tough hide of the negroes, causing a terrible iteh; the ibolai—flies or gnats—which sting as though with a needle, and whistle as they dash at you; the richouma, which fill themselves with your blood before you know they are there, and then leave an itching that lasts for hours, varied at intervals by certain sharp stabs of pain; the sloway, or nest-building flies, not quite so big as a bee, which cling to a man even in the water, and assail the natives with such ferocity that if a canoe by chance touch one of their nests, the men instantly dive overboard.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—A resolution has been proposed in Congress for an investigation of the condition of the National banks of New York City. It believed that resolution will be not adopted.

—The House Committee on Public Lands has directed a favorable report on the bill appropriating $250,000 to reimburse persons who settled upon or purchased lands within the grant made to the Northern Kansas Railroad Company, and to whom patents for such land were granted, but against whose right to the land decisions were rendered by the United States courts on account of priority of grant to the railroad company. The bill provides the reimbursemeut shall be at the rate of $3.50 per acre.

—Detective Wood has represented to the Secretary of the Navy that he has found evidence of even more extensive frauds in other bureaus of the Navy Department than in that of Medicine and Survey.

—Secretary Lincoln and Secretary Teller will go to Philadelphia Tuesday of this week to attend the funeral of Bishop Simpson. Mr. Lincoln had a strong personal attachment for the Bishop because of the latter's intimacy with his father.

—In the Senate, Friday, the Blair amendment was offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill. It provides that there shall be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $500,000, "to promote the proposed exposition of the agricultural and mechanical capabilities of the colored race of the world, to be held at Chicago in November, 1885."

COUNTRY.

—The Ohio Supreme Court rendered decisions on the Scott law Tuesday, declaring the second section of the act, providing for a lien on real estate tenanted by a liquor dealer, to cover the tax, unconstitutional, but refusing to say whether the entire statute is valid, claiming that that question has not been presented in the cases under consideration.

—New indictments against James D. Fish, John C. Eno and Ferdinand Ward were returned to the United States Grand Jury at New York Tuesday. Fish is charged with making loans from the Marine Bank of $1,000,000 to Grant and Ward on fictitious securities; and Eno, it is alleged, misapplied $4,050,000 of the funds of the Second National Bank.

—Henry Havemeyer, of New York, with a yearly income of $25,000, has been declared unable to manage his estate because of insobriety.

—A statue to Simon Bolivar, the liberator, was unveiled in Central Park, New York, Tuesday, before a large concourse of Spanish-Americans.

—The new waterworks well at Wheeling, W. Va., caved in Monday evening, one man being buried forty feet. The well is still caving, and the large boiler-house is threatened with collapse.

—Near Akron, Ohio, a boy carelessly threw a light into a wrecked powder magazine Monday evening. Such of the powder as remained exploded, blowing Perry Peck to pieces, and injuring many other lads.

—The Mormon press and leaders claim that the bill just passed the United States Senate, governing things in Utah, is cruel, revolutionary, unconstitutional, and formulated for the purpose of "destroying their religion." They assert that existing circumstances do not call for such a law, but that false reports have incensed the public mind.

—The Independent Republican committee organized at New York Friday by electing George William Curtis chairman. A document was adopted, to be sent throughout the country for signatures, asking independents to send delegates to a conference, which shall decide what action shall bc taken in case the Democratic nominees are not deemed worthy of support.

—Commodore Garrison made an assignment at New York Friday, giving preferences for $631,000. His counsel states the trouble was caused by notes being protested on securities, of which Garrison possesses a large amount, but which are almost unmarketable at present. The amount involved by the assignment is placed at $5,000,000.

—Gen. Miles commanding the District of Columbia, has appointed an expedition to explore the Copper river, in Alaska, which is considered a dangerous undertaking, as the Indians are exceedingly hostile.

—Disturbing rumors and the assignment of Commodore Garrison had a depressing effect Friday on the New York stock market, prices dropping 1 to 5 per cent and closing 1 to 4¾ per cent lower than Thursday. Some shares sold at the lowest figures for years.

FOREIGN.

—At a balloon ascension at Bordeaux, France, George W. Roosevelt, the United States Consul, and wife were present. A French soldier fired a pistol at the Americans. Thc bullet passed through Roosevelt's hat, contused his head and knocked him over. The wounded man pointed out the soldier, but the latter, with two companions, escaped. It is supposed the soldier mistook the Consul for an officer in civilians' dress, against whom he had a grudge. The commander at Bordeaux has ordered an inquiry.

—Several arrests were made yesterday in Germany in connection with an alleged ihcendiary and revolutionary conspiracy, which is said to have branches in America It is believed that if a connection with America is established Bismarck will open a diplomatic correspondence with the United States Government immediately.

—A number of guns and revolvers have been discovered buried in the earth near Cork, Ireland. It is supposed they were concealed there by Fenians. An informer is supposed to have given information concerning their location.

—According to the Paris correspondent of the London Times, James Stephens, the Fenian leader, has opened up communication with prominent Irish Nationalists in America in furtherance of a conference or convention in Chicago which will urge physical force, applied through guns and bayonets, for the liberation of Ireland from English control.

—The Reuter Company has received a dispatch from Suakin, Egypt, announcing the arrival there of twenty-one pilgrims from Khartoum. The pilgrims state that when they left Khartoum that place was safe and fully supplied with provisions. They left May 25.

—In the Commons, June 20, the Under Foreign Secrctary stated that the last news from Gen. Gordon was of the date of April 12. He said twenty messengers had been sent Gen. Gordon by different routes. One messenger, who went up the Nile by boat, succeeded in entering Khartoum. On his return, bearing Gen. Gordon's answer to the Government, the messenger was pursued by rebels and killed.

—The Mahdi has again written to the Mudir of Dongola summoning him to espouse the Mahdi's couse. If he acquiesces he will be made Governor of the province and allowcd to keep all the taxes; if he refuses the Lieutenant of the Mahdi will kill the Mudir and all belonging to him.

—The committee appointed to consider the advisability of widening the Suez Canal or building a parallel one has decided in favor of the former plan.

—By a premature blast on the Tampico branch of the Mexico Central Railway twelvc Mexican and two American workmen were killed.

THE WASHINGTON ADDRESS,

"FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT" is out of print. The only edition has now been all sent out, and orders for hundreds are coming in which we cannot fill.

Ezekiel Sutton of Angola, Ind., is one of the quiet but persistent workers. He has sent out during the year past two thousand three hundred tracts and three hundred and forty-five books and pamphlets. Who will do as much for the cause this year? The field is very great, but the laborers are few. He writes: "I gave 'Freemasonry at a Glance' to a man that thought of joining the Masons, but after he had looked it over he said, 'If that is their foolishness I don't want any of it.' So will all well meaning men say."

The re-appointment of Eli H. Murray of Kentucky, as Governor of Utah Territory, if it signifies anything, must mean that his strong anti-Mormon policy is endorsed by the President and the Senate. It is a bitter dose for the Mormons. Murray is said to be the only governor they have been unable to capture. They have done everything they could to prevent his reappointment, even going so far as to secure an investigation of his accounts while Marshal of Kentucky some years ago in the hope of finding something to his discredit. The reappointment is a vindication of his past official record, and we hope is also an earnest of the vigorous policy which should be pursued toward this crime against God and man.

But the reappointment shows what things of straw party platforms sometimes become. The Republican convention adopted a plank, declaring that the appointment to offices in the Territories should be made from bona fide citizens and residents of the Territory wherein they are to serve. But President Arthur appoints Murray of Kentucky to Utah, and Pierce of Chicago, to be Governor of Dakota.

The reform against immoral literature has not so wide a field as that against the saloon, but it has an enemy as dark. American parents are asleep on this subject. Some of them are awakening to misery and the ruin of name and of home. Let us mark every movement against these Satanic prints and rejoice when they are suppressed. Such is the Gilbert bill just become law in New York, which provides penalties not only for the vending of obscene literature, but also for the sale, or exposure for sale, where minor children can see them, of "any book, pamphlet, magazine, newspaper, or other printed paper, devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports or accounts of criminal deeds." Another clause of the Act makes the sale or exposure for sale of any picture or photograph of this sort a misdemeanor. It is a good law for New York to enforce, and for all the other States to copy. It should have been on every statue-book years ago.

"Prohibition don't prohibit," but it has at least given General Manager Morseman of the Pacific Express Company an excuse for a general order forbidding agents or messengers to receive for shipment to any point in Iowa any alcohol, ale, wine, beer, spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors. The Iowa State law goes into effect July 3d, and we see it reported that all the railroads passing through the State have issued similar orders. Whether prohibition prohibits or not is matter of indifference so long as it brings in such results.

Mr. Swaim, the Judge Advocate General of the army, was one of President Garfield's dearest friends. He was unceasingly at his bedside and almost held the dying man in his arms at the last. It is not pleasant to believe that he is a vulgar swindler, but on such a charge, drawn up by a committee of investigation, the President has just ordered his court-martial. If Swaim was innocent and a man of honor, he would be the first to insist upon the most rigid trial. But he does not want the trial any more than if he was guilty. The preliminary examination made him sick, and when Secretary Lincoln and the President were found to be in earnest, members of Congress and high officials began to use their personal and political influence to prevent the trial. They urge that it would be an act of mercy as Swaim is already much affected in his health. If Mr. Arthur is not a Freemason he may thank his Vermont Baptist parents, who had probably read the Morgan book, that he has not been subjected to a demand on the part of Swaim and his Masonic friends which it would have been difficult as a subservient Hiramite to have denied.

Francis Murphy has just completed the most remarkable temperance campaign ever begun in Chicago. He closed Friday evening his seven weeks' work with a great meeting in Farwell Hall, which was packed. During this time 11,000 people have signed the pledge. Murphy has been assisted part of the time by his son, a young man of brilliant talent, but the whole expense has been less than $1,000. The meetings have been largely held in the churches, yet it is complained that Christians have not given Mr. Murphy the hearty support he deserved. Mr. Murphy's method is somewhat peculiar, well calculated to produce a strong emotional effect which may not, we fear, be abiding in all cases. He is emphatic and happy in his testimony for the need of power from God to deliver the drunkard from his sin, but does not insist on his coming in the name of Jesus for pardon and power. Many, however, have, we believe, been brought to Christ and made free from the curse of liquor by this great work.

The base ball game has received its death blow in Columbus, Ohio, say its patrons. On the 22d ult., members of the Brooklyn and Columbus clubs were arrested for Sabbath violation while playing a match. Judge Wylie of the Common Pleas court gave his decision that the arrests were legal and the punishment of the parties must follow. The president of the Columbus club says this decision will break up the business because the game cannot be supported without Sunday games. This opinion confirms what was remarked in these columns lately: that the base-ball business had fallen so low that when it should fail to establish itself as a Sabbath-desecrating institution it would fail altogether.

The Nihilists, no less than the Irish "Invincibles," or dynamiting Fenians, make a careful use of the sensations of terror, mystery and anxiety which their tragic strokes inspire. When Lieutenant Colonel Soudekin was assassinated, Russia was aghast at the boldness and temerity of the murderers and recoiled from a blow aimed directly at the department concern in suppressing the secret lodges of assassination. Hardly less horror was created in St. Petersburg and throughout Russia, when Captain Gerdzey was murdered last week by the Nihilists. He had incurred the bitter hatred of the murderers of that secret conspiracy, and is represented as a capable and courageous officer, who specially devoted himself to grappling with Nihilism. His body was found with a bullet hole in the temple and a dagger left sticking in his heart, while a note coolly pinned to his coat left no doubt of the identity of his murderers.

The past week has been one of more than ordinary interest in the British Parliament. The bill extending the franchise passed the Commons amid scenes of great excitement and even an unwonted exhibition of fierce political passion. Gladstone's speech contained a plain menace at the stability of the conservative House of Lords if they should dare reject the bill. Now it is predicted they are sure to do so. Another vote of censure is proposed by the Tories on the arrangement with France respecting Egypt. The substance of this settlement is as follows: England undertakes to withdraw her troops from Egypt at the beginning of 1888, in case the powers consider such a withdrawal possible without endangering public order. The caisse de la dette publique, after 1885, will have a consultative voice in regard to the budget and have a right to veto any increase in expenses on the part of the government. It shall continue to exercise the right of financial inspection after the evacuation of the country by the English, in order to insure the regular collection of the revenues. England also undertakes during her occupation to propound schemes to the porte and the powers for the neutralization of Egypt, like Belgium, and for the neutralization of the Suez Canal. Gladstone has so managed the debate in Parliament by dividing the revelation of his plans that the financial part will be kept back until after the meeting of the conference of the powers on Egyptian affairs. The vote of censure now proposed is therefore premature, and will fail, to the great chagrin of the opposition, who were sure three weeks ago of forcing Gladstone to resign, but now see him supported by a larger majority than in any recent parliamentary battle.

UNHOLY FELLOWSHIP.

BY REV. GEORGE THOMPSON.

There are many kinds, but at present, I wish to speak of only one—viz., the unnatural, injurious, and unrighteous fellowship in the Masonic and other secret lodges.

We are commanded to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." And yet in these lodges are many professing Christians and ministers in high standing in the church, in close and oath-bound fellowship with the profane, Sabbath-breakers, drunkards, licentious, infidels and scoffers! And they call them "Brothers!" And enter into an intimacy and confidense unknown in the Christian church, or even the family. Does this seem in harmony with the above passage of Scripture?

And because there are so many of these church members in the lodge we are told (and it is used to induce the simple to unite): "The Masonic lodge cannot be so bad as you represent, or there would not be so many good men in it. Many ministers of different names, and many church members belong to it. And surely they would not do so, or continue in the lodge if it were a bad and unrighteous institution."

Ans. It is, indeed, one of the strangest things and unaccountable, that so many who seem to be good men have been induced to join, and after they have joined, to continue in a Masonic lodge! And it is a great stumbling block to many, and leads others into sin.

That the uninformed should be led to join is not so wonderful, for many are actuated by curiosity—they wish to know for a certainty, the "secrets" which are represented to be so very important.

But after they have taken the first step their lips are sealed and their hands tied; and they are in bondage for life. Many have wished they were out. They have objected that they did not find the good they were given to expect, but have been silenced by being told, "You will find it higher up." Disgusted, they have lacked the courage to boldly break away and denounce the whole thing as an outrageous imposition.

I have known numbers of men, and very good men, who became Masons in youth—were afterwards converted, and attended lodge no more; and advised all young people "never to join any secret society," but dared not say a word about what they had seen in the lodge! They had sworn not to reveal, in any way, any of the secrets; and being very conscientious men they dared not do it, though they despised and were ashamed of the whole institution.

A few have felt it their duty to expose the abominations, that others might take warning. So Morgan—so the 103 who authorized Bernard to write an exposition and voted it correct. So Finney, so Ronayne and others. And the number increases. Thank God.

The good Dr. David Nelson said, "When I was a young man I was an infidel, a gambler, and a Mason, but when I became a Christian, I put them all away together." Noble example! What a pity every professing Christian had not done the same! Then would the iniquity have been rebuked, and we should not have heard so much about its not being bad because so many good men belong to it.

I have never said "A man cannot be a Christian and belong to a Masonic lodge," but I have often said "No Christian has any business to belong to one."

Finney met the lodge once after he was converted, but never afterwards. It was too cold for his warm and ardent Christian feelings.

And when these "good men" and ministers join the lodge, their influence for good is at once crippled or destroyed. I knew a "Royal Arch" presiding elder. He said in my house, "I have no doubt that my being a Mason has injured my influence as a minister."

I knew a Congregational minister who was long respected, loved, and useful. He joined the lodge and soon lost his influence, and the respect of the community and of his brethren.

I knew a U. B. minister who joined the lodge and was deposed from the ministry, and has since had but little influence.

These are mere samples of a class. But take these good men as a whole. Are they the spiritually minded and consecrated men of God? Do they show to the world that they love God supremely, and their fellow-men, as themselves? In a large majority of cases, we must say "No." And again No! The lodge with them is first, the church secondary. Lodge members first—church members last. And they will join with their profane, and drunken, and infidel, and licentious "brothers" to "conceal and never reveal" the abominations of the lodge room, and crimes of members! And if asked questions about their proceedings, they must be entirely silent or lie. They cannot reveal anything. And if they admit, that is revealing—so they must say "No." "It is all a lie."

I heard a boy ask his father (a minister of three degrees), "Father, did you ever take those oaths?" (as in Finney and others). He answered: "I do not know." My wife asked a minister Mason if he ever took them. He answered, "Why, no, Mrs. Thompson—but perhaps something equivalent to it."

At the close of one of my lectures against Masonry, a Mason minister said before the crowded audience, "He has set up his own target and fired at it," as much as to say, "He has not touched any thing in Masonry." Yet, in private he admitted to me, I did hit Masonry in a number of points.

A thirty-three degree Mason said to me, "If a man who had been a Mason, should tell every thing just as it is, you could not believe him," because he had violated his terrible oaths.

What logic! Tell every thing just as it is, and yet cannot be believed! All the more can they be believed, because they do it at the peril of their lives.

An ex-Master Mason says, "The Masonic Institution is nothing but a hollow sham, a consummate swindle, a gigantic falsehood—the most corrupt, and the most corrupting system on the face of the globe." "Its obligations are villainous;" and "if I were back where I was before joining the Masonic institution, I would much rather have my right arm cut off, than to have taken such a terrible leap into the dark." And there are many such. "Masonry is nothing but an absurdity and wickedness throughout," he adds.

Now how any minister or Christian can go into, and join hands with such men, as mostly compose a lodge, is a mystery. They are either grossly deluded, or horribly rotten at heart. It is wholly inconsistent with Christian obligations, and clearly contrary to the Bible. And such unholy associations must, of necessity, corrupt and degrade them. No wonder so many of these "good men" are dead weights in the churches. They are forced to stultify themselves, and do many things they know to be wrong, if they remain good Masons.

And no man can prosper in a spiritual sense, and continue an active, adhering Mason. Such cannot arrive at, and enjoy the blessed "higher life" because they "regard iniquity in the heart," and are living in continual sin. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate," is the plain command of God.

Oberlin, Ohio.

THE CHAINED ELEPHANT.

BY GEN'L J. W. PHELPS.

The republican elephant has again been chained to do party work. His stately steps move the round-robin platform which drives the whole machinery of jobs, "liberalized pensions," high tariffs, extravagant expenditures, wild, reckless speculation, etc., etc. Mason and Dixon's line is still the line of party policy. On one side of that line monuments and flower-throwing are dedicated to rebels, while on the other side they are dedicated to the "Grand Army of the Republic." Not one step has been made towards uniting the two dis-severed portions of the Union on the basis of the Declaration of Independence. Party interests have been secured, while American institutions have been ignored.

In its choice of candidates the Republican party has courted the favor of the liquor traffic in a most decided and unquestionable way, in which it may conciliate to some extent a half-trusting democracy, but will tend to strengthen the hands of the Prohibitionists.

The true policy of the American party, I repeat it, is to hold its convention, say in the early days of September, and in its candidates appeal to the sentiments of 1776, not to those of 1876 which the Republican ticket represents. Our true policy is to draw our Presidential candidate, if possible, from the old Whig party of the South, and our Vice President from Missouri or Iowa. The contest lies between American institutions on one side, and the lodge on the other; and any party that ignores this issue does not meet the political necessities of the times.

As the Anti-masonic party we Americans have not received the slightest recognition from the Republican nominations. Those nominations recognize the claims of the liquor traffic but not those of the American party. It recognizes, carefully, both the saloon and the lodge, but not American institutions. Mr. Blaine represents lodge politics, while Gen. Logan represents the lodge itself, and has no other special basis of national breadth to stand on. He is one of the principal institutions of that exceedingly un-American and un-Christian institution called Decoration-day, which is a mere sectional holiday confined to the north of Mason and Dixon's line, and never can be elevated to the dignity of a national holiday. But this is Gen. Logan's principal distinguishing service to the nation.

Nor has the old Whig Anti-masonic sentiment of Vermont, the once model Republican State of the world, which might well be held up as Liberty lighting the world, ever received any adequate recognition from the Republican party. Vermont Anti-masonic Whig sentiment, the chief effective original capital of the national Republican party, has well merited a leading position in the National Executive Department, if not the head of that department during and since the war. But a State of the most American and most real Republican institutions of any State of the Union has received no recognition in that way at all. The national Republican party has been more allied with the Democrats, lodgemen and the rogues of Vermont than with her citizens of the Anti-masonic Whig stamp who represent American institutions rather than party politics. The Republican party nas appealed to the very lowest element of Vermont politics rather than to that character which distinguished the State at the beginning of the war of the rebellion.

Party contest has broken out of the lists of American institutions. Those institutions must have a party to represent them, and that party must at least have the veto-power on the action of other parties, and must come in possession of that power soon, or our institutions will cease to be American in everything but in an empty name.

Our young men born during the misrule of the Republican party will hardly know what American institutions really are. The tradition of these institutions has not been transmitted to them; but instead the lodge and lodge-politics have become their political inheritance. If there are, indeed, any real Independent Republicans among us who represent the best element that went originally to make up the Republican party, now is the time to put themselves at the head of the young generation of voters who are surfeited with worthless war-memories, and lead them back to that great platform of the American party, the Declaration of American Independence. With Independents of this character we of the American party could readily operate, but not consistently with any other. If defeat and political death are ever to be the fate of reformers, how long can the American Republic stand?

A chance shot may take effect, when many that are carefully aimed miss the mark; good seed, dropped by a careless hand, may bring forth fruit for genera tions; and a word spoken casually, if it be a good word, may be remembered when sermons and set speeches are forgotten.

In 1857, Mr. Spurgeon preached to a vast assembly in the Crystal Palace. A few days before, he went down to arrange where the platform should be placed. While trying the various positions, he cried aloud, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!"

A man was at that time at work in the Palace, who heard the text spoken under such unusual circumstanees. It went with power to his heart, convinced him of sin, and led him to the sin-atoning Lamb, in whom he found forgiveness and peace.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"Since I saw you last I have been thinking on a great subject,—peace! How much there is in the Bible about it. Verse after verse has kept coming into my mind as I sit here. 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace.' 'Your peace shall be like a river.' 'In me ye shall have peace.' It is in just this calm, unruffled condition of spirit that we ought to be all the time, and where we should be if we were not continually letting the world, the flesh and the devil spoil it all. In our ignorance or our carelessness we give Satan the advantage over us and he uses it."

Now Mrs. F. is herself the very embodiment of that peace of which she spoke. Her life's day is going down like one of those rare pearl tinted summer sunsets, breezeless and balm-giving, when the burden and heat of the day is over, and the passing showers have left only a rainbow. So I drew my chair up nearer and asked this very practical question:

"I can conceive of a state of mind so exalted that we shall feel all earthly trials and annoyances less than so many pin pricks; but the problem with me Mrs. F., and I imagine with many others, is not so much how we can attain this peace as how we can keep it in all this continual friction of our daily life?"

"Don't you know that there is a highway called the highway of holiness, and no lion or ravenous beast shall go up thereon? Our peace can only be destroyed by these outward trials when they become temptations. To have continued peace in the midst of outward strife and turmoil we must keep on the king's highway and not go down into the fog and damp of the valleys. I have been taught this lesson many times, and yet but a week ago I had to learn it all over again. It is on the low ground of Christian experience that Satan goes about as a roaring lion and the only way to escape him is to go up higher."

And this is the whole grand secret that so many of us miss! We look longingly over the hedge of some all our Father wills and does that is better than bonds or bank stock. And it all comes of living on too nearly the same plane with the prosperous worldling when we ought to be miles and miles above him.

There is one form of trial which oftener becomes a temptation to destroy our peace than perhaps any other; and that is, being misunderstood, to have our motives misrepresented and impeached, and our good evil spoken of. According to Holy Writ it is one of the most common that Christians, and especially reformers—though perhaps I ought not to make the distinction, as the terms ought to be synonymous—are called upon to endure. And it is at least half the battle when we can bear these things with unruffled mind and temper. We are given in the Life of Mrs Barbauld an instance of the pain suffered by a sensitive spirit under unjust and malicious criticism. But why should the insult of the anonymous writer who pictured her in the Quarterly Review as "dashing down her knitting and her shagreen spectacles to save the nation from impending ruin," have so deeply wounded her, as to even make her lay aside the pen which she was conscious of having wielded only in the interests of truth and pure patriotism? But the stoutest hearts that ever battled for righteousness have writhed at times under mean, personal attacks. It is easy enough to affect a haughty indifference and say "we don't eare;" but the spirit which indited the quaint Saxon motto graven by an old medieval ear over his castle door:—"They haif sayde: What sayd they! Let them saye," though it may help us bear calumny and misrepresentation with outward calmness and dignity, is not capable of giving us inward peace amid the strife of tongues. "Come up higher!" That is the true secret. That is the message of the lilies and the sparrows, and the sweet summer wind blowing where it listeth. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear."

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple.

MY BRETHREN:—You are doubtless aware that men who cheat and gamble, as they do in Wall Street, betray our Saviour, the Prince of Righteousness. They themselves are often aware of this fact, and seek to make a reconciliation with him by surrendering a part of their spoil for the uses of education, religion, or some other good object. They get a very great deal more than thirty pieces of silver for their treachery. Sometimes they get even one or more entire railroads; and perhaps for reconciliation they give five hundred dollars to the widows and orphans whose stock they have watered and ruined.

But of all swindlers, my friends, your Masonic betrayer of the Prince of Righteousness is the one who makes reconciliation in the most debasing style. He often throws the blood-money with which he has stained his hands into the temple; but he has not the grace to go and hang himself as Judas did; he makes a merit of his treachery, and claims credit for it under the name of charity and respect for religion!

My friends, believe me, there is no more charity in the contributions which the fraternity make to the temple of God, for burying the dead, relieving the distressed (rogues), helping widows and orphans, etc., than there was in the contribution of Judas which was appropriated to buying a grave-yard for the poor and friendless. The money that they get out of their dupes by false pretences goes chiefly to the support of a set of scribes, High Priests, Grand Commanders of the Host, etc., who by their organization are always on the watch trying to take the Prince of Righteousness by deccit and destroy him. The money that they get, aids to betray Christ and transfer the honor and praise due him to a mutual aid organization called Freemasonry. And the money that they distribute in pretended charity is spent merely for glorifying the name of their organization, and not for maintaining the Christian temple into which they sometimes carelessly toss it.

There are many mysteries in life, it is true. It is a great mystery that the worshipers of the golden calf and the worshipers of our Lord should both be compelled to swallow of the crushed and broken substance of which the object of worship was formed: it is strange that the true and the false should often appear so similar; but greater is the wrong, therefore, of those who manufacture mysteries and strange similitudes as Freemasons do. They worship the golden calf while claiming to partake of the sacrament, at the same time manufacturing a sacrament of their own, intended to bring the holy one of the Lord into derision and contempt.

My friends, the germinal principle of Freemasonry is duplicity not charity. The Freemason, as such, knows nothing of charity. His pretended alms-givings are mere policy. They go to support an institution that is ambitious to show that its minions can do good by the square and compass instead of by the cross of Christ. When you see a Freemason after tossing some of his ill-gotten gains into the church go and hang himself, then believe in Masonic contrition and charity. So MOTE IT BE!

TRUTH TRIUMPHANT.

It is a blessed assurance which the Christian enjoys, that truth and righteousness are eventually to triumph. That, though falsehood may prevail, and iniquity exalt itself; though truth may be fallen in the street, and judgment turned away backward; yet the time will come when out of all this error and confusion, truth and righteousness will be triumphant in the end. He who was the Way, the Truth, and the Life, suffered as bitterly as any one, from the hatred, and falsehood, and malice of this world. But now all this has passed away, and at the right hand of God, in glory everlasting, far above all principalities and powers, and every name that is named, he sits in the sereneness of his omnipotent majesty, "from henceforth expecting until his enemies be made his footstool." And "if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him," and shall partake his glory as we have also partaken his shame.

Even in this world "the triumphing of the wicked is short;" and sometimes, ere we are aware, God vindicates the right, and judges and punishes the wrong. But this is only the beginning. The eternal years of God are before us, and the outcome of all time and all eternity shall be to glorify the heavenly King, and exalt his truth and righteousness, and utterly destroy and crush out the infernal serpents of sin, and falsehood, and iniquity which swarm around this sin-cursed earth.

Let us then be of good cheer, and work with good heart and hope, assured that God shall bruise Satan under our feet shortly, and that in due time our Master will remember and reward our toils, and crown his faithful followers with honor, strength, and victory.—Armory.

ARE THE FREEMASONS A RELIGIOUS SECT?

The Catholic Review prints an article under this head which in its main argument is good. It is reprinted below with a few omissions of reference to the Romish church.—ED. CYNOSURE.

It might seem rash to assert positively that they are, since little or nothing can positively be known of a secret society. Besides, religious sects in this country may mean anything from Oneida communities to the Jerkers or McDonaldites, who make epilepsey a virtue. But by taking such inferences as are possible from well-known facts concerning the Freemasons, we feel quite safe in putting them down as a heretical sect, with a special distinctive malice and certain doctrines of their own.

They pretend to universality, and have adopted a doctrine or religion of humanity which they suppose capable of lifting them above the strife of creeds and rendering their society responsible to nobody but GOD. This creed is, "I believe in the united and universal order of Freemasons, which by diligently cultivating the religion of humanity will one day lift all men to a common level." They regard their society as something above religion, or common to all, pretending that they possess a principle peculiar to themselves and not to be found in any other society; a principle which enables Jew and Gentile, Christian and Pagan, Democrat and Republican to assemble on a common platform and work for the good of the human race. All which sounds very fairly to the ear, and if it could be realized would be a wondrous miracle.

This principle of universality in its relation to humanity, as the order of Freemasons classes it, is not only heretical, but impracticable and absurd. Heretical because to the church alone did Christ, the Lawgiver and Regenerator of the human race, give this universality and the mission of elevating the nations, or, if you will, humanity, to the standard of perfection. Freemasons scout at this doctrine, and also at Christ, who has no place in their worship. But the truth stands nevertheless. The church alone has the mission. Whoever attempts a similar work must submit to her control, and be content to work in time and in localities, for she alone has all time and the whole world. The work of lifting up fallen man can only be done and continued by those methods which Christ established, and we are not aware that he confided any of them to the Freemasons, or that they have stolen them from the church, as they have their principle of universal brotherhood. The impracticability of this principle as held by the order is as plain and prominent as the editorial nose. What no man was ever able in his nature to do, that no man can ever do. The Son of God alone carried out the idea of universal brotherhood. Therefore, the claim and doctrine advanced by the Freemasons is impious and heretical.

They are always striving to give it expression, however, and have formulated a very imposing ritual. Their pass-words and signs and emblems are intended for general use all over the world. They have a sort of worship, the worship of God and humanity. They bury their dead in a very pleasing and inoffensive manner with speeches, hymns, and a few vague prayers. They are in doctrine advanced a long way ahead of the less powerful sects, since they stand the strain of admitting Catholics and Mahommedans into their ranks. Their system of church government is complete and moderately successful and perfect. They look down with pity from the heights on which they are established on the struggling crowd of Christians who fight over the meaning of the words of Christ. They are beyond Christ. They have found the true and simple key to his whole life along with Mr. Renan, and have opened the road to the stirring truth which he taught—Humanity with a big H.

To our mind there is nothing more plain than the reasons for calling Freemasons a sect, a religious sect in the wide meaning now given to those terms. Catholics who submit themselves to their influence not only violate the laws of their church in joining a secret society, but also are guilty of a material apostasy, at least in accepting doctrines condemned by the one infallible church. The plea of ignorance cannot be often urged in our day, so wide-spread is the knowledge concerning the order of Freemasons.

—We have never belonged to a secret society and have no thought of so doing. If a society is in itself good, and has no other object than to do good, why should it make secrecy one of its fundamental principles, and bind its members by the most solemn vows and the severest penalties to disclose nothing that is said or done in it? We cannot conceive of any circumstances in which it would be best for a man to be a member of a secret organization having such vows or penalties.—N. Y. Examiner (Baptist).

THE CONFLICT.

We're a-floating! we're a-floating! on a fierce rolling tide,
True freedom's our bark, and the truth is our guide;
No rest for the sluggard, no peace for the foe,
But thro' all opposition right onward we go.

The storm gathers round us, the thunder is heard,
What matter? our bark rideth on like a bird
With the flag of true freedom above our true men;
We have brav'd it before and will brave it again!

Far above the dark storm-cloud, the clear sun-beams rest,
And the bright bow of promise gleams forth on its breast;
Before us a future of labor and love,
True brethren around us, a just God above.

A future of labor,—brave, honest and free!
No oath-bound clan, but a brotherhood we,—
A future of love when the just and the true,
Shall rule in the place of the Cable-towed crew.

Throw out the broad canvass to catch the free wind,—
Leave old party issues like rubbish behind;
With justice and love to lead on the van,—
Live and die we for Freedom, for Truth, and for Man!

ADDRESS OF SENATOR S. C. POMEROY

BEFORE THE AMERICAN CONVENTION, CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

In our form of government, where the people elect the executive officers, political parties seem to be a necessity. Parties and politics are great educators of the people, and cannot be dispensed with. The man who stands aloof and refuses to act and labor for the cause he thinks to be right neglects his duty as an American citizen, and abuses a privilege which was dearly purchased for him. A man who cannot stand upon the platform of his party should not stand before the people for an election. The utmost good faith and fair dealing should be exercised by both.

A party is not known by what some man or some paper may say. It is not bound by the sayings of its individual members. A party is bound by what it does and says in a duly called delegate convention. I am not now pretending that all such platforms are honestly observed, or are any guarantee of what they will practice, but I am declaring that it is fair to hold any party to this standand—viz., a national convention is an authoritative body, to speak and act for the party, and the tone and character of the resolutions there passed are the authorized, commanding creeds of the party. Such a convention is the only body that can so commit and bind the party.

Of recent date I have summoned before me all the platforms of all parties in national conventions since 1856, when the Republican party, in name, was first in the field. In this research I did not omit the proceedings of the Republican party held in Chicago in June, 1884, and I here pronounce that convention to be —a retrograde movement. There has been a lowering of standards, not only in platforms, but in practical executive force. Sanctioned by platforms, and incorporated into party action, there has been an abandonment of that which was vital and life-giving to a form of popular words which cater to popular prejudices, and appeal only to the lowest and basest elements of human nature. That is also true of the Democratic party, which once had the most high-sounding resolutions for human rights and political equality, and love for the people that could anywhere be found. In their platforms of 1856 and 1860, just after the "Know-Nothing crusade," they resolved "that we have a determined opposition to all secret societies, by whatever name they may be called." They soon amended that by making it "all secret political societies," in order to let out the Masonic associaitons. That party has floundered from year to year, upon one dogma and another, always expressing love for the people and high regard for the Constitution of the United States, with grave apprehensions that the Republicans were violating it. The war was declared a failure, and its great achievements things to be acquiesced in but not to rejoice over. But of the Republican party better things can be said. The burning words promulgated at the formation of that party in 1856 were an inspiration and a life. Then began a new departure in political ethics. Men, and not their products, were to command attention and protection. Several questions were brought in and found essential to good government. Upon that platform in 1856 was conducted the most vigorous canvass for liberty that had been made. In 1860, when Mr. Lincoln was first nominated, those sentiments were repeated, and for that four years no backward steps had been taken.

A STEP BACKWARD,

NEW MEN CAME to the front, and the "irrepressible conflict" was ushered in. The good ground in 1856 was not to be surrendered.

Then followed a eulogistic review of the party's career from 1860 to 1876. The convention nominated Gov. Hayes for the Presidency, "and his noble wife well fulfilled her mission at the White House." But the administration, the speaker stated, began its retrograde movement from the hour that national authority and protection were withdrawn from the South, and the newly-made citizens were turned over to the tender mercies of those States in which as bondsmen their race had toiled for over three hundred years. In 1880 the convention nominated the lamented Garfield. The platform recited the achievements of the party for twenty years, and then ventured for the first time into new and anti-Republican fields. On the 5th day of June, 1880, before all men, and before him "who hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell upon all the face of the earth," they declared "that the Republican party regarded the unrestricted immigration of Chinese as a matter concernment, and would limit and restrict that immigration by the enactment of such just, humane, and reasonable laws and treaties as will produce that result."

That convention said good-by and farewell to the loyal women of the land, whom, four years before, they had publicly commended to favor, and said that they "should esteem them to higher rights, privileges, and duties, and that their claims should hereafter have respectful consideration." When a man, or party, is preparing to enter upon a downward course by an abandonment of principles which have been God-approved and time-honored, the first step is to desert the wife, the mother, and the sisters, to bid farewell to to associate with the depraved and abandoned, and then comes the end, which cannot be far distant. And for a party to go back on its principles of a quarter of a century, to take in the "sand-lotters" of California, is a fall where, as described by Milton:

There is no lower deep,
Hell opening to devour.

In their fourth resolution they protested against the influence of "secret sectarianism" in the public school management, and recommended that the Constitution be so amended "as to lay a prohibition upon the State legislatures against the use of public moneys for the support of sectarian schools."

Here is the grand old Republican party of Lincoln and Wilson, of Stevens and Sumner, denying the brotherhood of the human race, discarding the Bible from public schools, and with no voice against secret societies, no voice of warning against secret, oath-bound lodges, but only against "secret sectarianism," which would give a Christian education to a Christian nation. From the day the party adopted that creed, an iron entered the souls of many of the old leaders who remained while others had been gathered to their fathers.

The speaker then proceeded to discuss the merits of the Republican platform of 1884. He pronounced it a retrograde platform, taking long steps to the rear, briefly remarkable for its omissions. This was the first time the old party of liberty and freedom neglected to put on record a a declaration for the equal rights of all men. The Supreme Court, within a year, had pronounced the to be unconstitutional, and the party forgot that it was ever a part of its creed. The men and the women thus ignored will survive and seek other allies. The principles sent to the wastebasket of that committee will forever live and form living issues for the campaigns of the future.

The American Prohibition party has now a call to existence. The things left out by other parties are more important than those retained. When a party ignores the principles for which it has a being let the party go, but save the principles. The new and vigorous party deserves to live, because its purposes are good and its measure beneficent. It puts prohibition for license; it puts votes in the hands of the disfranchised; it demands equal public rights for all American citizens, and would pass constitutional laws to that end.

The speaker concluded with an exhaustive outline of the American party, its doctrines, its purposes, and its prospects.

One of the important events of the past few days has been the meeting in this city of the National Nominating Convention of the American party. In bulk it was a speck compared with the late Republican convention, or with what the coming Democratic convention will be. It had little to commend it to those whose ideal is bulk. But though the avoirdupoise was wanting, in the eyes of some, in that convention were enunciated the foundation principles of a Christian and American civilization, and men pledged themselves to stand by truth, as against error; honest dealing, as against fraud; and true principles, rather than temporizing policy. We regard this party as embodying more of the principles of righteousness than any other of the existing parties who have declared their purposes by formula or platform; and as being, to a desirable extent, an exponent of political ideas closely in harmony with the religious ideas and principles of the Free Methodist people. As the religious platform we have adopted is necessary to the purifying of the churches, and to the progress of Christ's kingdom in American communities, so is the American party's platform necessary to the purifying of American politics and the advancement of true political progress. "God speed the right."—Free Methodist, June 25th.

CUTTING OUT THE NAME.

It is my privilege to teach a class in the Bible-school of the Berea church—young men, colored and white. On Lord's day, March 23, the lesson was 2 Thess. 3. In the course of the lesson we came to verse 6, which reads:

"Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us."

After calling attention to the meaning of the verse, a little conversation between a colored young man and myself, took place about as follows. I asked:—

"Suppose the name Lord Jesus Christ was left out of this verse, would it still be about the same?"

Ans. "No; it would lose a good deal."

Ques. "Suppose a person used the verse, and left out Christ's name, meaning to do so, what would that show?"

A. "'Twould show that he wasn't true to Christ. 'Twould be wicked."

Q. "Could a person cut Christ's name out of that verse, and then quote it as Bible, and at the same time be true to Christ?"

A. "Of course not."

I then called attention to the fact that the standard Masonic Monitors (which are books published by Freemasons, mainly for their own use, but which any one may buy and read), in the Royal Arch degree use the latter part of the chapter we were studying, but that Masonry, as shown by these Monitors, cuts out the name of Christ wherever it is found in that part of the chapter quoted, (6th and 12th verses.)

This young colored man had no trouble in seeing the wickedness of thus cutting out Christ's name, but how many Masonic preachers who belong to what is called "the superior race" say that "there's no harm in Masonry."—Berea Evangelist.

SECRET SOCIETIES AND FREE SPEECH.

Every secret society organization is a practical declaration against free speech; and every person so bound to solemn secret keeping declares against free press. Secret society obligations are declarations against every member's individual and personal freedom. It circumscribes their personal and political liberties. It justly causes the finger board of public caution to be pointed at them, saying, BEWARE, keep the watchful eye on the secretists—look out for them, for they are clanned together in each other's interests to accomplish their purposes and obtain their ends by means and for ends that they dare not let the public know. It is no wonder that such, to thinking persons are coming to be regarded as dangerous to the best interests of the people. As God marked Cain, so to be connected with any secret society marks that man or woman with suspicion that something is wrong.—The Rescue.

—The new Spanish ministry, under Canovas, is very reactionary. It may be that the Prime-minister thought he would be able, in spite of the entrance of the Ultramontane leader, Pidal, into the ministry of instruction to preserve to Protestants the small measure of religious tolerance which he had left them under his former government. But he had made his reckoning without his host—that is, without the fanatical clergy, which is now trying everywhere how far it can go with its encroachments and injuries, secure that in Spain the rigor of the law would never be turned against a "venerable pater."

—If I thought I had one drop of sectarian blood in my veins, I would let it out before I went to bed; if I had one sectarian hair in my head, I would pull it out. Let us get right to the heart of Jesus Christ; then our prayers will be acceptable to God, and showers of blessings will descend.—D. L. Moody.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it. Yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy; and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living, and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country; "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

—A Pittsburgh dispatch says the Greenbackers are working up a grand demonstration for Butler among the labor lodges of Chicago which will break like a cyclone upon the Democratic convention and sweep the field for the Massachusetts ex-governor.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

The Chicago Convention of the American party has drawn the attention of the argus-eyed press throughout the country for a moment from their strife about men to a movement that sets up a standard for principles. The following editorial from one of the most independent of American journals, the Chicago Times, is a sign of progress not to be mistaken:

There is one party in this country which has, or imagines it has, a reason to be that is something different from that of getting possession of the offices and enjoying the spoils thereof. This party with an object in life calls itself the American party. The name is large enough to cover a good many things, and, if its platform is to be understood as meaning what it says, the party has certainly taken a considerable number of large contracts. The number of those who attended the party convention at Farwell hall, on Thursday and Friday was not large, and it is well known that the number of things upon which a company can agree is in inverse ratio to the number in the company. Still it is surprising that even the few who compose the American party can agree upon so many and such very different things as their platform contains. The first three of the fifteen planks agree well enough, and it is no wonder that a company of persons professing the Christian religion could agree as to all of them. The first of them declares that "ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation," and that "the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government." The second is "that the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions." And the third, "that God requires and man needs a Sabbath." To all these an assembly of Protestant Christians could very readily agree in assenting, as they are nothing more or less than statements of generally-accepted doctrines of Protestant Christians.

But now come other planks upon which there is a great difference of opinion among those who profess the Christian religion. No. 4 is a sweeping prohibition plank. It demands "the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks." Some millions of men who are in good and regular standing in Protestant churches will not join in so sweeping a demand as that. They all profess to be advocates and practicers of temperance, but they rather strenuously insist that there is a radical difference between temperance and teetotalism, and that while the former is obligatory upon Christians the latter is not. No. 5 is an anti-secret-society plank. It demands that the charters of such societies be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law. Here, again, there is a wide difference of opinion among professing Christians. The Roman Catholic church forbids its communicants to become members of secret societies, but Protestant churches do not, and great numbers of their members are also members of secret societies, and these numbers include not a few of their clergy. That all the participants in the American party convention should be able to agree on this subject need not excite our surprise, however, since it is understood to be the central idea of the party.

No. 6 opposes putting prison labor or "depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor, to benefit manufacturers, corporations, and speculators." This is just such a plank as we always expect to find in the platforms of labor organizations, and there is one very much like it in the platform of the Republican party this year. Perhaps it is natural to meet with it in the platform of the American party, if we are to understand that it is a party in favor of America for Americans; but it is a little surprising that 150 people, who are united mainly in their opposition to secret societies, should be able to agree upon it, unless they understand it as the Republicans understand the corresponding plank in their platform—simply as something thrown in as a bid for votes. No. 7 is for better patent laws. No. 8 is for woman suffrage. No. 9 is for the extension of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth articles of the amendments to our national constitution to Indians and Chinamen, and also for their enforcement. Another plank is for fiat money; another for reduction of taxes; another against polygamy; another for direct choice of President by a vote of the people. This is certainly quite an assortment of things for a one-idea convention to agree upon. It is fortunate that we have a party that can say something and mean it.

THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES.

How can a conscientious temperance man vote for them? Neither of them are temperance men; both indulge in the pernicious liquor habit, as I am informed, thereby giving countenance and support to the drinking usages of society so demoralizing and destructive to its social, moral, and material interests and welfare; and thereby helping to swell the burning tides of drunkenness, crime and woe, which temperance men and women are trying to stem.

Again, Mr. Blaine's proposition to distribute the surplus revenue, derived from the liquor traffic, among the States, implies and coolly contemplates the continuance of the barbarous license system and and its legalization by law, thus making the government particeps criminis in the crimes and miseries that flow from it.

Mr. Logan's proposition is still more abhorent to every moral sentiment and feeling, and utterly repugnant to all ideas of consistency or decency. It also includes and contemplates the continued legalization of the traffic, the government taking a bribe from the liquor dealers under the euphoneus name of internal (infernal) "revenue," and then appropriating this blood-stained money to the education of our children!

"O judgment!
Thou has fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason."

What an exhibition of high and exalted statesmanship have we here, to say nothing of the profound, pious and devout moral philosophy they present to the world!

And these are the candidates of the great party with "MORAL IDEAS" that asks the votes of the temperance people. GEO. W. CLARK.

THE AMERICAN CONVENTION.

LETTER OF MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

EN ROUTE TO WEST VIRGINIA, June 14, 1884.

To the American Party.

HONORED FRIENDS:—With cordial greeting let me explain that no discourtesy was intended by our National W. C. T. U., even though we did not send our memorial to your convention. In the hurry of our annual meeting at Detroit, no enumeration was made of the different parties, and we naturally took the Memorial to those whose names were most prominent before our minds. I have since learned of two embryo parties of whose existence I was not cognizant at the time when we arranged for the presentation.

That your party is in hearty sympathy with prohibition and woman's ballot we know, and greatly honor you for this attitude toward what we deem the chief living issues of the day. But you are doubtless aware that many of us believe the Prohibition Home-Protection party to be our natural place of co-operation, since its ranks include the temperance workers of the country as those of no other party have yet done.

This note will be sent you by my sister, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, with whom I am happy to share in high personal esteem for the leadership of your movement.

Believe me to be, with best wishes, Yours sincerely,
FRANCES E. WILLARD.

REPLY OF THE CONVENTION.

To Miss Frances E. Willard, President of the W. C. T. U

DEAR MADAM:—Your letter addressed to the American party was read to our National Convention, met in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20th, 1884, and was received with much satisfaction.

We have adopted a brief article in these pointed words: "We are in favor of, and will vote for Woman Suffrage."

We have also appointed a fraternal committee of seven of our tried and trusted members, to bear our greetings to the National Prohibition Home Protection party to meet in Pittsburgh, July 23rd, prox., and have trusted them with a large discretion in the matter of conference and co-operation against the liquor crime, restricting ourselves to the open reform methods employed by the Saviour of mankind.

With the sincerest admiration and respect for yourself, personally, and the great and holy cause to which you have devoted your life; and wishing upon the National Prohibition Home Protection party, its leaders and masses, the guidance and blessing of God, we remain

By order of the American Party Convention.

AMERICAN CLUB AT WHEATON.

The American Party Club of Wheaton held a meeting in Central Hall on Monday evening. The President, W. I. Phillips, on taking the chair gave a brief statement of the object for which the club had been organized. J. P. Stoddard led in prayer. Geo. W. Clark, the veteran Abolition Temperance and Reform Lecturer and Singer, conducted the song service with enthusiasm. Ten minute speeches being the order, Pres. L. N. Stratton spoke on the political issues of the day, and was followed in the order named by Geo. W. Clark, of Rochester, N. Y., Prof. E. G. Paine, of Wasioja, Minn., Pres. C. A. Blanchard and Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton, each presenting his views on the political situation, urging the necessity of a radical reform, and emphasizing the duty of every voter to cast his ballot independent of party dictation, for the men and movements that acknowledge God, advocate prohibition and declare uncompromising hostility to all secret combinations formed in the interest of the few to the great injury of the many. After a song the club adjourned to meet at call of President and Secretary.—Wheaton Illinoian.

WEBSTER ON POLITICAL REPUTATION.

On the 14th of November, 1848, Daniel Webster delivered an address in the Supreme Court of Massachusetts on the death of Chief Justice Mason. The following beautiful and impressive passage is from the closing part of his address:

"But, sir, political eminence and professional fame fade away and die with things earthly. Nothing of character is really permanent but virtue and personal worth. These remain. Whatever of excellence is wrought into the soul itself belongs to both worlds. Real goodness does not attach itself merely to this life; it points to another world. Political or professional reputation cannot last forever; but a conscience void of offense before God and man is an inheritance for eternity. Religion, therefore, is an indispensable element in any great human character. There is no living without. Religion is the tie that connects man with his Creator and holds him to his throne. If that tie be all sundered, all broken, he floats away a worthless atom in the universe; its proper attractions all gone; its destiny thwarted, and its whole future nothing but darkness, desolation and death. A man with no sense of religious duty is he whom the Scriptures describe in such terse but terrific language as living 'without God in the world.' Such a man is out of his proper being, out of the circle of all his duties, out of the circle of all his happiness, and away, far away, from the purposes of his creation."

If the above sentiments, uttered by Daniel Webster, be true, all the political platforms now before the American people, except only the American and the Ohio Prohibition platforms, are to-day, in the "terse and terrific language" of that great genius, "without God in the world," and so, "worthless atoms."

SLIDING BACKWARD.

How far, says the New York Witness, the Republican party—once the party of great moral ideas—has retrograded in the last twenty years, was perhaps never more strikingly shown than in placing together the following extracts from its platform of 1864 and 1884:

Resolved, that the foreign immigration which in the past has added so much wealth, development and increase of power to this nation—the asylum of the oppressed of all nations—should be fostered and encouraged by a liberal and just policy.—Republican platform, 1864.

We pledge ourselves to sustain the present law restricting Chinese immigration, and to provide such further legislation as is necessary to carry out this position.—Republican platform, 1884.

BUTLER'S BOOM.

The Chicago Daily News, an anti-Blaine Republican sheet, has given some attention to Gen. Butler's arrangements at the Democratic Convention to be held here next week. In its different editions of last Saturday were found the following items:

"The Hon. N. A. Plympton, of Boston, chairman of the Massachusetts Democratic central committee, arrived at the Palmer House yesterday and at once planted the germs of a Butler boom in Chicago soil. He will remain until the close of the convention, and from this time on will put in his entire time working up Gen. Butler's claims. His arrival shows that the managers of the Butler canvass propose to fire the first gun, and to form their lines of battle before the rival candidates have time to scan the field. Col. Plympton will manage the canvass until Gen. Butler arrives. The Massachusetts aspirant, who never follows the time-worn precedents, will probably take control in person as soon as he reaches Chicago. Gen. Butler will arrive the latter part of next week. He will be accompanied by the State delegation and about two hundred Bostonians, who will make up the booming contingent."

Mr. Plympton thinks that Gov. Cleveland will not make a strong candidate, since, among other reasons, there is one labor lodge in New York numbering 200,000 members will not vote for him but will for Butler. Another note is upon the preparations at the Palmer House:

"Appreciating the necessity of a convenient sideboard, Ben Butler recently wrote to Mr. Potter Palmer for an additional room to parlors J. and K. The room was assigned him. It is 133 and has in it the piece of furniture which the ex-governor particularized in his letter under the title of 'bureau.' Mr. Palmer understood what was meant, however. A suspicious-looking jug with a tag to it, now sits on the sideboard in room 26, now occupied as an office by Sergeant-at Arms Bright. This room is to be occupied later as Tennessee headquarters. Parlor G Palmer, which John Kelly is to have, is a handsome room, but no sideboard in it, as the sachem never drinks anything but lemonade."

Gen. Ben Butler is a Grand Sovereign Inspector of the 33d degree of Freemasonry. This alone should disqualify him for the presidency. Freemasonry is the Secret Empire that sets up its false and absurd claims as a government above that of all civil governments. No man claiming a particle of true patriotism should vote for such a candidate for President.—Sandy Lake News, Pa.

—The Chicago Herald predicts that the political campaign will make tradesmen practice economy:

"The manufacturers are complaining that dull times are in store for them the remainder of this year. They base their predictions on the depression already existing in trade, and past experience in presidential years. Whenever a President is to be elected, the people become interested in politics, and business men say that it interferes with the regular course of things. A tour among builders, iron men, and dry goods merchants to-day developed the fact that there forebodings of stagnation in business this fall and winter, whatever reasons there are for it."

—A Scotch clergyman at Ayr, a few days ago, prayed: "O Lord, bless the Established Church, and the Free Church, and the United Presbyterian church and all the other churches—thou knowest the various nicknames, Lord, by which they are called—bless them all!"—N. Y. Herald.

THE GREAT REVIVAL NOW NEEDED IN THE CHURCH.

GALT, Ont.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Where are "the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that are done in the midst of Jerusalem"? Ezek. 9: 4. Doubtless God knoweth who they are. Their cry cometh up before him who is the prayer-hearing Jehovah. But is it not proper that while so many laborers are in the field to set the mark on their forehead, as co-workers with the Holy Spirit, would it not be well that in every denomination whose standards oppose the mystery of iniquity, there should be the special prayer-meeting for this very purpose? In that select prayer-meeting, they that fear the Lord might often speak one to another. We should like that the work spread into every congregation of every denomination. It is right that the working of "the man of sin" should be so revealed before the churches, that they could say, "We are not ignorant of Satan's devices." 2 Cor. 2:11. One of Satan's devices is to shut the mouths of all in Anti-masonic churches about his doings. "My son is a Freemason. He got a good situation through them. I cannot bear a word about that subject. My own father was a Freemason, and I hope he went to heaven when he died;—pray do not say anything about Freemasonry, I cannot bear it." We need such a revival now in the churches that shall eclipse in glory the revival of 1857. We must catch the spirit of Christ's words in Mat. 10: 16-39. Specially v. 37: "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me."

"Oh, preach the gospel, and let Freemasonry alone. The gospel will cure all spiritual diseases and Freemasonry too." But the gospel is preached by many a Freemason, yet he lived and died "with the lie in his right hand." Of what use was a pure gospel to him? It was only a fair wrapper to conceal the sin which he was spreading abroad under this beautiful cover. These men use their gospel, Judas-like, "as a cloak for their maliciousness."

What is God's cure? It is found in Isaiah 58: 1: "Cry aloud; spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins." But this cannot be done now. Satan has got to be too smart for that. He says: "Before you can go forth and preach Christ, you must come into my secret temple and 'call Jesus accursed'; then you can obtain a name and a place with those described in the second verse of the same chapter. You will then be fit to company with them 'that take delight in approaching to God.' That is the only way by which you can make a decent living, have all your sins covered up now, and be highly esteemed among men." So saith Satan, and his children speak likewise.

So far as my observation goes, that is my experience, in a church that let Freemasonry alone in its preaching and everywhere. So is it, I am sorry to say, in the one to which I fled for shelter from the burning sun of persecution. He who shall say, "Our church is wrong in excluding Freemasons and others. She should open wide her doors to receive them. They can practice and teach the church benevolence and the church can teach them Christianity." Beautiful theory! Impossible attempt! Having denied Christ for ever in the lodge, it is in vain to profess him falsely in the church. Mat. 6: 24; Luke 16: 13. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." The two are eternally irreconcilable. All attempts at reconciliation are vain and impossible. Repent, confess, and abjure the sin.

We need a revival then that shall begin at the house of God, in the Jerusalem that now is. All secret deists that deny Jesus must be slain in the court of God's house by the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God. The Lord shall consume the wicked one with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy him with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. 2: 8. Pray for it.

THE GOSPEL COMPANY.

RITCHIE, Mo.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Will you give an old farmer and also a reader of your valuable paper, space for a few thoughts? I see in the Cynosure of May 8th an article by J. McFarland, in which he says the great object professedly of all secret organizations is mutual help and protection, and asks for a substitute that would be wholly right. In the Bible, he says, we have the form of an organization or company that would meet every demand if we can only get to clearly understand its teaching on this matter.

I would say with Mr. McFarland that I do not pretend to fully comprehend the form of this company. I think before we can fully comprehend the terms of reconciliation to God we must first understand that God commands all to believe in the Messiahship of his Son. He requires the believing alien to confess the Son (Matt. 10: 32; Rom. 10: 9,) and repent of all his sins and be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and upon these conditions God has promised to give the alien the gift of the Holy Ghost (Acts 2: 38), to sanctify and set him a part for divine service.

But there is a vast difference between joining the church and being baptized, and repenting of all our sins and being baptized. The apostles understood this, and therefore they had a test question that they asked the baptized believer—"Have you received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Acts 19: 2. He that has received this gift has an experience to tell; he is a new creature in Christ Jesus; old things have passed away and all things have become new. He has had Christ revealed unto him not by flesh and blood, but by the Spirit of the living God. Matt. 16: 17

Now, can this be improved as a mutual help company? —"Neither was there any among them that lacked, for as many as were possessors of land or houses sold them and brought the prices of the things sold and laid them down at the apostle's feet." Acts 4: 34, 35. I will not say that we must sell all and lay it down at the feet of the church, but to say the least of this that we can possibly say, each member of this company ought to hold all that he has as mine and yours if you need it. I have not written this to provoke controversy, but with the hope that a feeble effort on my part might set wiser heads to thinking; for we have certainly fallen into the dregs of time wherein a vile contempt is being poured upon the ministry, and perhaps if we would read Mal. 2: 7, 8, 9, it would inform us of the true cause, for the common people have been cable-towed, hood-winked and honey-combed by lodge preachers until they are hardly prepared to believe that any of the ministry are honest men. But I do not wish to be understood as saying this of all preachers, for I think we have some who are good and useful men, but I had as soon go to old Belzebub himself for advice in religion as to one of these cable-towed preachers.

Come again, Bro. McFarland, we think your article has the right ring. C. P. WALROND.

REFORMATION STORMS.

In the days of the Reformation under Luther lived Erasmus of Rotterdam, who drew back from the fight in fear, saying "that a disadvantageous"—he might have said dishonorable—"peace was better than the most righteous war;" and John Bunyan tells of Master Fearing, Mr. Little-Faith and Mrs. Much-Afraid, and it seems that the posterity of all these have come down to our day, but they seem to dwell more particularly under the shadow of the churches.

How often do we virtually hear it said, "I am not in favor of secret societies, but then what is the use of fighting them? They can't be overthrown, and such agitation will only endanger the church, bringing in divisions and finally ruin it." They desire that secretism be done away with, but want it done so gradually and silently that it will not produce a ripple in society, especially in the church. Does the God of nature purify the air by calms, or does staguant water produce aught but disease and death?

If the church is on right ground morally, everything that will increase action and thought will but strengthen and cleanse it; but if it be part of iron and part of clay the sooner it is ground to powder the better, that from its ruins may arise one of pure gold.

What is needed is that the whole spiritual life of the church be renewed; but will inaction produce this result? Instead of plodding along in the "old ruts," let it not fear to search and look and see if these things are so of which secret societies are charged. M. P. N.

PITH AND POINT.

GOOD WORK. GO ON IN THE PULPIT AND OUT OF IT.

The Masons of this place are still doing their utmost to drive me out. I have spoken against them, and by circulating "Freemasonry Illustrated," I have been able to persuade two to leave the lodge entirely and hope to get more. The analysis is what does the work. There is a minister living in a small town near this place, who is anxious to get "Masonry Illustrated to the 33rd Degree." He is using his influence in the pulpit, and wants the book to show the nature of the oath taken, he will not only speak about them, but read them verbatim. He works against Masons in particular, and all other secret societies in general. Formerly I was under the impression the I. O. G. T's were working to a good end, and were deserving sympathy, but now I think the temperance cause can be helped openly and do more actual good to the one who requires aid.

It would please me very much to have you express your opinion on my way of working, and also if my friend's idea is advisable, that is to read the Masonic oath in the pulpit during the time he is speaking against them?—E. REDDEN, Woodland, Cal.

VALUABLE APPROBATION.

Since January some good friend, unknown to me, has had sent to me the Christian Cynosure. I wish through you to express my earnest thanks for the same.

I wish also to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the purposes of the paper, and in the main with its methods of opposition to the powers of darkness; and I commend you for your manly stand upon this question of reform before the American people.

May God and the people assist you in your work, is the prayer of your brother in Christ.—T. D. ADAMS, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

WHIG GENERALS OR DEMOCRAT.

There is an impression that the Generals of the old Anti-masonic Whig stamp did not succeed very well during the war of the rebellion, while Democratic Generals were in the ascendant for ability, success, and Republican favor. Will some of the contributors of the Cynosure inform us whether this is the case or not?

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON II.—July 13, 1884.—The Ark in the House. 2Sam. 6: 1-12.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He blesseth the habitation of the just. Prov. 3: 33.

About seventy years had passed since the ark of Jehovah had stood in the Tabernacle according to the express ordinance of God. And now that Israel was once more united, not only in a political but in the best and highest sense, and its God-appointed capital had at last been won, it was surely time to restore the ancient worship which had been so sadly disturbed.—Edersheim. After David had established himself in Jerusalem, two things were needed to make it the capital of the nation. These were (1) that it should possess a palace for himself; and (2) that it should be the abode of the ark of the covenant, over which hovered continually the visible symbol of Jehovah's presence. Had he been content to build only an official residence for himself, Jerusalem would have been no more than the city of David; but in a theocracy it was necessary, also, that the metropolis should be the city of God; and so in that spirit of patriotic piety for which he was so remarkable David set himself at once as earnestly to prepare a place for the reception of the ark as to erect a habitation for himself.—Wm. Taylor.

"And they set the ark of God on a new cart." They had no right to set it on a cart of any kind. If David had had a golden chariot to offer, it would have been equally unlawful. But as the Philistines had sent the ark back on a new cart (1 Sam. 6: 7), the Israelites easily imitated their worldly example. The ark should have been carried by hand, by its staves, and by the Levitical family of Kohathites.—Hanna. David should have known the law. Perhaps David was so very sure that what he was doing would be acceptable to God that he had failed to ask divine guidance, and therefore needed that this first sign of self-will should be sharply rebuked. —Tuck. So we often do right things in a wrong way; seek to right our wrongs by doing other wrongs; reprove others in a wrong spirit; build churches, but not with pure devotion to the interests of the Gospel, etc.—Peloubet.

"They brought it out." The well-known shout which accompanied the raising of the ark at the successive movements in the wilderness was doubtless heard, "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered." "Arise, O Lord, into thy rest; thou and the ark of thy strength" (Ps. 68: 1; 132: 8).

"Put forth his hand to the ark of God." The long procession went down the defile with music of all kinds till a sudden halt was made at the threshing-floor. At this point, perhaps slipping on the smooth rock, the oxen stumbled, and Uzzah caught hold of the ark, to save it from falling. Suddenly he fell down dead by its side. A long tradition has connected the going forth of the ark with a terrible thunder-storm (Ps. 19: 1)—Stanley.

"And took hold of it." Not even the Levites who bore the ark had a right to touch it, but must carry it by poles.—Hanna.

"For the oxen shook it." The use of the Hebrew verb here is unusual. In 2 Kings 9: 33, used as a transitive verb, it means throw down. So perhaps here. The oxen were throwing, or had thrown it down, very likely by turning aside to eat what grain there might be on the threshing-floor.—Cook. So it is that one departure from God's rules will lead to other and worse errors. If the ark had been rightly carried from the first, there would have been no place for this shock by the oxen, which led to Uzzah's rash act and its awful penalty. The road from Kirjath-jearim to Jerusalem is, in some places, very steep, e. g., over the valley of Beit Hanina, and it could not have been a good carriage-way. No wonder that the oxen stumbled and shook the ark.—Hanna.

"The anger of the Lord." Not passion, but that feeling which makes him hate sin, and compels him to punish it. Uzzah was not merely doing a wrong, but was injuring God's influence and religion among the whole people. All that was loving and good in God was aroused against the act.—Peloubet.

"For his error." The error consisted in touching the ark, which as the symbol of God's presence (1 Sam. 4: 7) none could look at (Num. 4: 20; 1 Sam. 6: 19), much less lay hold of it, without peril of life. For transportation, therefore, it was first covered up by the Levites to whom it was committed, and that with faces covered (Num. 4: 15, 20), and carried on staves.—Lange.

"Was displeased." The same word is used in 1 Sam. 15: 11 (E.V. it grieved Samuel) to denote vexation akin to anger.—Cambridge Bible. Uzzah's fate was not merely the penalty of his own rashness. The improper mode of transporting the ark was the primary cause of his unholy deed; and David distinctly recognized it as a punishment on the people in general, "because we sought him not after the due order."—Smith. The burning of David's anger referred to the calamity which had befallen Uzzah, or speaking more correctly, to the cause of the calamity which David attributed to himself or his undertaking. As he had not only resolved upon the removal of the ark, but had also planned the way in which it should be taken to Jerusalem, he could not trace the occasion of Uzzah's death to any other cause than his own plans.—Keil.

"And the Lord blessed Obed-edom." Among other blessings, God increased to Obed-edom in the course of time the number of his children and of his children's children, until there were among them sixty-two vigorous men held in repute among the people. He himself was afterwards entrusted with the honorable office of keeper of the door of the Tabernacle in which the ark at a later period was deposited.—Krummacher.

"David.... brought up the ark of God." Perhaps it showed a weakness of faith in David that he never took the ark to himself till it had so blessed its keeper that David's taking it almost looked like selfishness.—Hanna. David prepared for its final transport to Jerusalem with a care suitable to the lesson he had received. Instead of removing the old tabernacle, which was doubtless much impaired by age, he set up a new tent for it in the city of David. In the first procession, the king and his warriors had perhaps held too prominent a place, to the injury of the religious solemnity, which was now duly preserved. David intrusted the duty of carrying it to those whom Jehovah had appointed; and so they carried it on their shoulders after the manner prescribed by Moses. They were escorted by David and his chosen warriors, with the elders of Israel, and the procession started with every sign of joy. The first movement was watched with deep anxiety, lest there should still be some fault to provoke God's anger; but when the Levites had taken six steps in safety, it was seen that God helped them; and the procession halted, while David sacrificed seven bullocks and seven rams. He then took his place before the ark, clothed only with the linen ephod of the priestly order, without his royal robes, and danced with all his might, playing upon the harp, as he led the way up to the hill of Zion, amid the songs of the Levites, the joyful shouts of all the people, and the noise of cornets and trumpets and cymbals and psalteries and harps.—Smith.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

RIGHT AND WRONG WAYS OF WORKING FOR GOD.

1. Trying to advance God's cause in wrong ways. Vs. 1–6. It was right for David to desire the removal of the ark to his own capital city. It was necessary for the safety and stability of his kingdom that there should be one common center of worship; and above all, it was but the proper expression of his own and his people's gratitude to God who had made him ruler over a prosperous and united nation. But the manner of removing it was wrong, being in express violation of the statute found in Num. 4: 14, 15; 7: 9; 18: 3. Hence the disaster and delay. So even true Christians sometimes seek to advance a good cause by mistaken methods. Reforms in every age have suffered nearly as much from the errors of friends as the hostility of foes. For instance there are many men and women who think they can advance the holy cause of temperance by joining secret societies, though the teachings of God's Word and the example of Jesus are plainly against every form of secrecy. As the ark should have been borne with reverent care on the shoulders of men consecrated to the task, so only devout and earnest men and women are fitted to carry the burden of reform. If bound to obey the will of unknown lodge officers we put ourselves in the position of the dumb and ignorant oxen without volition or will of our own, and like them are liable to unwittingly put the cause in jeopardy. God cannot consistently bless a method of work which he has not only not appointed, but expressly forbidden. The temperance reform has been continually obstructed and put back by secret societies which substitute play for work, and through their Masonic and Odd-fellow members are really in league with rumsellers and whisky politicians.

2. God punishes the mistakes of good men. Vs. 6, 7. This judgment on Uzzah seems to us very severe. But God punished Moses for a few rash words by not allowing him to enter the promised land. He punishes the mistakes of good men not less, but more severely than others, because they have the means of knowing better.

3. The blessing of the Lord is with the just. Vs. 10, 11. To stand up for the right often seems like the direct way to miss all earthly prosperity. Obed-edom was willing to give shelter to the ark when others shrank in fear and dread from the responsibility. So there are always some who are willing to help a poor and despised cause which they know is God's cause without thinking of what they may lose thereby in worldly profit. Salmon P. Chase, when a poor young lawyer, defended a poor black woman claimed as a fugitive slave. The case was decided against him. "There goes a fine young fellow who has ruined himself," remarked one as he left the court-room; but that very plea which he had the courage to make for God and humanity at a time when the anti-slavery cause was most unpopular helped to make him U. S. Senator, and afterwards Chief Justice. God's side is always the winning side. Men who shrink from sheltering the ark of an unpopular truth through fear of danger to their pockets, their lives, or their reputation, always lose the blessing which braver souls gain.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Can a good cause ever justify wrong means? Rom. 3: 8. Does God punish all men's mistakes alike? Luke 12: 47, 48. What promise to those who forget their worldly interests for the sake of truth? Matt. 10: 39.

THE WASHINGTON ADDRESS,

"FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT" is out of print. The only edition has now been all sent out, and orders for hundreds are coming in which we cannot fill.

BUDS AND BLOSSOMS

Is a charming illustrated magazine, published by J. F. Avery, Halifax, Nova Scotia, containing forty pages, monthly of anecdote and argument for the Christian home. Every number is profusely and finely illustrated. We shall be happy to introduce this magazine to hundreds of American homes, and have secured a special arrangement from the proprietor. Buds and Blossoms is 75 cents per year; with the Cynosure the two will be $2.50, or any subscriber who has already paid for this paper can get the magazine at the same rate.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

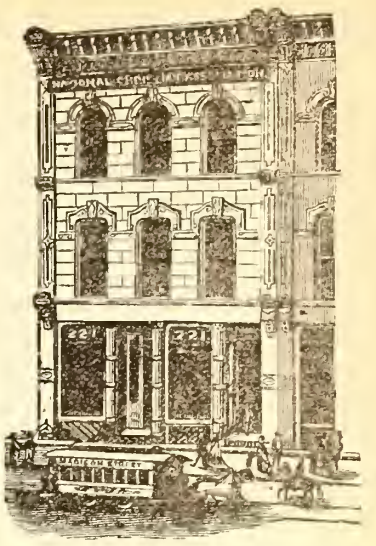
CHRISTIAN WORKERS



Who depend on voluntary contributions of Christian people in whole or in part for their support:

J. F. BROWNE, Berea, Ky.
ELI TAPLEY, Columbus, Miss.
J. F. GALLOWAY, Okahumka, Florida.
WM. HAZENBURG, Cape Town, S. Africa.
A. D. ZARAPHONITHES, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 3, 1884.

HOW SHALL WE CHRISTIANIZE POLITICS?—Go against the lodge, though good men are in it, and vote the right cause, though upheld by imperfect men. Some poor, honest souls may have got into Aaron's Odd-fellows' ball about the calf; and haply a few good people were sunk with Korah and his troops. If so, God's angels may have picked them out. But idolatry must fall and good men must get out of it or suffer. Tom Corwin, Governor of Ohio, told Mayor Davis: "The bullet must quell the mob, [as in Cincinnati] though it go through a good man standing on the side-walk to reach it. Good citizens must keep out of the mob." That one word of Corwin's quelled the anti-Abolition riots there.

MORMONISM.

The Republican party has had the Executive at Washington twenty-four years, and is seeking to retain it twenty-eight, by adding four years more. Under their administration, Mormon polygamy in the person of Geo. Q. Cannon, has sat and legislated with them most of the time unmolested; though Congress passed a law to extirpate it twenty-two years ago, July 2d, two years after Lincoln's election. A new bill has just passed the Senate, which, the Chicago Times truly says, gives no fear to the Mormons, or hope to the Gentiles that polygamy will be extirpated. The success of the principles of the American party platform, and that alone will extirpate Mormonism. As we have already said, to send Freemasons to suppress Mormons, is to send foxes to suppress wolves. The Mormons are themselves Masons, why should Masons suppress them? The Mormon constitution is no whit more despotic or its morality more gross and indecent than that of the lodge. And if Masons, like Mormons, were a community by themselves, these disgusting facts would at once appear. Last winter, Gov. Brown, Senator from Georgia, openly charged, in his pro-Mormon speech, that members of Congress were known to be like Mormons in their lives, without the pretense of religion to justify them. So far as the lodge is concerned, this is certainly true. And a Republican platform without a recognition of God or morals, and allied to the lodge and liquor, gives no hope of amendment or improvement.

PRESBYTERIAN DOCTORS DISAGREE.

Rev. Geo. P. Hayes, the very popular moderator of the late Presbyterian General Assembly at Saratoga, has been eleven years president of Washington and Jefferson College, Pa., and is now delegate to the World's Pan-Presbyterian Council meeting in Ireland this season. Dr. Hayes addressed a great crowd at Saratoga last month on prohibition politics, and the audience, largely composed of Commissioners to the General Assembly, applauded him to the echo. His speech, reported in the Cynosure (June 5th) accused the Republican party of taking sides with liquor, and threatened, that, unless their convention, to meet in Chicago June 3d, gave them an anti-liquor candidate the prohibitionists would draw off voters enough to defeat the Republican nominee. This political speech was on Sabbath afternoon, to the W. C. T. U. of Saratoga. Dr. Hayes is editor of the Earnest Presbyterian, Denver, Colorado, a paper like its editor, sprightly, strong and popular. We are sorry to add that the Christian Hour, claiming to be "the Presbyterian organ for Iowa, Nebraska and the North West," and a large and vigorous print, utters, June 20th, the following weak and unworthy sentiments:

"Our own firm conviction is that the church should confine herself largely to teaching general principles, and that the application of those principles must be left to the enlightened Christian conscience, or very largely so. Religio-political reforms have not had large success."

"The Methodists have a name for making a specialty of politics. We do not want our church to follow this example if the charge is true. The church is not inspired to decide between the Republican and Democratic parties."

What was Luther's but a "religio-political reform?" What was the English Reformation under Cranmer and Henry VIII.? What, ages before, were the reforms under Alfred and Wyckliffe, but "religio-political?" But for Lollardism and the Præmunire, we should be paying "Peter's Pence" to the Pope today. But, for a Presbyterian organ to ignore and condemn John Knox and the Scottish religio-political reformation simply amazes us. The same paper holds up King David as a type of Christ and model for Christians, though every blow David struck was for "religio-political reform."

The Christian Hour is mistaken as to the Methodists. In 1836, their General Conference forbade their preachers opposing slavery because it was "political" action, and this Presbyterian organ is working after that Methodist pattern.

NOT TOO MANY ISSUES.

MENOMINEE, Mich., June 24th, 1884.

Rev. J. Blanchard,

DEAR SIR:—The American party has taken up three issues, viz., Prohibition, Anti-masonry, and Woman Suffrage. All may be good issues, but which is in the most advanced stage for political influence and success. Which one can now be pressed to the best advantage? It seems to me that prohibition can. As the evils of intemperance are more apparant, easier portrayed, touch more people and command wider attention than the evils of secret societies, or of non-suffrage for woman. Hence it seems to me that the party ought to confine itself to prohibition as its leading advance issue. There are many Masons who are prohibitionists, and many more people generally who do not see the need or hope of woman suffrage yet, and who might go in to help carry the one point—prohibition,—and afterward the other issues which are ripening slowly, and in another generation could be taken up. Very Respectfully,

A. W. BILL.

ANSWER.

As a matter of mere policy or prudence, the American party is nearer success, taking the three issues, that taking one; as that ship will sooner reach port, which is in ballast, loaded, so as to steer steady; than one light-loaded and liable to be driven by winds, and drawn off her course by currents.

The "National Prohibition Home-Protection party" will never succeed with so long a name, and a single issue; and, worst of all, manned by Masons, who will wreck every ship they cannot guide or control.

The hope that a party made up in part of Prohibitionists who are Masons, will carry Prohibition and crush liquor, is supreme folly. The "many Masons who are Prohibitionists" are sworn to have their throats cut, and bowels burned if they do not stand by their brother Masons who are distillers, brewers, and liquor-sellers; all of whom they must betray if they go for Prohibition. To hope they will do so, is to hope against reason and history.

THE HORRIBLENESS OF HELL.

A clear thinking, pious young man, said, "Of some 1,400,000,000 in the world; some 1,100,000,000 die without Christ, in their sins, and this has been going on 6,000 years! Can we believe these myriads on myriads of millions are 'suffering' and to suffer 'the vengeance of eternal fire.' (Jude 7.) It is horrible?"

The answer was:

1. Mathematics cannot measure morals; nor arithmetic try God: approving, if he save millions and lose one, and condemning him if he save one and lose millions. For why should he lose one? or suffer sin and misery at all? There is a fallacy in this method of reasoning, as in the method of the mouse in the meal chest, reasoning of the world.

2. Yet some have bravely attempted arithmetical justification, thus: Half our race die sinless, infants, saved by the blood of Christ. Then who knows how many heathen Christ may find, having greater faith than Israel. Matt. 8: 10. And then, if the millennium lasts a thousand years, and each day of it equal a thousand years; the lodge and liquor vice, crime, disease ease misery gone; life lengthened again to centuries; thorns and thistles out; and earth laughing with abundance; when God's sum is done, it may prove, showing billions saved to one lost, the damned counting nothing in the reckoning.

3. The sole mystery is "The origin of evil," why God should permit the wicked and their hell, or Jeff. Davis and his war.

4. The Saviour when pressed to know if "few should be saved" gave no hint, but said, "STRIVE TO ENTER." And when asked as to why church leaders could not see, replied, "Even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight!" But we know assuredly that "God will judge the world in righteousness."

"Hope humbly then with trembling pinions soar:
Wait the great teacher, Death, and God adore."

DISGRACING THE SENATE.

The plank of the American platform demanding the withdrawal of charters given the lodges by Federal or State legislation has been objected to on the plea that charters are not given or asked from legislatures for the lodges themselves, but only for building associations. Such incorporation does not affect the work of the lodges, in initiation and swindling of members or persecution of seceders or opponents, but simply allows them to hold property. But the examination of the Congressional records having shown that Congress has covered with its shield of general incorporation the lodges of the District, and the remembrance of the former times when it was known that lodges were chartered by State legislatures, inclined the late convention to retain the plank as it was originally drawn.

A bill introduced into the Senate by John Mitchell of Pennsylvania, last Friday, to incorporate the Grand Army of the Republic is another exact instance of the evil against which the American platform protests.

It is high time that this business of dragging Congress into the business of god-mother for secret lodges was brought to a stop. The object of the national encampment of the G. A. R. which thus seeks legalization for its business, and so for the whole system of lodges for which it stands, are thus given in the bill:

1. To preserve and strengthen kind and fraternal feeling which bind together the soldiers, sailors, and marines, who united to suppress the late rebellion, and to perpetuate in memory and history the dead.
2. To assist such former comrades in arms as need help and protection, and to extend needful aid to the widows and orphans of those who have fallen.
3. To maintain the true allegiance to the United States based upon a permanent respect for, and fidelity to, the national Constitution and law; to discountenance whatever tends to weaken loyalty, incites to insurrection, treason, or rebellion, or in any manner impairs the efficiency and permanency of our Constitution and to encourage and spread universal liberty, equal rights, and justice to all men.

Congress is already lavishing money, by the hundred million a year almost, to accomplish the very objects here put down. But the lodge is shameless. It is ready to ask Congress to vote itself a failure and a fraud, or a church to condone blasphemy and devil worship, if its oath-bound members may thereby gain any advantage.

—Pres. L. N. Stratton of Wheaton Theological Seminary gives a Fourth of July address at College Springs, Iowa.

—Mrs. M. A. Tapley, Columbus, Miss., acknowledges with gratitude the receipt of boxes of goods from Mrs. A. B. Kellogg, Wethersfield, Ill., and Mrs. A. E. Jenks, Cheshire, Mass.

—The Christian Statesman publishes in a full-page article, under the title, "A Shameful Crime Exposed," the substance of the article from the American of Washington, proving the conspiracy of Freemasons and railroad monopolists to ruin Senator Pomeroy in private character and political reputation.

—Rev. M. Gault writes to the Blanchard Record from the Chicago Convention: "My opinion of Senator Pomeroy was greatly improved. He is an honest looking man. All his talk is in the line of uniting religion with politics. The religious and political phases of the anti-secret movement must be blended. The Christian citizen cannot hang up his religion as he does his overcoat when he goes to the ballot box.

—Elder J. F. Browne of Berea can spend two or three months in lecture work this summer, and will be glad to correspond with any of the State Associations or with individuals. Elder Browne's work hardly needs commendation here for he is known and esteemed in a large portion of the country where the Cynosure is taken.

—The American convention voted that delegates secure a publication of the report of proceedings in their county papers. This good work is largely forestalled by the Associated Press dispatches which gave a fair epitome of the convention, and by the publishers of the "patent inside" sheets, some of whom we see give a very fair report of a column in length. Thus the report will appear in hundreds, perhaps thousands of local papers.

—The address of Senator Pomeroy we are sorry not to be able to give in full, although the passages and outline give perhaps a fair idea of the whole. The argument as it fell from his lips however was by far more powerful as he held up for the inspection the platforms enunciated during different campaigns by the Republican party. The quotations from these platforms which he made would be a good speech of themselves.

—Bro. Thomas C. Haines of Portland, Oregon, is moved for the condition of the people in the Pacific Northwest, and is trying to find whom the Lord hath called to lead on to a more aggressive warfare against the lodge enemy. Elders Pruett and T. S. La Due are both warmly and heartily approving and doing for the cause what they can in connection with their church work, but necessarily unable to give much time to special efforts. Bro. Haines hears with joy that Bro. Edward Mathews, who is a champion, is turning attention to the Pacific coast and may remove thither. If so, the friends of our cause there may be sure of a courageous helper.

—In a magazine notice a few weeks ago a reference to Mr. De La Matyr of Denver, Colorado, was misinterpreted by some friends as questioning his intelligence and good sense. Such a meaning was never intended. We are glad to note on the assurance of Mr. D.'s personal friends that he unites with an earnest piety an aversion to the Masonic lodge in which he took one degree and then left it forever. We hope he will not be beguiled into doing lodge work in the Greenback party.

—The "Western Sunday School Assembly" is to be held on the camp ground, Lisbon, Iowa, July 3d to 14th inst., under the general superintendence of Rev. T. D. Adams of Cedar Rapids. Pres. W. M. Beardshear of Western College and Prof. J. P. Landis are among the instructors. A. A. Wright of the Chautauqua school of Theology will also give instruction in New Testament Greek. Among those who lecture during the assembly are Bishops Kephart and Weaver of the United Brethren church, J. W. Hott, editor of the Telescope, Hon. E. C. Ebersole, Revs. W. I. Beatty, J. H. Rhea, H. O. Pratt and others. The programme presents a course of study on topics of great interest to teachers and elders of the church.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman has removed his family from Wheaton to Washington last week. He has for some seven or eight years, since engaging in the lecture work, been much of the time absent from his family, and although he much desired to remain at Wheaton to educate his children, two of whom were members of the Freshman class in the college, yet the desire to reunite the family seemed a paramount duty. Mrs. Hinman will be greatly missed in Wheaton where she has been active in church and temperance work. We hope that providential changes may be made, after they have enjoyed Waashington life for a time, so that they may return to the West again. Bro. Hinman hopes to fill up a busy year in work, partly among the colored churches and partly in the American office.

—There are a few papers in the country which seem to have passed into that stage of senility where the mind lives entirely in the past and draws scant nourishment from the remembrances of slanders and crimes long since exploded or atoned for. Of the score or more of the leading dailies of the country, East, West, North and South, which we have seen, only three attempt to make a point against the American party and its nominees. The New York World, the Chicago Evening Journal and the Chicago Herald think that other men are much like themselves, and are not choice in their charges of hypocrisy. The editors may be unaware of the latest developments of the Kansas Masonic bribery case, but they must have read enough at the time, when the courts of Kansas and the Senate of the United States investigated the matter, to know that Senator Pomeroy was the victim of a most diabolical conspiracy, planned and carried out by Freemasons.

It warms the hearts of the aged men, who have borne the burden of one great reform, now passed into history, and who have undertaken another with a faith that must triumph gloriously, to hear the young men and women who leave our colleges and seminaries, speak with frankness and emphasis their convictions against the lodge. Two of the young ladies who graduated at Wheaton did not fear to speak their minds on the subject, and the Free Methodist prints a graduating address of Mr. Thos. R. Sully, at Chili Seminary, in which occurs these sentences:

"The giant power of secret oath-bound societies, which is so predominant and yet so destructive to the welfare of any republic, holds, as it were, the reins of the nation in its hand. In these organizations men bind themselves, under penalty of death, to follow, not the dictates of their own conscience, but to ignorantly obey and carry out the orders of unknown chiefs—to defend a brother in crime and to keep forever secret all that transpires within such societies. Under their protection crimes multiply, and by their influence 'judgment is thwarted and justice is turned away backward.' The iron grasp of secretism holds its victims bound with a stronger cord than slavery. Slavery held men's bodies only, but secretism has a strong and unyielding hold on the souls of men—depriving them of the right of conscience—erecting barriers between members of the human family which God never intended, compelling the respectable man, and even he who fills the sacred desk, to own as a brother, to shield from justice, the murderer and defaulter, the adulterer and the drunkard, and those guilty of all other atrocious crimes."

William Taylor says in the Witness, "There is no mandatory authority between me and the General Conference." That is, he has no "chief ministers" to obey, either bishops or annual conference. He asks that Africa be put on the list of his missions, for transit aid and then self-support, "except Liberia," he says, "which belongs to our (M. E.) regular missionary society, and whose sucklings there, possibly, cannot be weaned." "I cannot for a moment entertain the question of a let-up of any sort on the principles and mission of self-support, which God has entrusted to me as a specialty. Such a question is not debatable." He thinks a very large portion of his time will be spent in Africa.—Christian Harvester.

LITERATURE.

HISTORICAL WONDER-BOOK; comprising Green's Larger History of the English People, Carlyle's History of the French Revolution, Creasy's Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World, Schiller's History of the Thirty Years' War. Large octavo, pp. 1070. John B. Alden, New York. Price, $2.50.

It is truly a marvel of skill and a triumph of modern mechanical art that such a noble volume can be furnished at so small a cost. Whether we admire its large proportions, beautiful binding, fair page, excellent paper, numerous and striking illustrations numbering nearly 100—all are first class. Green's History has been noticed before in these columns. It is the latest, and probably the best and most conscientious history of England from the earliest times to the present century. Schiller's Thirty Years' War has long been a standard work, and is the best narrative of those desolating wars which ravaged Germany during the generation following the Reformation, in which the religious differences arising from that great movement played a leading part. The superiority of the author's style pictures most wonderfully the fearful ravages of war, and makes the history a useful argument for the cause of international arbitration. Creasy's Decisive Battles is another war book written with a vigorous pen, and after careful study of the national and historical movements which led up to the dreadful and final conclusion. The French Revolution has been a theme for the ablest writers of history. Thiers, Scott, Allison, Macauley, Guizot, and others have found it a theme never exhausted of its astonishment and horror, nor of profound practical lessons in government. Carlyle wrote not a history simply but a study also of that national outbreak. Probably no other account of it has been more read in our language, and none has more deserved attention. These four great historical works are presented in this volume with appropriate surroundings, and to double their value to the student an excellent and copious index follows each.

COOKERY FOR BEGINNERS. By Marion Harland. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co., publishers. Price 60 cents.

Marion Harland, years ago, devoted her pen entirely to fiction of the love story kind. But years and experience worked a reform, and she wisely abandoned that style of writing, and devoted herself to the very practical part of woman's work. She probably realizes as she grows old that where novel-writing wins one good husband, a talent for making good tea and coffee and broiling beefsteak will attract twenty. She has already given the housekeepers "Common Sense in the Household," "The Dinner Year-Book" and the "Cottage Kitchen," and the present additional volume on how to prepare something good to eat, will be welcome to the husbands if not to the wives of the whole country. It has been a fault of previous books on cookery, that they have taken for granted the possession of a certain degree of knowledge requisite to their successful use, not always possessed. This book, while affording a range of information unsurpassed by any other book, and thus suited to the use of all, has the advantage of being perfectly adapted to the needs of the veriest tyros in cookery.

WENDELL PHILLIPS.—Memorial address by Geo. Wm. Curtis; and speech on "The War for the Union," by Wendell Phillips. John B. Alden, New York. pp. 162. Price 25 cents.

It was a happy thought to put these two great addresses into this charming little volume. Of the thousand public speakers who pronounced encomiums upon the great orator of reform, Mr. Curtis has given us the greatest in his eulogy in Tremont Temple, Boston. Others have possibly been more eloquent; others have been more severe in their criticism of Mr. Phillips' extreme views of human rights and human wrongs; but none have, on the whole, given us a juster estimate of a great representative American. Mr. Phillips spoke on the war in December, 1861, just as the country was coming to understand that this "three-months'" job was a failure. No one can begin reading that eloquent invective without wishing to finish it before closing the book.

The North American Review for July opens with a discussion of the jury system, which has of late been attacked by popular clamor and able argument. An institution which for centuries has been regarded as one of the most essential rights of the citizen, and one of the most effective barriers against absolute power is itself on trial to-day, and in some of our outbursts of indignation against the miscarriages of our courts we are apt to blame the jury system unjustly. In this article by Judge Robert C. Pitman, there are some considerations presented why this system should not be discarded, and some suggestions for its improvement. "American Economics," by Prof. Van Buren Denslow, a writer for the Inter Ocean of this city, is a forcible exposition of the protection theory of national economy. Judge Noah Davis writes of "Marriage and Divorce;" Dr. P. Bender, whose subject is "The Annexation of Canada," sets forth the advantages likely to accrue to the United States from the absorption of the Canadian provinces; Prof. D. McG. Means, in an argument against "Government Telegraphy," subjects the management of the Post Office to a most searching criticism; Charles T. Congdon writes of "Private Vengeance;" and, finally, there is a symposium on the "Future of the Negro," by Senator Z. B. Vance, Frederick Douglass, Joel Chandler Harris, Senator John T. Morgan, Prof. Richard T. Greener, Gen. S. C. Armstrong, Oliver Johnson, and others.

The Century for July presents its readers with a full length portrait of John Bright, the great English orator and statesman, which is called very good by those who know him. T. H. S. Escott writes an accompanying sketch. The illustrated articles present nothing out of the common-place, but ex-president Woolsey on "Academical Degrees", Eugene V. Smalley, on "The United States pension offices", and a sketch of the origin, growth, and disbandment of the Ku-Klux Klan in the South, discusses topics of more or less general interest; the latter especially deserves a study of the character of the secret lodges in general which it furnishes.

The St. Nicholas magazine in "Fourth of July among the Indians", and especially in "The Bartholdi Statue", Liberty enlightening the World, soon to be erected in New York harbor, gives its young readers some useful reading. The stories are on the whole quite good this month, and the illustrations sprightly as ever.

Choice Literature in the last number gives its readers an amount of substantial magazine literature which they will look far to find in any other publication. Among the topics are: Geology in Greenland, Progress of the working classes, Glimpses of the Soudan, Charles Stuart Colverley, A naturalist's visit to Egypt, The Sins of Legislators, Max Muller on Buddhist Charity, Color, Space and Music for the people, Emerson by Mathew Arnold, Anarchy by Reclus, Possibilities of Ballooning, etc.

Vick's July Magazine is a good number for the heats of mid summer. "The Weather" and "Norway Maples" come in inviting juxtaposition. A prize essay on "Root Crops", and "A Glimpse of Colorado", and some hints on the training of vines, readers will not overlook.

PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL.—The third General Council of the Presbyterian Alliance, meeting in Belfast, Ireland, June 24th, to adjourn July 3d, has before it a long and interesting programme. Professor Watts will preach the opening sermon. Each morning session will be five hours long and six papers will be presented and discussed. Each evening there will be addresses. Professor Charteris, Professor A. A. Hodge, Dr. Talbot W. Chambers, and Dr. George Matheson are to present papers, the first two on the Authority of Holy Scripture, the third on Biblical Criticism, and the last on Evolution and Revelation. Professor Blaikie is to take a survey of the Presbyterian Family; Dr. Bersier of France, Dr. Morris of Cincinnati, and others will consider its unity, and Dr. Donald Frazer and others will draw lessons from other churches. A session is to be given to Foreign Mission subjects; another to the Christian Ministry, its qualifications, training, and duty, by Professors Alexander Warfield and Welsh of the United States, Professor King of Canada, and Professor Murphy of Belfast; another on Elders and Lay Work; and another on Educational Facilities. The addresses in the evening are to be on more popular subjects.

The maximum membership of the council is three hundred. Taking the figures of the last council, the delegations from the churches in this country number as follows: The Northern church, 40; Southern church, 28; Dutch Reformed, 12; German Reformed, 20; United Presbyterian, 16; Associate Reformed Synod of the South, 3; General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, 2; Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church of America, 4. They form almost one-half of the strength of the alliance. The first meeting of the council was held in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1877. Its membership in attendance numbered 300, principals and associates. This made a very fine impression, and caused the second meeting to be looked forward to with great interest. The second council was held in Philadelphia in 1880, and for ten days in October that year the Quaker City was a Presbyterian Mecca. At the first council the veteran missionary of India, Rev. Dr. Duff, presided. There were 101 delegates, commissioned by twenty-two different Presbyterian organizations, sent to this meeting, and of that number sixty-four were present. Those delegates were from the following bodies: From the United States, the Northern, the Southern, the Reformed Presbyterian churches, and the Reformed Dutch church; the English Presbyterian church, the Presbyterian church of Wales; the Established, the Free, the United, and the Reformed Presbyterian churches of Scotland; the Irish Presbyterian church, the Presbyterian church in Canada, the Reformed church of France, the Missionary church of Belgium, the Union of Evangelical churches of France, the Evangelical church of Canton de Vaud, Switzerland; the Evangelical church of Neufchatel, Switzerland; the Waldensian church of Italy, the Reformed church of East Friesland, the Free Evangelical church of Germany, and the Evangelical church of Spain. Twenty-seven other churches have since been added to the number. They are in Hungary, Bohemia, Moravia, Holland, Netherlands, Russia, Italy, Cape Colony, Orange Free State, Natal, Victoria, New South Wales, Eastern Australia, Queensland, New Zealand, Otago, Ceylon, New Hebrides. The additional churches in this country are the Associate Reformed Synod of the South, General Synod of Reformed Presbyterian church, Welsh Calvinistic church, German Reformed church. These lists show the size and world-wide character of the alliance.

—The Chaldean account of the deluge agrees in more than thirty particulars with the record given in the book of Genesis. So the Bible is confirmed again by these ancient records, which have been hidden from view and forgotten for thousands of years.

—It is hopeful evidence of the true estimate in which secret societies are really held by those who are largely members of them, when the late Methodist Episcopal General Conference, in its report on temperance passed silently over all the secret societies professing temperance, and commended the National Temperance Society and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.—Wesleyan.

THE HOME.

A MOTHER'S ANSWER.

Over the lofty Ben Lomond,
The charm of the sunset fell;
And sweet in the purple twilight
The chime of the old kirk bell.
And lo! in the grassy kirk-yard
Was the white-haired Dominie;
Men and women on either hand,
And the children at his knee.

And there in the still, warm evening,
Low sitting among the dead,
The good man took the sacred Book
And the trial of Abraham read;
Until, in the solemn shadows,
The sorrow grew wondrous near;
Fathers looked at their own bright sons,
And the mothers dropped a tear.

Thoughtful all sat a little space,
And then the Dominie said:
"David, could thou have done this thing?"
And the old man bowed his head,
And standing up, with lifted face,
Answered, "I think I could,
For I have found through eighty years
That the Lord our God is good!"

"Janet, you've been a mother oft;
Could your faith have stood this test?"
She raised her grandchild in her arms,
And she held it to her breast.
"God knows a mother's love," she said
(While the tears dropped from her eyes),
"And never from a mother's heart
Would have asked such sacrifice."

"Oh, mother wise!" the preacher said,
"Oh, mother wise and good!
A sweeter depth than man can reach
Thy heart hath understood.
Take Janet's sermon with you, friends,
And as your years go by,
Believe our Father no poor soul
Beyond its strength will try."

THE SECOND ADVENT.

There is a well-known story in New England which relates that about a century ago, a day of remarkable gloom and darkness overspread the States of Massachusetts and Connecticut—a day still spoken of in local histories as the "Dark Day," when the light of the sun was slowly extinguished as it by an eclipse. The Legislature of Connecticut happened at that moment to be in session, and to quote an American writer: "As its members saw the unexpected and unaccountable darkness coming on, they shared in the general awe and terror. It was supposed by many that the Last Day—the Day of Judgment—had come, and, in the consternation of the hour, some members moved the adjournment of the House. Then straightway there arose an old Puritan legislator, Davenport of Stamford, and said that if the Last Day had come, he desired to be found in his place, and doing his duty; for which reasons he moved that candles should be brought, and the House proceed with its business.

This Davenport of Stamford was a wise man. What could the other Senators have suggested which would be equally suitable for the occasion? If it had been the Last would they have been more ready for it, if they had gone to their homes, and waited there in idleness? Would it have been more seemly to have rushed into the street and to have stood there with gaping mouths, looking upward to the sky? What was better than being ready for whatever might happen, and waiting at the post of duty? We believe firmly in the second advent of Christ, and in the grand fact that he may come at such an hour as we think not; but what is the practical use of revelation? Are we to forego matters of immediate concern, in order to pry into the impenetrable darkness of the future? Are we to make ourselves into mere star-gazers and prognosticators? Are we to spend our time in idle wonder concluding that every time we hear of wars, and rumors of war, and read of earthquakes in divers places, it is an infallible token that the end of the world is near? Why, there have been wars, and rumors of wars, and all the other signs, a score of times, and yet the world wags on at its usual rate? No, rather let us give ourselves up more entirely to the pressing demands of our Lord's household; let us bring out of his storehouse things new and old, continue to feed our fellow servants, and welcome home the wanderer and then, whether the Master comes at cockcrow or at midnight, it will signify little enough to us. We shall welcome him whenever he comes, and he shall meet us with joy; for blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find him so doing.

Master Davenport of Stamford doubtless had a solid confidence in the Lord Jesus; his faith had fixed itself upon his first advent, and received the salvation which Jesus came to bring, and, therefore, delivered from all trepidation and alarm, he did not share in the general terror, nor draw inferences of alarm from the unexpected and unaccountable darkness. The heavens might fall, but he dwelt above the heavens, and in quietness and assurance was his strength. Moreover, the good man possessed a faith which manifested itself by works; his business was his religion, and religion, was his business. He believed he was called of God to sit in the legislature of Connecticut, and therefore, there he sat; he only wanted candles that he might see what he was at. He was doing what was right; and if his Master had come, he would have risen from his seat, and said, "Here I am, in the place thou would'st have me occupy." We remember once calling upon one of our members, a sister who managed her household with discretion. She was in humble circumstances, and when we stopped opposite her house she was whitening her front steps. She rose from her pail, and apologized for being found with her sleeves up; but we begged her to make no excuse, for she was doing her duty, and we earnestly hoped that when our Lord should come he would find us in the same condition. If she had known we were coming, it is just possible she would have put on her best gown, and have been waiting in the little parlor; but we should not have been one-half as charmed with her prepared appearance as with the exhibition of her every-day industry. The most fitting condition for death and for judgment, is to be diligent in the Master's business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. The times are very dark; bring in the candles, and let the house proceed with the present business. We only wish our readers to remember the words of him who so shortly shall appear: "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"PROPHESY UNTO US SMOOTH THINGS."

This has ever been the desire of worldlings and hypocrites. They do not wish to be disturbed, dishonored or disgraced. Whatever iniquities they perpetrate, they wish to keep a smooth outside, and maintain a reputation for respectability and sanctity. But there is no guise in which the devil is more dangerous than when he appears in angelic form; and if he can hush and gag the servants of the Lord, he can work his mischief at his pleasure.

To expose the deceptions and reveal the snares of the enemy, the Lord sends his servants like burning and shining lights. He bids them to "cry aloud and spare not;" he demands of them that they be honest, frank, outspoken, and determined in rebuking wrong and exposing evil.

Such men will be hated and traduced by the crafty and the designing, but their record is on high; and when the Lord appears he will bring their judgment to light. They may labor without thanks or reward in this world, but the Turkish proverb is, "Do good and throw it into the sea, and the fishes will find it."

The world has been greatly benefited by the firm and steadfast testimony of honest and courageous men, who could not be frightened, or bought, or silenced; but who have rebuked iniquities, upheld truth, and have sent forth, by voice and pen, the messages of warning and admonition which God in mercy has given to them. Theirs has been no easy lot, but their work has not been in vain, and they shall not lose their reward when he who "came not to send peace on earth, but a sword," shall come again to bring that peace which shall be abiding and eternal. —The Christian.

A TELLING INCIDENT.

A certain New England church recently became the scene of much wrangling and contention. One of the deacons had made himself obnoxious in secular affairs to several of the members, and the good brethren were determined to oust him. Nearly all the members had taken sides for or against the deacon, and the church seemed on the verge of dissolution. At one of the evening meetings in which the prayers and testimonies were of a decidedly personal nature, a venerable man of eighty arose, and told the following story:

When I was a boy, our family lived on a small farm over in York State. One day in the fall of the year, father and mother went away, and left us children to our own devices. They told us not to go away from the house but to pick over beans until we were tired, then to play quiet games in the kitchen.

It didn't take us long to get tired of picking over beans, and we soon growled ourselves hoarse playing menagerie; then by common consent, we went to the barn, and began to hunt hen's eggs. One old hen was setting, and refused to leave her nest. My brother was of an inquiring turn of mind, and very stubborn. He was determined to know how many eggs old Nancy had under her. He seized her energetically by the tail-feathers, and tried to drag her from the nest, but she picked him in the face so fiercely that he was glad to retreat. Soon a bright idea suggested itself to him, and he shouted triumphantly, "I know what I'll do, I'll burn her off." He ran to the house for a match, and we looked on admiringly while he set fire to the hay. You can readily imagine the result. We routed the hen, but we burned the barn and the house.

Now, brethren, will you persist in having your own way, and destroy the church? It seems as just though the Lord had left us to our own devices, and we aren't willing to work for him, so we find time to meddle with our neighbors. Let us pray, brethren, that we may not consume the church in fire everlasting.

The old man knelt, and the rest of the evening was passed in a real prayer meeting.—Watchman.

THE COST OF ARMIES.

A French economist, M. Neymaack, makes some calculations in the Journal des Ecomomistes touching the present cost of keeping the peace in Europe generally, the bearing of which on the great problem of poverty is obvious. They are startling enough for those who are uneasy, as many are, about the stability of our present social organization, and about the progress of communistic ideas. There is now spent annually in Europe on the maintenance of fleets and armies nearly $9,000,000,000; nearly 3,200,000 men are kept under arms, and 1,800 ships, most of them very costly, are devoted to military purposes. In this no account is taken of the loss caused by the withdrawal of these men, all in the flower of their youth, from industrial pursuits. Moreover, every European country now has an enormous debt, contracted wholly, or most wholly, for war or preparation for war, and the annual charges on this are nearly equal in amount to the annual cost of the army and navy.

For instance, England spends annually on the army and navy about $142,000,000; on the interest of the public debt $156,000,000. Italy spends $52,000,000 on her army and navy, and $71,000,000 on her debt. Russian spends $178,000,000 on her army and navy, and $160,000,000 on her debt. Aurtria spends $63,000,000 on her army and navy, and $113,000,000 on her debt. France spends $160,000,000 on her army and navy, and $150,000,000 on her debt; and so on, all through the list. The rule is, that every country spends nearly the same amount on the army and navy that it has to raise for the interest on its debt. The small States, like Denmark, Holland, and Sweden, who know that they could not keep the field for a week against any great power, run just the same rig as Germany, or France, or Russia.

If the United States kept an army on the same scale in proportion to population as Europe, taken as a whole, we should now have 500,000 men under arms, not counting reverses of any kind. If we followed the example of the great military States, we should have more nearly a million.
